‡†† tn: Some think the MT is unintelligible as it stands: “The sweetness of his friend from the counsel of the soul.” The Latin version has “the soul is sweetened by the good counsels of a friend.” D. W. Thomas suggests, “counsels of a friend make sweet the soul” (“Notes on Some Passages in the Book of Proverbs,” VT 15 [1965]: 275). G. R. Driver suggests, “the counsel of a friend is sweeter than one’s own advice” (literally, “more than the counsel of the soul”). He also suggests “more than of fragrant wood.” See G. R. Driver, “Hebrew Notes,” ZAW 52 (1934): 54; idem, “Suggestions and Objections,” ZAW 55 (1937): 69-70. The LXX reads “and the soul is rent by misfortunes.” The MT, for want of better or more convincing readings, may be interpreted to mean something like “[just as] ointment and incense brings joy to the heart, [so] the sweetness of one’s friend [comes] from his sincere counsel.” ‡† sn: The meaning of the verse is very difficult, although the translation is rather straightforward. It may simply be saying that people should retain family relationships but will discover that a friend who is available is better than a relative who is not. But C. H. Toy thinks that the verse is made up of three lines that have no connection: 10a instructs people to maintain relationships, 10b says not to go to a brother’s house [only?] when disaster strikes, and 10c observes that a nearby friend is better than a far-away relative. C. H. Toy suggests a connection may have been there, but has been lost (Proverbs [ICC], 485-86). The conflict between 17:17 and 10b may be another example of presenting two sides of the issue, a fairly frequent occurrence in the book of Proverbs. ‡† tn: Heb “my son”; the reference to a “son” is retained in the translation here because in the following lines the advice is to avoid women who are prostitutes. ‡†† tn: The verb is the cohortative of שׁוּב

‡‡† sn: The expression anyone who taunts me refers to those who would reproach or treat the sage with contempt, condemning him as a poor teacher. Teachers are often criticized for the faults and weaknesses of their students; but any teacher criticized that way takes pleasure in pointing to those who have learned as proof that he has not labored in vain (e.g., 1 Thess 2:19-20; 3:8). ‡‡‡ tn: Heb “go on”; the word “right” is supplied in the translation to clarify the meaning: The naive person, oblivious to impending danger, meets it head on. <sup>18</sup> tn: Heb “his garment.” <sup>19</sup> tn: Or “for a strange (= adulterous) woman.” Cf. KJV, ASV, NASB, NLT; NIV “a wayward woman.” <sup>20</sup> tn: This proverb is virtually identical to 20:16. <sup>21</sup> tn: The verse begins with the Piel participle from בָּרַךְ

plains the verb “bless,” giving the circumstances of its action. The individual rises early to give his blessing. 23 sn: The point of the proverb is that loud and untimely greetings are not appreciated. What was given as a “blessing” will be considered a “curse” – the two words being antonyms. The proverb makes the point that how, when, and why they say what they say is important too (D. Kidner, Proverbs [TOTC], 166). † tn: Heb “a wife of contentions” (an attributive genitive). Cf. NAB, NIV “a quarrelsome wife”; NLT “a nagging wife.” †† tn: The form <sup>הַשְׂמֵרָה</sup>

‡‡ tc: The LXX took an etymologizing approach to the whole verse and translated it “the north wind is a severe wind, but by its name is termed auspicious.” In this rendering the Hebrew text’s “oil” became “its name,” “right hand” became “auspicious,” and “grasp” became “called.” ‡‡† tn: The term “as” is not in the Hebrew text, but is supplied in the translation to clarify the comparison. ‡‡‡ tn: BDB classifies the verb in the first colon as a Qal apocopated jussive of <sup>הִשְׁמִיךְ</sup>

§ tn: Heb “and a man,” although the context does not indicate this should be limited to males only. §† tn: Heb “sharpens the face of his friend.” The use of the word “face” (cf. KJV, ASV “countenance”) would here emphasize that it is the personality or character that is being sharpened. Constructive criticism sharpens character. Use of the wits in interaction that makes two people sharp as a razor (W. McKane, Proverbs [OTL], 615); another example, from the Talmud, is that of two students sharpening each other in the study of the Torah ( b. Ta’anit 7a). §†† sn: Tending fig trees requires closer attention than other plants; so the point here would be the diligent care that is required. §‡ sn: The principle is established in the first line with the emblem: Those who faithfully serve will be rewarded in kind. The second half of the proverb makes the point from this illustration. §†† sn: The Hebrew participle translated “takes care of” ( <sup>שָׁמַר</sup> )

19 As in water the face is reflected as a face, §†
so a person’s heart§† reflects the person.
so the eyes of a person§§§ are never satisfied. <sup>18</sup> 21 As the crucible is for silver and the furnace is for gold, <sup>19</sup>
so a person<sup>20</sup> is proved<sup>21</sup> by the praise he receives. <sup>22</sup> 22 If you should pound<sup>23</sup> the fool in the mortar among the grain<sup>24</sup> with the pestle, his foolishness would not depart from him. <sup>25</sup>

§† tn: The verse is somewhat cryptic and so has prompted many readings. The first line in the MT has “As water the face to the face.” The simplest and most probable interpretation is that clear water gives a reflection of the face (cf. NASB, NIV, NRSV, NLT). One creative but unconvincing suggestion is that of L. Kopf, who suggests the idea is “water of face” (a construct) and that it means shame or modesty, i.e., a face is not really human without shame, and a man without a heart is not human (“Arabische Etymologien und Parallelen zum Bibelwörterbuch,” VT 9 [1959]: 260-61). §‡ tn: The second line has “so the heart of a man to a man” (cf. KJV, ASV). The present translation (along with many English versions) supplies “reflects” as a verb in the second line to emphasize the parallelism. sn: In the parallelism this statement means that a person’s heart is the true reflection of that person. It is in looking at the heart, the will, the choices, the loves, the decisions, the attitudes, that people come to self-awareness. §§† tn: The term “as” is not in the Hebrew text, but is supplied in the translation in light of the analogy. §§‡ sn: Countless generations of people have gone into the world below; yet “death” is never satisfied – it always takes more. The line personifies Death and Destruction. It forms the emblem in the parallelism. §§§ tn: Heb “eyes of a man.” This expression refers to the desires – what the individual looks longingly on. Ecclesiastes Rabbah 1:34 (one of the rabbinic Midrashim) says, “No man dies and has one-half of what he wanted.” <sup>18</sup> tc: The LXX contains a scribal addition: “He who fixes his eye is an abomination to the LORD

<sup>19</sup> sn: Once again this proverb uses emblematic parallelism. The crucible and the furnace are used to refine and thus reveal the pure metals. The analogy is that praise will reveal the person because others will examine and evaluate what an individual has done in order to make the public acclamation. <sup>20</sup> tn: Heb “and a man,” but the context does not indicate this is limited only to males. <sup>21</sup> tn: The verb “is proved” was supplied in the translation in view of the analogy. Many English versions supply “tested” for the same reason. sn: The proverb is saying that public praise is usually a good measure of the qualities and contributions of a person. The other side of it is that righteousness is often denounced, but the proverb is not addressing everything that people say. <sup>22</sup> tn: Heb “by [the] praise of him.” The pronominal suffix is an objective genitive, meaning “the praise about him” (= “the praise he receives”). Some commentators would take the suffix as a subjective genitive, meaning “the praise he gives”; this would mean people stand revealed by what they praise (D. Kidner, Proverbs [TOTC], 168). That does not seem to work as well with the emblem of the first line which indicates being tested. The LXX adds a couplet: “The heart of the transgressor seeks evil; but the upright heart seeks knowledge.” <sup>23</sup> tn: The verb means “to pound” in a mortar with a pestle (cf. NRSV “Crush”; NLT “grind”). The imperfect is in a conditional clause, an unreal, hypothetical condition to make the point. <sup>24</sup> tn: The Hebrew term <sup>יָפֹת</sup>

and pestle from the verse. Using the analogy of pounding something in a mortar, the proverb is saying even if a fool was pounded or pulverized, meaning severe physical punishment, his folly would not leave him – it is too ingrained in his nature. † tn: The sentence uses the infinitive absolute and the imperfect from נָטַע

†† tn: Heb “the faces of your flock.” ‡ tn: The idiom is “place [it on] your heart” or “take to heart.” Cf. NLT “put your heart into.” sn: The care of the flock must become the main focus of the will, for it is the livelihood. So v. 23 forms the main instruction of this lengthy proverb (vv. 23-27). ‡† tn: Heb “riches are not forever” (so KJV, NASB); TEV “wealth is not permanent.” The term “last” is supplied in the translation for clarity. ‡‡ tn: The conjunction and the particle indicate that the same nuance continues here in the second colon, and so “last” has been supplied here as well. ‡‡† sn: Verse 25 is the protasis and v. 26 the apodosis. The two verses say that when the harvest is taken in, then the grass will grow, and they can sell and use their livestock. The lambs will provide clothing, and the goats when sold will pay for land. ‡‡‡ sn: This part of the proverb shows the proper interplay between human labor and divine provision. It teaches people to take care of what they have because it will not last forever. § tn: Heb “life”; KJV, NAB “maintenance”; NRSV “nourishment.” §† sn: The line portrays the insecurity of a guilty person – he flees because he has a guilty conscience, or because he is suspicious of others around him, or because he fears judgment. §†† tn: The verb נָטַע

§‡ sn: The Hebrew word translated “rebellious” has rebellion as its basic meaning, and that is the idea here. The proverb is describing a time when sinfulness brings about social and political unrest. §†† tn: Heb “many are its princes” (so NASB). sn: In such a chaotic time there will be many rulers, either simultaneously or in a rapid sequence. The times of the judges or the days of the northern kings of Israel provide examples. §† tn: Heb “a man who understands [and] knows”; NRSV “an intelligent ruler”; NLT “wise and knowledgeable leaders.” §‡ tc: The LXX reads (probably from a different underlying Hebrew text): “It is the fault of a violent man that quarrels start, but they are settled by a man of discernment.” For a survey of suggestions, see C. H. Toy, Proverbs (ICC), 495, and W. McKane, Proverbs (OTL), 630. tn: This last line is difficult.

The MT has קִנְיֵי אֲרִיךְ קִנְיֵי

קִנְיֵי

§§† tc: The MT reads “a poor man,” אֲרִיךְ קִנְיֵי

קִשְׁעַ

§§‡ tn: The comparative “like” does not appear in the Hebrew text, but is implied by the metaphor; it is supplied in the translation for the sake of clarity. §§§ sn: “Food” is a metonymy of effect here. The picture is of the driving rain that should cause crops to grow so that food can be produced – but does not (some English versions assume the crops are destroyed instead, e.g., NCV, TEV, CEV, NLT). The point the proverb is making is that a show of strength may not produce anything except ruin. 18 sn: Some commentators do not think that the word refers to the Mosaic law, but to “instruction” or “teaching” in general (cf. NCV “who disobey what they have been taught”). However, the expression “keep the law” in the second line indicates that it is binding, which would not be true of teaching in general (J. Bright, “The Apodictic Prohibition: Some Observations,” JBL 92 [1973]: 185-204). Moreover, Proverbs 28:9 and 29:18 refer to the law, and this chapter has a stress on piety. 19 sn: The proverb gives the outcome and the evidence of those who forsake the law – they “praise the wicked.” This may mean (1) calling the wicked good or (2) justifying what the wicked do, for such people are no longer sensitive to evil. 20 tn: The verb is the Hitpael imperfect of קָנַע

21 tn: Heb “men of evil”; the context does not limit this to males only, however. 22 tn: The term translated “justice” is מִשְׁפָּט

23 sn: The contrast (and the difference) is between the wicked and those who seek the LORD

24 sn: This chapter gives a lot of attention to the contrast between the poor and the rich, assuming an integrity for the poor that is not present with the rich; the subject is addressed in vv. 6, 8, 11, 20, 22, 25, and 27 (G. A. Chutter, “Riches and Poverty in the Book of Proverbs,” Crux 18 [1982]: 23-28). 25 tn: The Hebrew term translated “ways” is in the dual, suggesting that the person has double ways, i.e., he is hypocritical. C. H. Toy does not like this idea and changes the form to the plural ( Proverbs

7 The one who keeps the law† is a discerning child, †† but a companion of gluttons brings shame‡ to his parents. ††

8 The one who increases his wealth by increasing interest‡‡ gathers it for someone who is gracious‡‡‡ to the needy.

9 The one who turns away his ear‡‡‡ from hearing the law, even his prayer‡ is an abomination. ‡†

10 The one who leads the upright astray in an evil way will himself fall into his own pit, ‡†† but the blameless will inherit what is good. ‡‡

11 A rich person‡‡† is wise in his own eyes, ‡†

[ICC], 497), but his emendation is gratuitous and should be rejected. 26 tn: Heb "and he is rich." Many English versions treat this as a concessive clause (cf. KJV "though he be rich"). 27 sn: This is another "better" saying, contrasting a poor person who has integrity with a rich person who is perverse. Of course there are rich people with integrity and perverse poor people, but that is not of interest here. If it came to the choices described here, honest poverty is better than corrupt wealth. † tn: The Hebrew word could refer (1) to "instruction" by the father (cf. NCV) or (2) the Mosaic law (so most English versions). The chapter seems to be stressing religious obedience, so the referent is probably the law. Besides, the father's teaching will be what the law demands, and the one who associates with gluttons is not abiding by the law. †† tn: Heb "son," but the immediate context does not suggest limiting this only to male children. ‡ sn: The companion of gluttons shames his father and his family because such a life style as he now embraces is both unruly and antisocial. †† tn: Heb "father," but the immediate context does not suggest limiting this only to the male parent. ‡‡ tn: Heb "by interest and increase" (so ASV; NASB "by interest and usury"; NAB "by interest and overcharge." The two words seem to be synonyms; they probably form a nominal hendiadys, meaning "by increasing [exorbitant] interest." The law prohibited making a commission or charging interest ( Exod 22:25; Lev 25:36-37; Deut 23:20; Ps 15:5). If the poor needed help, the rich were to help them – but not charge them interest. ‡‡† tn: The term מִן־חֵן

‡‡‡ sn: The expression "turn away the ear from hearing" uses a metonymy to mean that this individual will not listen – it indicates a deliberate refusal to follow the instruction of the law. ‡ sn: It is hard to imagine how someone who willfully refuses to obey the law of God would pray according to the will of God. Such a person is more apt to pray for some physical thing or make demands on God. (Of course a prayer of repentance would be an exception and would not be an abomination to the LORD ‡† sn: C. H. Toy says, "If a man, on his part, is deaf to instruction, then God, on his part, is deaf to prayer" ( Proverbs [ICC], 499). And W. McKane observes that one who fails to attend to God's law is a wicked person, even if he is a man of prayer ( Proverbs [OTL], 623). ‡†† sn: The image of falling into a pit (a figure of speech known as hypocatastasis, involving implied comparison) is meant to say that the evil to which he guides people will ultimately destroy him. ‡‡ sn: This proverb is teaching that those who corrupt others will be destroyed, usually by their own devices, but those who manage to avoid being corrupted will be rewarded. According to this proverb the righteous can be led astray (e.g., 26:27). ‡†† tn: Heb "a rich man," although the context does not indicate that this is limited only to males. ‡† sn: The idiom "in his own eyes" means "in his own opinion," that is, his self conceit. The rich person thinks he is wise because he is rich, that he has made all the right choices.

but a discerning poor person can evaluate him properly. ‡†

12 When the righteous rejoice, ‡‡† great is the glory, ‡‡† but when the wicked rise to power, people are sought out. ‡‡‡

18 tn: The Hebrew participles provide the subject matter in this contrast. On the one hand is the person who covers over ( מִן־חֵן

מִן־חֵן

19 sn: The verse contrasts the consequences of each. The person who refuses to confess will not prosper. This is an understatement (a figure of speech known as tapeinosis); the opposite is the truth, that eventually such a person will be undone and ruined. On the other hand, the penitent will find mercy. This expression is a metonymy of cause for the effect – although "mercy" is mentioned, what mercy provides is intended, i.e., forgiveness. In other passages the verb "conceal" is used of God's forgiveness – he covers over the iniquity ( Ps 32:1). Whoever acknowledges sin, God will cover it; whoever covers it, God will lay it open. <sup>20</sup> sn: This verse is unique in the book of Proverbs; it captures the theology of forgiveness (e.g., Pss 32 and 51). Every part of the passage is essential to the point: Confession of sins as opposed to concealing them, coupled with a turning away from them, results in mercy. <sup>21</sup> tn: Most commentators (and some English versions, e.g., NIV) assume that the participle מִן־חֵן

 let no one support him.
 18 The one who walks blamelessly will be delivered,§†† but whoever is perverse in his ways will fall§† at once.

† sn: The one who “hardens his heart” in this context is the person who refuses to fear sin and its consequences. The image of the “hard heart” is one of a stubborn will, unyielding and unbending (cf. NCV, TEV, NLT). This individual will fall into sin. †† tn: The term “like” is not in the Hebrew text, but is supplied in the translation for clarity and smoothness. ‡ sn: The comparison uses animals that are powerful, terrifying, insensitive, and in search of prey. Because political tyrants are like this, animal imagery of this sort is also used in Dan 7:1-8 for the series of ruthless world powers. †† sn: A poor nation under the control of political tyrants who are dangerous and destructive is helpless. The people of that nation will crumble under them because they cannot meet their demands and are of no use to them. ‡‡ tn: Heb “A prince lacking of understanding [is] also a great oppressor” (both KJV, ASV similar) The last clause, “and a great oppressor,” appears to modify “the prince.” There is little difference in meaning, only in emphasis. The LXX has “lacks income” (reading תבואות תבונות)

‡‡† tc: This follows the Qere reading of the participle which is singular (as opposed to the plural). The implication is that this one is also a ruler, paralleling the first half. But since he “hates” (= rejects) unjust gain he will extend [his] days, meaning he will enjoy a long and happy life (cf. NIV, NRSV, CEV). ‡‡† tn: The form is the Qal passive participle. The verb means “to oppress; to wrong; to extort”; here the idea of being “oppressed” would refer to the burden of a guilty conscience (hence “tormented”; cf. NAB, NRSV “burdened”). Some commentators have wanted to emend the text to read “suspected,” or “charged with,” or “given to,” etc., but if the motive is religious and not legal, then “oppressed” or “tormented” is preferred. § sn: The text has “the blood of a life”; blood will be the metonymy of effect for the murder, the shedding of blood. §† tn: The verse is cryptic; it simply says that he will “flee to the pit.” Some have taken the “pit” to refer to the place of detention for prisoners, but why would he flee to that place? It seems rather to refer to death. This could mean that (1) since there is no place for him to go outside of the grave, he should flee to the pit (cf. TEV, NLT), or (2) he will be a fugitive until he goes to the grave (cf. NASB, NIV, NCV, NRSV, CEV). Neither one of these options is easily derived from the text. The verse seems to be saying that the one who is guilty of murder will flee, and no one should assist him. The meaning of “the pit” is unresolved. §†† tn: The form is the Niphal imperfect of עָשָׂה

§† tn: The Qal imperfect פֹּלֵל

בְּאֵתָהּ

§† tn: Or “will have plenty of food” ( Heb “bread”); so NAB, NASB, NCV. §† tn: Heb “empty things” or “vain things”; NRSV “follows worthless pursuits.” sn: Prosperity depends on diligent work and not on chasing empty dreams. The proverb is essentially the same as Prov 12:11 except for the last expression. §§† tn: The repetition of the verb strengthens the contrast. Both halves of the verse use the verb עָשָׂה

§§† tn: Heb “a man of faithfulness,” although the context does not indicate this should be limited only to males. sn: The text does not qualify the nature of the faithfulness. While this would certainly have implications for the person’s righteous acts, its primary meaning may be his diligence and reliability in his work. His faithful work will bring the returns. §§§ sn: The proverb is not rebuking diligent labor. One who is eager to get rich quickly is the opposite of the faithful person. The first person is faithful to God and to the covenant community; the second is trying to get rich as quickly as possible, at the least without doing an honest day’s work and at the worst dishonestly. In a hurry to gain wealth, he falls into various schemes and will pay for it. Tg. Prov 28:20 interprets this to say he hastens through deceit and wrongdoing. 18 tn: The construction uses the Hiphil infinitive הִכָּר

19 tn: Heb “not good.” This is a figure of speech known as tapeinosis – a deliberate understatement to emphasize a worst-case scenario: “it is terrible!” 20 tn: The meaning and connection of the line is not readily clear. It could be taken in one of two ways: (1) a person can steal even a small piece of bread if hungry, and so the court should show some compassion, or it should show no partiality even in such a pathetic case; (2) a person could be bribed for a very small price (a small piece of bread being the figure representing this). This second view harmonizes best with the law. 21 tn: Heb “a man with an evil eye” (as opposed to the generous man who has a “good” eye). This individual is selfish, unkind, unsympathetic to others. He looks only to his own gain. Cf. NAB “The avaricious man”; NLT “A greedy person.” 22 sn: The one who is hasty to gain wealth is involved in sin in some way, for which he will be punished by poverty. The idea of “hastening” after riches suggests a dishonest approach to acquiring wealth. 23 tn: Or “rebukes” (NAB, NASB, NIV, NRSV). 24 tn: Heb “a man,” but the context does not indicate this should be limited only to males. 25 tn: There is a problem with אָגַד

 24 The one who robs†† his father and mother and says, "There is no transgression," is a companion‡ to the one†† who destroys.
 26 The one who trusts in his own heart§† is a fool, but the one who walks in wisdom§†† will escape. §‡
 27 The one who gives to the poor will not lack, §†† but whoever shuts his eyes to them§† will receive §‡ many curses. §§†

† tn: The construction uses the Hiphil participle מְדַלֵּיק

†† sn: While the expression is general enough to cover any kind of robbery, the point seems to be that because it can be rationalized it may refer to prematurely trying to gain control of the family property through some form of pressure and in the process reducing the parents' possessions and standing in the community. The culprit could claim what he does is not wrong because the estate would be his anyway. ‡ sn: The metaphor of "companion" here means that a person who would do this is just like the criminally destructive person. It is as if they were working together, for the results are the same. ‡† tn: Heb "man who destroys" (so NASB); TEV "no better than a common thief." ‡‡ tn: Heb "wide of soul." This is an idiom meaning "a greedy person." The term שָׂדֵן

Toy says it means to follow the untrained suggestions of the mind or to rely on one's own mental resources ( Proverbs [ICC], 505). It is arrogant to take no counsel but to rely only on one's own intelligence. §†† sn: The idiom of "walking in wisdom" means to live life according to the acquired skill and knowledge passed on from the sages. It is the wisdom from above that the book of Proverbs presents, not the undisciplined and uninformed wit and wisdom from below. §‡ tn: The verb form יִמְלֹט

§†† sn: The generous individual will be rewarded. He will not lack nor miss what he has given away to the poor. §† tn: Heb "hides his eyes"; "to them" is supplied in the translation to indicate the link with the poor in the preceding line. Hiding or closing the eyes is a metonymy of cause or of adjunct, indicating a decision not to look on and thereby help the poor. It could also be taken as an implied comparison, i.e., not helping the poor is like closing the eyes to them. §‡ tn: The term "receives" is not in the Hebrew text but is implied, and is supplied in the translation. §§† sn: The text does not specify the nature or the source of the curses. Cf. TEV "come to power"; NLT "take charge." sn: The proverb is essentially the same as 28:12 (e.g., Prov 11:10; 29:2, 16). It refers to the wicked "rising to power" in government. §§§ tn: Heb "a man" or "mankind" in a generic sense. 18 tn: The form is the Niphal imperfect of יָתַר

19 tn: The two clauses have parallel constructions: They both begin with infinitives construct with prepositions functioning as temporal clauses, followed by subjective genitives (first the wicked, and then the pronoun referring to them). Wealth was seen as a sign of success and of God's blessings, pretty much as it always has been. To be seen as honorable in the community meant one had acquired some substance and kept his reputation. It would be a disgrace to the family to have a son who squandered his money on prostitutes (e.g., Prov 5:10; 6:31). 31 tn: The form is the Hiphil imperfect of the verb עָמַד

†† tn: Heb "a man," but the context here does not suggest that the proverb refers to males only. ‡ tn: The form is the Hiphil participle, literally "deals smoothly," i.e., smoothing over things that should be brought to one's attention. sn: The flatterer is too smooth; his words are intended to gratify. In this proverb some malice is attached to the flattery, for the words prove to be destructive. ‡† sn: The image of "spreading a net" for someone's steps is an implied comparison (a figure of speech known as hypocatastasis): As one would literally spread a net, this individual's flattery will come back to destroy him. A net would be spread to catch the prey, and so the idea is one of being caught and destroyed. ‡‡ tn: There is some ambiguity concerning the referent of "his steps." The net could be spread for the one flattered (cf. NRSV, "a net for the neighbor's feet"; NLT, "their feet," referring to others), or for the flatterer himself (cf. TEV "you set a trap for yourself"). The latter idea would make the verse more powerful: In flattering someone the flatterer is getting himself into a trap (e.g., 2:16; 7:5; 26:28; 28:23). ‡‡† tn: The Syriac and Tg. Prov 29:6 simplify the meaning by writing it with a passive verb: "the evil man is ensnared by his guilt." The metaphor of the snare indicates that the evil person will be caught in his own transgression. ‡‡‡ tc: The two verbs create some difficulty because the book of Proverbs does not usually duplicate verbs like this and because the first verb יָרַן

18 tn: Heb "and he is angry and he laughs." The construction uses the conjunctive vav to express alternate actions: "whether...or." <sup>19</sup> tn: Heb "men of bloods." The Hebrew word for "blood" is written in the plural to reflect the shedding of blood. So the expression "men of bloods" means people who shed blood – murderers, bloodthirsty men, or those who would not hesitate to commit murder in order to get what they want. <sup>20</sup> sn: The Hebrew word describes the "blameless" or "innocent" who maintain integrity. The bloodthirsty despise people who insist on decency and integrity. <sup>21</sup> tn: Heb "and the upright seek his life." There are two ways this second line can be taken. (1) One can see it as a continuation of the first line, meaning that the bloodthirsty men also "seek the life of the upright" (cf. NIV, NRSV). The difficulty is that the suffix is singular but the apparent referent is plural. (2) One can take it as a contrast: "but as for the upright, they seek his life" – a fairly straightforward rendering (cf. ASV). The difficulty here is that "seeking a life" is normally a hostile act, but it would here be positive: "seeking" a life to preserve it. The verse would then say that the bloodthirsty hate the innocent, but the righteous protect them (W. McKane, Proverbs [OTL], 637; cf. NAB, NASB, TEV). <sup>22</sup> tn: Heb "his spirit." It has been commonly interpreted to mean "his anger" (ASV, NAB, NIV, NRSV), but it proba-cause, in which the instrument being used to discipline is menpression refers to the process of discipline that is designed to correct someone. Some understand the words "rod and reproof" to form a hendiadys, meaning "a correcting [or, reproving] rod" (cf.

 lated "brings shame" is a metonymy of effect; the cause is the unruly and foolish things that an unrestrained child will do. ††† sn:
 The focus on the mother is probably a rhetorical variation for the "parent" (e.g., 17:21; 23:24-25) and is not meant to assume that only the mother will do the training and endure the shame for a case like this (e.g., 13:24; 23:13). ††† tn: The verb אָחֹר

§§§ sn: The Hebrew
 verb translated "see" in this context indicates a triumph: The righteous will gaze with satisfaction, or they will look on the downfall of the wicked triumphantly (e.g., Pss 37:4 and 112:8). The verse is teaching that no matter how widespread evil may be, the righteous will someday see its destruction. 18 tn: The verb, a Hiphil imperfect with a suffix, could be subordinated to the preceding imperative to form a purpose clause (indirect volitive classification): "that he may give you rest." The same then could apply to the second part of the verse. 19 tn: Heb "your soul." The noun אָחֹר

20 sn:
 The parallelism of this verse is synthetic; the second half adds the idea of "delight/pleasure" to that of "rest." So a disciplined child will both relieve anxiety ("give...rest") and bring happiness to the parents. 21 tn: Heb "no vision." The Hebrew word "vision" (from the 23 sn: The law here refers to scripture, the concrete form of revelation. So the two halves of the verse pro-chaos, but those who keep the revelation contained in scripture find

 English versions to translate אָחֹר

25 sn: Servants could not be corrected by mere words;
 they had to be treated like children for they were frequently unresponsive. This, of course, would apply to certain kinds of servants.
 The Greek version translated this as "a stubborn servant." 26 tn:
 The Niphal imperfect here is best rendered as a potential imperfect
 - "cannot be corrected." The second line of the verse clarifies that for although† he understands, there is no answer. ††

even though the servant understands the words, he does not respond. It will take more. † tn: Heb "for he understands, but there is no answer." The concessive idea ("although") is taken from the juxtaposition of the two parts. †† sn: To say "there is no answer" means that this servant does not obey - he has to be trained in a different way. ‡ tn: Heb "a man," but there is no indication in the immediate context that this should be limited only to males. ‡† sn: The focus of this proverb is on someone who is hasty in his words. This is the person who does not stop to think, but acts on the spur of the moment. To speak before thinking is foolishness. ‡‡ sn: Rash speech cannot easily be remedied. The prospects for a fool are better (e.g., Prov 26:12). ‡‡† tn: There is no conditional particle at the beginning of the verse; however, the relationship of the clauses, which lay down the condition first and then (with a vav) the consequences, indicates a conditional construction here. ASV "a wrathful man"; KJV "a furious man"). §†† tn: Heb "an abundance of transgression." The phrase means "abounding in transgression" (BDB 913 s.v. גַּבַּח)

tn: Heb "hates his soul." The accomplice is working against himself, for he will be punished along with the thief if he is caught. §§‡ tn: Heb "oath" or "imprecation"; ASV "adjuration." This amounted to an "oath" or "curse" (cf. NAB "he hears himself put under a curse"; NRSV "one hears the victim's curse") either by or on behalf of the victim, that any witness to the crime must testify (cf. Lev 5:1). However, in this legal setting referring to "a victim's curse" could be misleading (cf. also KJV "he heareth cursing"), since it could be understood to refer to profanity directed against those guilty of the crime rather than an imprecation called down on a witness who refused to testify (as in the present proverb). The present translation specifies this as an "oath to testify." sn: The oath to testify was not an oath to tell the truth before a court of law in the modern sense. Instead it was a "curse" or "imprecation" expressed by the victim of the theft, or by the legal authorities, called down on any witness of the crime who kept silent or refused to testify (as here). According to Lev 5:1, if a witness does not speak up he is accountable for the crime. This person hears the adjuration, but if he speaks up he is condemned, and if he does not speak up he is guilty under the law. The proverb is an unusual one; it seems to be warning against getting mixed up in any way with the thief, for it will create a serious ethical dilemma. §§§ tn: Heb "the fear of man." This uses an objective genitive to describe a situation where fearing what people might do or think controls one's life. There is no indication in the immediate context that this should be limited only to males, so the translation uses the more generic "people" here. <sup>18</sup> tn: Heb "gives [or yields, or produces]"; NIV "will prove to be." <sup>19</sup> sn: "Snare" is an implied comparison; fearing people is like being in a trap - there is no freedom of movement or sense of security. <sup>20</sup> sn: The image of being set on high comes from the military experience of finding a defensible position, a place of safety and security, such as a high wall or a mountain. Each is troublesome to the beliefs and the activities of the other. <sup>24</sup> sn: This chapter has a title ( 30:1), Agur's confession and petition ( 30:2-9), and a series of Agur's admonitions ( 30:10-33). <sup>25</sup> tn: The title אֲשֶׁר

† tn: There have been numerous attempts to reinterpret the first two verses of the chapter. The Greek version translated the names "Ithiel" and "Ukal," resulting in "I am weary, O God, I am weary and faint" (C. C. Torrey, "Proverbs Chapter 30," JBL 73 [1954]: 93-96). The LXX's approach is followed by some English versions (e.g., NRSV, NLT). The Midrash tried through a clever etymologizing translation to attribute the works to Solomon (explained by W. G. Plaut, Proverbs, 299). It is most likely that someone other than Solomon wrote these sayings; they have a different, almost non-proverbial, tone to them. See P. Franklyn, "The Sayings of Agur in Proverbs 30: Piety or Skepticism," ZAW 95 (1983): 239-52. †† tn: The particle כִּי

‡ tn: The noun בְּעַר

מְאִיֵּשׁ

†† tn: Heb "than man." The verse is using hyperbole; this individual feels as if he has no intelligence at all, that he is more brutish than any other human. Of course this is not true, or he would not be able to speculate on the God of the universe at all. ‡‡ tn: Heb "the understanding of a man," with "man" used attributively here. ‡‡‡ sn: The construction uses repetition to make the point emphatically: "I do not know the knowledge of the Holy One." Agur's claim to being "brutish" is here clarified – he is not one of those who has knowledge or understanding of God. C. H. Toy thinks the speaker is being sarcastic in reference to others who may have claimed such knowledge ( Proverbs [ICC], 521). ‡‡‡ tn: The epithet "the Holy One" is the adjective "holy" put in the masculine plural (as in 9:10). This will harmonize with the plural of majesty used to explain the plural with titles for God. However, NRSV takes the plural as a reference to the "holy ones," presumably referring to angelic beings. § sn: To make his point Agur includes five questions. These, like Job 38–41, or Proverbs 8:24-29, focus on the divine acts to show that it is absurd for a mere mortal to think that he can explain God's work or compare himself to God. These questions display mankind's limitations and God's incomparable nature. The first question could be open to include humans, but may refer to God alone (as the other questions do). §† sn: The questions are filled with anthropomorphic language. The questioner is asking what humans have ever done this, but the meaning is that only God has done this. "Gathering the wind in his fists" is a way of expressing absolute sovereign control over the forces of nature. §†† sn: The question is comparing the clouds of the heavens to garments (e.g., Job 26:8). T. T. Perowne writes, "Men bind up water in skins or bottles; God binds up the rain-floods in the thin, gauzy texture of the changing clouds, which yet by his power does not rend under its burden of waters." §‡ sn: The ends of the earth is an expression often used in scripture as a metonymy of subject referring to the people who live in the ends of the earth, the far off and remote lands and islands. While that is possible here as well, this may simply be a synecdoche saying that God created the whole world, even the most remote and distant places.

5 Every word of God is purified; §‡†
he is like§† a shield for those who take refuge in him.

8 Remove falsehood and lies<sup>18</sup> far from me;
do not give me poverty or riches, feed me with my allotted portion<sup>19</sup> of bread,<sup>20</sup> 9 lest I become satisfied and act deceptively<sup>21</sup> and say, "Who is the LORD?"
Or lest I become poor and steal and demean<sup>22</sup> the name of my God.

§‡† sn: The reference to "son" in this passage has prompted many suggestions down through the years: It was identified as Israel in the Jewish Midrashim, the Logos or demiurge by some of the philosophers and allegorical writers, as simple poetic parallelism without a separate identity by some critical scholars, and as Jesus by Christian commentators. Parallels with Ugaritic are interesting, because Baal is referred to as a son; but that is bound up within the pantheon where there was a father god. Some of the Jewish commentators exhibit a strange logic in expressing what Christians would say is only their blindness to the full revelation: There is little cogency in this being a reference to Jesus because if there had been such a person at any time in the past he would have left some tradition about it through his descendants (J. H. Greenstone, Proverbs, 317). But Judaism has taught from the earliest times that Messiah was preexistent (especially in view of Micah 5 and Daniel 7); and the claims of Jesus in the Gospels bear this out. It seems best to say that there is a hint here of the nature of the Messiah as Son, a hint that will later be revealed in full through the incarnation. §† sn: The text here uses an implied comparison (a figure of speech known as hypocatastasis): It compares the perfection of every word from God with some precious metal that has been refined and purified (e.g., Ps 12:6). The point is that God's word is trustworthy; it has no defects and flaws, nothing false or misleading. The second half of the verse explains the significance of this point – it is safe to trust the LORD §‡† tn: The comparative "like" does not appear in the Hebrew text, but is implied by the metaphor; it is supplied in the translation for the sake of clarity. §‡† sn: The line uses two more figures of speech to declare that God can be trusted for security and salvation. "Shield" is a simple metaphor – God protects. "Take refuge" is another implied comparison (hypocatastasis) – God provides spiritual rest and security for those who put their trust in him. §‡‡ tn: The form of the verb is a Niphal perfect tense with a vav consecutive from the root יָצַד

20 tn: The word

נָחַךְ

21 sn: Agur requested an honest life (not deceitful) and a balanced life (not self-sufficient). The second request about his provision is clarified in v. 9. 22 tn: The verb שָׁחַךְ

10 Do not slander† a servant to his master, lest he curse you, and you are found guilty. †† 11 There is a generation‡ who curse their fathers and do not bless their mothers. ‡† 12 There is a generation who are pure in their own eyes
and yet are not washed‡‡ from their filthiness. ‡‡† 13 There is a generation whose eyes are so lofty,‡‡‡
and whose eyelids are lifted up disdainfully. § 14 There is a generation whose teeth are like§† swords
and whose molars§‡ are like knives

† tn: The Hebrew verb literally means "to take hold of; to seize"; this produces the idea of doing violence to the reputation of God. †† tn: The form תִּלְשֹׁן לֶאֱלֵךְ

‡ tn: If what was said were true, then there would be no culpability. But the implication here is that it was slander. And the effect of that will be a curse – the person who is the target of the slander will "curse" the person who slandered him (לִלְזֹךְ)

וּשְׁמֵךְ

‡† sn: The next four verses all start with the Hebrew expression translated "There is a generation." This is a series of denunciations of things that are dangerous in society without mentioning specific punishments or proscriptions. The word "generation" as used in this passage refers to a class or group of people. ‡‡ sn: The first observation is that there is a segment in society that lacks respect for parents. This uses the antonyms "curse" and [not] "bless" to make the point. To "curse" a parent could include treating them lightly, defaming them, or showing disrespect in general. To "bless" would mean to honor, respect, or enrich in some way, which is what should be done (e.g., Exod 21:17; Prov 20:20). ‡‡† tn: The verb חָזַק

טְהוֹרֵךְ

‡‡‡ sn: Filthiness often refers to physical uncleanness, but here it refers to moral defilement. Zech 3:3-4 uses it metaphorically as well for the sin of the nation (e.g., Isa 36:12). § tn: Heb "how high are its eyes!" This is a use of the interrogative pronoun in exclamatory sentences (R. J. Williams, Hebrew Syntax, 25, §127). §† tn: Heb "its eyelids are lifted up," a gesture indicating arrogance and contempt or disdain for others. To make this clear, the present translation supplies the adverb "disdainfully" at the end of the verse. sn: The verbs "to be high" (translated "are...lofty") and "to be lifted up" depict arrogance and disdain for others. The emphasis on the eyes and eyelids (parasyonyms in poetry) is employed because the glance, the look, is the immediate evidence of contempt for others (e.g., also 6:17 and Ps 131:1). §†† tn: The comparative "like" does not appear in the Hebrew text, but is implied by the metaphor; it is supplied in the translation for the sake of clarity. §‡ sn: There are two figures used in each of these lines: teeth/great teeth and "swords/knives." The term "teeth" is a metonymy for the process of chewing and eating. This goes with the figure of the second half of the verse that speaks about "devouring" the poor – so the whole image of eating and chewing refers to destroying the poor (an implied comparison). The figures of "swords/knives" are metaphors within this image. Comparing teeth to swords means that they are sharp and powerful. The imagery captures the rapacity of their power. §†† tn: Heb "teeth" (so NRSV) or "jaw teeth" (so KJV, ASV, NASB) or perhaps "jawbone." This is a different Hebrew word for "teeth" than the one in the previous line; if it refers to "jaw teeth" then a translation like "molars" would be appropriate, although this image might not fit with the metaphor ("like knives") unless the other teeth, the incisors or front teeth, are pictured as being even longer ("like swords"). §† tn: The Hebrew form לִכְאֵלֶךְ

to devour§†† the poor from the earth and the needy from among the human race.
15 The leech§† has two daughters : §† land that is not satisfied with water, and fire that never says, "Enough!" 20

§†† tn: The Hebrew form לִכְאֵלֶךְ

§‡ sn:

The next two verses describe insatiable things, things that are problematic to normal life. The meaning of v. 15a and its relationship to 15b is debated. But the "leech" seems to have been selected to begin the section because it was symbolic of greed – it sucks blood through its two suckers. This may be what the reference to two daughters calling "Give! Give!" might signify (if so, this is an implied comparison, a figure known as hypocatastasis). §§† sn: As one might expect, there have been various attempts to identify the "two daughters." In the Rabbinic literature some identified Alukah (the "leech") with Sheol, and the two daughters with paradise and hell, one claiming the righteous and the other the unrighteous; others identified Alukah with Gehenna, and the two daughters with heresy and government, neither of which is ever satisfied ( Midrash Tehillim quoted by Rashi, a Jewish scholar who lived A.D.

§§‡ tn: The two imperatives הַב הַב וְהַב

§§§ sn: There is a noticeable rhetorical sequence here: two daughters, three things, four (see W. M. Roth, "The Numerical Sequence x / x + 1 in the Old Testament," VT 12 [1962]: 300-311, and "Numerical Sayings in the Old Testament," VT 13 [1965]: 86). W. McKane thinks the series builds to a climax with the four, and in the four the barren woman is the focal point, the other three being metaphors for her sexual desire ( Proverbs [OTL], 656). This interpretation is a minority view, however, and has not won widespread support. 18 tn: Throughout the book of Proverbs הַב 20 tn: Heb "the closing of the womb," a situation especially troubling for one who is consumed with a desire for children (e.g., Gen 16:2; 30:1).

17 The eye† that mocks at a father and despises obeying†† a mother –
the ravens of the valley will peck it out and the young vultures will eat it. ‡ 18 There are three things that are too wonderful for me, ††
four that I do not understand:
19 the way‡‡ of an eagle in the sky,
the way of a snake on a rock,
the way of a ship in the sea,
and the way of a man with a woman. †††

† sn: There is no clear lesson made from these observations. But one point that could be made is that greed, symbolized by the leech, is as insatiable as all these other things. If that is the case, the proverb would constitute a warning against the insatiable nature of greed. †† sn: The “eye” as the organ that exhibits the inner feelings most clearly, here represents a look of scorn or disdain that speaks volumes (a metonymy of cause or of adjunct). It is comparable to the “evil eye” which is stinginess ( 28:22). ‡ tn: The Hebrew word לִיקְוֹת

לִיקְוֹת ††

sn: The sternest punishment is for the evil eye. The punishment is talionic – eye for eye. The reference to “the valley” may indicate a place where people are not to be given decent burials and the birds of prey pick the corpses clean. It is an image the prophets use in judgment passages. †† tn: The form אֶלְפָּא

‡‡† sn: It is difficult to know for certain what these four things had in common for the sage. They are all linked by the word “way” (meaning “a course of action”) and by a sense of mystery in each area. Suggestions for the connections between the four include: (1) all four things are hidden from continued observation, for they are in majestic form and then gone; (2) they all have a mysterious means of propulsion or motivation; (3) they all describe the movement of one thing within the sphere or domain of another; or (4) the first three serve as illustrations of the fourth and greatest wonder, which concerns human relationships and is slightly different than the first three. ††† tn: This last item in the series is the most difficult to understand. The MT reads בְּעֵלְמָה וְבִבְרֵךְ וְבִדְרֵךְ וְבִדְרֵךְ

§ sn:

Equally amazing is the insensitivity of the adulterous woman to the sin. The use of the word “way” clearly connects this and the preceding material. Its presence here also supports the interpretation of the final clause in v. 19 as referring to sexual intimacy. While that is a wonder of God’s creation, so is the way that human nature has distorted it and ruined it.

she eats and wipes her mouth§†
and says, “I have not done wrong.” §†† 21 Under three things the earth trembles, §† and under four things it cannot bear up:
22 under a servant<sup>†§††</sup> who becomes king, under a fool who is stuffed with food, §† 23 under an unloved§† woman who is married, and under a female servant who dispossesses§§† her mistress.
24 There are four things on earth that are small, §§† but they are exceedingly wise: §§§ 25 ants are creatures with little strength, but they prepare<sup>18</sup> their food in the summer; 26 rock badgers<sup>19</sup> are creatures with little power, but they make their homes in the crags;
27 locusts have no king,
but they all go forward by ranks; <sup>20</sup>

§† sn: The word clearly indicates that the woman is married and unchaste; but the text describes her as amoral as much as immoral – she sees nothing wrong with what she does. §†† sn: The acts of “eating” and “wiping her mouth” are euphemistic; they employ an implied comparison between the physical act of eating and wiping one’s mouth afterward on the one hand with sexual activity on the other hand (e.g., Prov 9:17). §† sn: This is the amazing part of the observation. It is one thing to sin, for everyone sins, but to dismiss the act of adultery so easily, as if it were no more significant than a meal, is incredibly brazen. §†† sn: The Hebrew verb means “to rage; to quake; to be in tumult.” The sage is using humorous and satirical hyperbole to say that the changes described in the following verses shake up the whole order of life. The sayings assume that the new, elevated status of the individuals was not accompanied by a change in nature. For example, it was not completely unknown in the ancient world for a servant to become king, and in the process begin to behave like a king. §† sn: A servant coming to power could become a tyrant if he is unaccustomed to the use of such power, or he might retain the attitude of a servant and be useless as a leader. §† tn: Heb “filled with food” (so ASV); NASB “satisfied with food”; NAB, NRSV “glutted with food”; CEV “who eats too much”; NLT “who prospers.” sn: The expression stuffed with food probably represents prosperity in general. So the line portrays someone who suddenly comes into wealth, but continues to be boorish and irreligious. §§† tn: The Hebrew term means “hated,” from אָנַשׁ

20 tn: Or “hyraxes.” This is the Syrian Hyrax, also known as the rock badger. KJV, ASV has “conies” (alternately spelled “coney” by NIV), a term usually associated with the European rabbit ( Oryctolagus cuniculus) but which can also refer to the pika or the hyrax. Scholars today generally agree that the Hebrew term used here refers to a type of hyrax, a small ungulate mammal of the family Procaviidae native to Africa and the Middle East which has a thick body, short legs and ears and a rudimentary tail. The simple "badger" (so NASB, NRSV, CEV) could lead to confusion with the badger, an entirely unrelated species of burrowing mammal related to weasels. sn: Modern scholars identify this creature with the rock badger (the Syrian hyrax), a small mammal that lives in the crevices of the rock. Its wisdom consists in its ingenuity to find a place of security. † sn: The Hebrew term means "divided"; they go forward in orderly divisions, or ranks (C. H. Toy, Proverbs [ICC], 535). Joel 1:4 describes their order and uses it as a picture of a coming invasion (e.g., Joel 2:7, 8). Therefore the wisdom of the locust is in their order and cooperation. †† tn: The KJV, agreeing with Tg. Prov 30:28, translated this term as "spider." But almost all modern English versions and commentators, following the Greek and the Latin versions, have "lizard." sn: The point of this saying is that a weak creature like a lizard, that is so easily caught, cannot be prevented from getting into the most significant places. ‡ tn: Although the Hebrew noun translated "king" is singular here, it is traditionally translated as plural: "kings' palaces" (so KJV, NASB, NIV, NRSV). ‡† tn: The form מַיִסִּיבִי

nor your ways<sup>19</sup> to that which ruins<sup>20</sup> kings.
4 It is not for kings, <sup>21</sup> O Lemuel,
it is not for kings to drink wine, <sup>22</sup>

§†† tn: Heb "hand to mouth." This express means "put your hand to your mouth" (e.g., Job 40:4, 5); cf. NIV "clap your hand over." §† tn: This line provides the explanation for the instruction to keep silent in the previous verse. It uses two images to make the point, and in so doing repeats two words throughout. The first is the word יָמָה

§†† sn: There is a subtle wordplay here with the word for anger: It is related to the word for nose in the preceding colon. §† sn: The analogy indicates that continuously pressing certain things will yield results, some good, some bad. So pressing anger produces strife. The proverb advises people to strive for peace and harmony through humility and righteousness. To do that will require "letting up" on anger. §‡ sn: Nothing else is known about King Lemuel aside from this mention in the book of Proverbs. Jewish legend identifies him as Solomon, making this advice for his mother Bathsheba; but there is no evidence for that. The passage is the only direct address to a king in the book of Proverbs – something that was the norm in wisdom literature of the ancient world (Leah L. Brunner, "King and Commoner in Proverbs and Near Eastern Sources," Dor le Dor 10 [1982]: 210-19; Brunner argues that the advice is religious and not secular). §§† tn: Some English versions take the Hebrew noun translated "oracle" here as a place name specifying the kingdom of King Lemuel; cf. NAB "king of Massa"; CEV "King Lemuel of Massa." §§‡ tn: The form מָה

<sup>18</sup> sn: The word translated "strength" refers to physical powers here, i.e., "vigor" (so NAB) or "stamina." It is therefore a metonymy of cause; the effect would be what spending this strength meant – sexual involvement with women. It would be easy for a king to spend his energy enjoying women, but that would be unwise. <sup>19</sup> sn: The word "ways" may in general refer to the heart's affection for or attention to, or it may more specifically refer to sexual intercourse. While in the book of Proverbs the term is an idiom for the course of life, in this context it must refer to the energy spent in this activity. <sup>20</sup> tn: The construction uses Qal infinitive construct לְמַחֲוֹת

warning for kings concerns the use of alcohol. If this passage is meant to prohibit any use of alcohol by kings, it would be unheard of in any ancient royal court. What is probably meant is an excessive and unwarranted use of alcohol, or a troubling need for it, so that the meaning is "to drink wine in excess" (cf. NLT "to guzzle wine"; CEV "should not get drunk"). The danger, of course, would be that excessive use of alcohol would cloud the mind and deprive a king of true administrative ability and justice. † tn: The MT has אָו

Most other English versions render this as plural for stylistic reasons, in light of the preceding context. ‡ tn: The king was not to "drink and forget"; the suffering are to "drink and forget." ‡† sn: The instruction to "open your mouth" is a metonymy of cause; it means "speak up for" (so NIV, TEV, NLT) or in this context "serve as an advocate in judgment" (cf. CEV "you must defend"). ‡†† sn: The instruction compares people who cannot defend themselves in court with those who are physically unable to speak (this is a figure of speech known as hypocatastasis, an implied comparison). The Wife of Noble Character ‡†

10 Who can find‡‡† a wife‡‡† of noble character ‡‡‡‡
 For her value‡‡ is far more than rubies.
 11 The heart of her husband has confidence‡‡ in her,

‡† sn: The book of Proverbs comes to a close with this poem about the noble wife. A careful reading of the poem will show that it is extolling godly wisdom that is beneficial to the family and the society. Traditionally it has been interpreted as a paradigm for godly women. And while that is valid in part, there is much more here. The poem captures all the themes of wisdom that have been presented in the book and arranges them in this portrait of the ideal woman (Claudia V. Camp, Wisdom and the Feminine in the Book of Proverbs, 92-93). Any careful reading of the passage would have to conclude that if it were merely a paradigm for women what it portrays may well be out of reach – she is a wealthy aristocrat who runs an estate with servants and conducts business affairs of real estate, vineyards, and merchandising, and also takes care of domestic matters and is involved with charity. Moreover, it says nothing about the woman's personal relationship with her husband, her intellectual and emotional strengths, or her religious activities (E. Jacob, "Sagesse et Alphabet: Pr. 31:10-31," Hommages à A. Dont-Sommer, 287-95). In general, it appears that the "woman" of Proverbs 31 is a symbol of all that wisdom represents. The poem, then, plays an important part in the personification of wisdom so common in the ancient Near East. But rather than deify Wisdom as the other ANE cultures did, Proverbs simply describes wisdom as a woman. Several features will stand out in the study of this passage. First, it is an alphabetic arrangement of the virtues of wisdom (an acrostic poem). Such an acrostic was a way of organizing the thoughts and making them more memorable (M. H. Lichtenstein, "Chiasm and Symmetry in Proverbs 31," CBQ 44 [1982]: 202-11). Second, the passage is similar to hymns, but this one extols wisdom. A comparison with Psalm 111 will illustrate the similarities. Third, the passage has similarities with heroic literature. The vocabulary and the expressions often sound more like an ode to a champion than to a domestic scene. Putting these features together, one would conclude that Proverbs 31:10-31 is a hymn to Lady Wisdom, written in the heroic mode. Using this arrangement allows the sage to make all the lessons of wisdom in the book concrete and practical, it provides a polemic against the culture that saw women as merely decorative, and it depicts the greater heroism as moral and domestic rather than only exploits on the battlefield. The poem certainly presents a pattern for women to follow. But it also presents a pattern for men to follow as well, for this is the message of the book of Proverbs in summary. ‡‡† sn: The poem begins with a rhetorical question (a figure of speech known as erotesis). This is intended to establish the point that such a noble wife is rare. As with wisdom in the book of Proverbs, she has to be found. ‡‡† tn: The first word in the Hebrew text ( אִשָּׁה ) ‡‡‡‡ tn: Heb "a woman of valor." This is the same expression used to describe Ruth (e.g., Ruth 3:11). The term הַיָּהוּבָה

 Latin have “two” or “double” – the difference being essentially the vocalization of a plural as opposed to a dual. The word is taken in the versions with the word that follows (“covers”) to mean “double garments.” The question to be asked is whether scarlet would keep one warm in winter or double garments. The latter is the easier reading and therefore suspect. 24 tn: The first word of the thir-

25 sn: The "fine linen" refers to expensive clothing (e.g., Gen 41:42), as does the "purple" (e.g., Exod 26:7; 27:9, 18). Garments dyed with purple indicated wealth and high rank (e.g., Song 3:5). The rich man in Luke 16:19 was clothed in fine linen and purple as well. The difference is that the wise woman is charitable, but he is not. † tn: The first word of the fourteenth line begins with ך

†† tn: Heb "gate"; the term "city" has been supplied in the translation for clarity. sn: The "gate" was the area inside the entrance to the city, usually made with rooms at each side of the main street where there would be seats for the elders. This was the place of assembly for the elders who had judicial responsibilities. ‡ tn: The construction uses the infinitive construct with the preposition and a pronominal suffix that serves as the subject (subjunctive genitive) to form a temporal clause. The fact that he "sits with the elders" means he is one of the elders; he sits as a judge among the people. ‡† tn: The first word of the fifteenth line begins with ם

‡‡ tn: Heb "to the Canaanites." These are the Phoenician traders that survived the wars and continued to do business down to the exile. ‡‡† sn: The idea of clothing and being clothed is a favorite figure in Hebrew. It makes a comparison between wearing clothes and having strength and honor. Just as clothes immediately indicate something of the nature and circumstances of the person, so do these virtues. ‡‡‡ tn: The first word of the sixteenth line begins with ך § sn: This word appears in Ps 111:3 which says that the LORD

The first word of the eighteenth line begins with ך §† sn: The expression bread of idleness refers to food that is gained through idleness, perhaps given or provided for her. In the description of the passage one could conclude that this woman did not have to do everything she did; and this line affirms that even though she is well off, she will eat the bread of her industrious activity. §§† tn: The first word of the nineteenth line begins with ך

§§‡ tn: The text uses an independent nominative absolute to draw attention to her husband: "her husband, and he praises her." Prominent as he is, her husband speaks in glowing terms of his noble wife. §§§ tn: The first word of the twentieth line begins with ך 18 tn: Or "women" (NAB, NIV, NRSV, NLT). 19 tn: The word is the same as in v. 10, "noble, valiant." 20 tn: The first word of the twenty-first line begins with ך

24 tn: Heb "Give her from the fruit of her hands." The expression "the fruit of her hands" employs two figures. The word "fruit" is a figure known as hypocatastasis, an implied comparison, meaning "what she produces." The word "hand" is a metonymy of cause, meaning her efforts to produce things. So the line is saying essentially "give her her due." This would either mean give her credit for what she has done (the option followed by the present translation; cf. TEV) or reward her for what she has done (cf. NAB, NIV, NLT). 25 sn: Psalm 111 began with the imperative יְהַלֵּלֵהּ לַיהוָה LORD ם

26 tn: "Gates" is a metonymy of subject. It refers to the people and the activity that occurs in the gates – business dealings, legal transactions, and social meetings. The term "city" is supplied in the translation for clarity. One is reminded of the acclaim given to Ruth by Boaz: "for all the gate of my people knows that you are a noble woman [ םִשְׁתַּחֲוֹתָ לְיְהוָה

Wisdom is Better than Folly

 For what more can the king's successor do than what the king‡ has already done?
<sup>13</sup> I realized that wisdom is preferable to folly, ‡ just as light is preferable to darkness:
 Yet I also realized that the same fate‡‡‡ happens to them both. ‡‡‡
<sup>15</sup> So I thought to myself, "The fate of the fool will happen even to me!§
 Then what did I gain by becoming so excessively§† wise?"‡‡‡

So I lamented to myself,§†
 because§§‡ in the days to come, both will already have been forgotten. §§§

Enjoy Life in the Present

12 I have concluded† that there is nothing better for people†† than‡ to be happy and to enjoy themselves‡† as long as they live, 13 and also that everyone should eat and drink, and find enjoyment in all his toil, for these things‡ are a gift from God.

God's Sovereignty

14 I also know that whatever God does will endure forever, nothing can be added to it, and nothing taken away from it. God has made it this way, so that men will fear him. 15 Whatever exists now has already been, and whatever will be has already been; for God will seek to do again‡†† what has occurred ‡ in the past. §

The Problem of Injustice and Oppression

16 I saw something else on earth .‡ In the place of justice, there was wickedness, and in the place of fairness, ‡†† there was wickedness. 17 I thought to myself, "God will judge both the righteous and the wicked; for there is an appropriate time for every activity, and there is a time of judgment‡† for every deed. 18 I also thought to myself, "It is‡†† for the sake of people, ‡† so God can clearly‡† show‡†† them that they are like animals. 19 For the fate of humans‡†† and the fate of animals are the same : As one dies, so dies the other; both have the same breath. There is no advantage for humans over animals, for both are fleeting. 20 Both go to the same place, both come from the dust, and to dust both return.

Qoheleth recommends the enjoyment of life and the fruit of one's labor, as God enables ( 5:18-20). Unfortunately, the ability to enjoy the fruits of one's labor is often thwarted by the obstacles described in 6:1-2 and 6:3-9. 26 tn: Heb "an evil sickness." 27 tn: Heb "the days of his years are many." 28 tn: Heb "he has no burial." The rhetorical question is an example of erotesis of positive affirmation, expecting a positive answer, e.g., Ps 56:13 [14] (see E. W. Bullinger, Figures of Speech, 947). It affirms the fact that both the miserly rich man who lives two thousand years, as well as the stillborn who never lived one day, both go to the same place – the grave. And if the miserly rich man never enjoyed the fruit of his labor during his life, his fate was no better than that of the stillborn who never had opportunity to enjoy any of the blessings of life. In a sense, it would have been better for the miserly rich man to have never lived than to have experienced the toil, anxiety, and misery of accumulating his wealth, but never enjoying any of the fruits of his labor. §‡ tn: The phrase "for nothing more than" does not appear in the Hebrew text, but is supplied in the translation for clarity. §†† tn: Heb "All man's work is for his mouth." The term "mouth" functions as a synecdoche of part (i.e., mouth) for the whole (i.e., person), substituting the organ of consumption for the person's action of consumption (see E. W. Bullinger, Figures of Speech, 641-43), as suggested by the parallelism with עָנָה §† tn: The term עָנָה sn: So what advantage does the wise man have over a fool? The rhetorical question in Hebrew implies a negative answer: the wise man has no absolute advantage over a fool in the sense that both will share the same fate: death. Qoheleth should not be misunderstood here as denying that wisdom has no relative advantage over folly; elsewhere he affirms that wisdom does yield some relative benefits in life (7:1-22). However, wisdom cannot deliver one from death. §§† sn: As in the preceding parallel line, this rhetorical question implies a negative answer (see the note after the word "fool" in the

Because he urges the fear of God in 7:18b, he cannot be inconsistent in suggesting that his readers offend the fear of God by indulging in some degree of sin in order to counterbalance an overly righteous life.  Nor is he lamenting the absolute futility of life and the lack of eterworld there is much of human existence marked by relative futility.

 Since the righteous man cannot assume that he will automatically experience temporal prosperity and blessings on this earth, he should - at the very least - enjoy each day to its fullest as a gift from God. D. R. Glenn ("Ecclesiastes," BKCOT, 997) notes, "Each day's joys

Limitations of Human Wisdom

 and to observe the activity<sup>22</sup> on earth - even though it prevents anyone from sleeping day or night<sup>23</sup> -

17 then I discerned all that God has done :<sup>24</sup>
 No one really comprehends what happens<sup>25</sup> on earth.
<sup>26</sup>

Despite all human<sup>27</sup> efforts to discover it, no one can ever grasp<sup>28</sup> it.<sup>29</sup>

Even if<sup>30</sup> a wise person claimed<sup>31</sup> that he understood, he would not really comprehend<sup>32</sup> it. <sup>33</sup>

9 So I reflected on all this, <sup>34</sup> attempting to clear<sup>35</sup> it all up.

I concluded that<sup>36</sup> the righteous and the wise, as well as their works, are in the hand of God;
 whether a person will be loved or hated<sup>37</sup> - no one knows what lies ahead. <sup>38</sup>

Wisdom Cannot Protect against Seemingly Chance Events

11 Again, † I observed this on the earth :†† the race is not always‡ won by the swiftest, the battle is not always won by the strongest; prosperity‡† does not always belong to those who are the wisest, wealth does not always belong to those who are the most discerning, nor does success‡† always come to those with the most knowledge – for time and chance may overcome‡†† them all. 12 Surely, no one‡†† knows his appointed time †§ Like fish that are caught in a deadly‡† net, and like birds that are caught in a snare – just like them, all people‡†† are ensnared‡† at an unfortunate‡†† time that falls upon them suddenly.

14 There was once‡†† a small city with a few men in it, and a mighty king attacked it, besieging‡†† it and building strong‡†† siege works against it.

15 However, a poor but wise man lived in the city,<sup>18</sup> and he could have delivered<sup>19</sup> the city by his wisdom, but no one listened<sup>20</sup> to that poor man.

 an indefinite plurality: "The collocation of a numeral with the next above it is a rhetorical device employed in numerical sayings to express a number, which need not, or cannot, be more exactly specified. It must be gathered from the context whether such formulae are intended to denote only an insignificant number (e.g., Is 17:6

 "two" or at the most "three") or a considerable number (e.g., Mi 5:4).
 Sometimes, however, this juxtaposition serves to express merely an indefinite total, without the collateral idea of intensifying the lower by means of the higher number" (GKC 437 §134. s). Examples: "one" or "two" ( Deut 32:30; Jer 3:14; Job 33:14; 40:5; Ps 62:12); "two" or "three" ( 2 Kgs 9:32; Isa 17:6; Hos 6:2; Amos 4:8; Sir 23:16; 26:28;
 50:25); "three" or "four" ( Jer 36:23; Amos 1:3-11; Prov 21:19; 30:15, 18; Sir 26:5); "four" or "five" ( Isa 17:6); "six" or "seven" ( Job 5:19; Prov 6:16); "seven" or "eight" ( Mic 5:4; Eccl 11:2). ‡‡† tn: The word "investments" is not in the Hebrew text; it is added here for clarity. This line is traditionally understood as an exhortation to be generous to a multitude of people (KJV, NAB, ASV, NASB, RSV, NRSV, NIV, NJPS); however, it is better taken as shrewd advice to not commit all one's possessions to a single venture (A. Cohen, The Five Megilloth [SoBB], 181). D. R. Glenn ("Ecclesiastes," BKCOT, 1003) writes: "In view of the possibility of disaster, a person should make prudent investments in numerous ventures rather than put all his 'eggs in one basket' (e.g., Gen 32:7-8 for a practical example of this advice)." Several translations reflect this: "Divide your merchandise among seven ventures, eight maybe" (NEB); "Take shares in several ventures" (Moffatt). ‡‡‡ sn: The phrase you do not know is repeated throughout this section ( 11:2, 5-6). Human beings are ignorant of the future. This should motivate a person to invest their financial re-

The Desire for Love

The Beloved to Her Lover :†

2 Oh, how I wish you†† would kiss me passionately!‡
For your lovemaking‡† is more delightful‡† than wine.

† tn: The introductory headings that identify the speakers of the poems throughout the Song do not appear in the Hebrew text. They are supplied in the translation for the sake of clarity. These notations should not be misinterpreted as suggesting that the Song be interpreted as a drama. Throughout the Song, the notation "The Lover" refers to the young man, while "the Beloved" refers to the young woman. Since the Song of Songs appears to be a collection of individual love songs, the individual love poems within the collection might not have originally referred to the same young man and young woman in each case. Just as the Book of Proverbs contains proverbs composed by Solomon (10:1-22:16; 25:1-29:27) as well as proverbs composed by other wise men (22:17-24:34; 30:1-31:9), so the Song of Songs may contain love poems composed by Solomon or written about Solomon as well as love poems composed by or written about other young couples in love. Nevertheless, the final canonical form of this collection presents a unified picture of idyllic love between one man and one woman in each case. The young man in several of the individual love poems is explicitly identified as Solomon ( 1:5; 3:7; 8:11-12), King Solomon ( 3:9, 11) or the king ( 1:4; 7:6). Some statements in the Song are consistent with a royal figure such as Solomon: references to Tirzah and Jerusalem ( 6:4) and to multiple queens and concubines ( 6:8). It is not so clear, however, whether Solomon is the young man in every individual poem. Nor is it clear that the same young woman is in view in each love poem. In several poems the young woman is a country maiden working in a vineyard ( 1:5-6; 8:11-12); however, the young woman in another poem is addressed as "O prince's daughter" ( 7:2). The historian notes, "Solomon loved many women, especially the daughter of Pharaoh" ( 1 Kgs 11:1). So it would be surprising if the Song devoted itself to only one of Solomon's many liaisons. The Song may simply be a collection of love poems written at various moments in Solomon's illustrious career as a lover of many women. It may also include love poems written about other young lovers that were collected into the final form of the book that presents a portrait of idyllic love of young lovers. †† tn: Heb "May he kiss me...." The shift from 3rd person masculine singular forms ("he" and "his") in 1:2a to 2nd person masculine singular forms ("your") in 1:2b-4 has led some to suggest that the Beloved addresses the Friends in 1:2a and then her Lover in 1:2b-4. A better solution is that the shift from the 3rd person masculine singular to 2nd person masculine singular forms is an example of heterosis of person: a poetic device in which the grammatical person shifts from line to line (M. H. Pope, Song of Songs [AB], 297). The third person is put for the second person (e.g. Gen 49:4; Deut 32:15; Ps 23:2-5; Isa 1:29; 42:20; 54:1; Jer 22:24; Amos 4:1; Micah 7:19; Lam 3:1; Song 4:2; 6:6) (E. W. Bullinger, Figures of Speech, 524-25). Similar shifts occur in ancient Near Eastern love literature (cf. S. N. Kramer, The Sacred Marriage Rite, 92, 99). Most translations render 1:2 literally and preserve the shifts from 3rd person masculine singular to 2nd person masculine singular forms (KJV, AV, NASB, NIV); others render 1:2 with 2nd person masculine singular forms throughout (RSV, NJPS). ‡ tn: Heb "May he kiss me with the kisses of his mouth!" With the comparison of love-making to wine, the idea is probably "more intoxicating than wine" or "more delightful than wine." ‡†† tn: The young woman compares his lovemaking to the intoxicating effects of wine. A man is to be "intoxicated" with the love of his wife ( Prov 5:20). Wine makes the heart glad ( Deut 14:26; Judg 9:13; Ps 104:15) and revives the spirit ( 2 Sam 16:1-2; Prov 31:4-7). It is viewed as a gift from God, given to enable man to enjoy life ( Eccl 2:24-25; 5:18). The ancient Egyptian love poems use the imagery of wine and intoxication to describe the overwhelming effects of sexual love. For example, an ancient Egyptian love song reads: "I embrace her and her arms open wide; I am like a man in Punt, like someone overwhelmed with drugs. I kiss her and her lips open; and I am drunk without beer" ( ANET 467-69). ‡‡† tn: The preposition ל לרים

The Maidens † to the Lover: *

We will†† rejoice and delight in you,*
we will praise†† your love more than wine.

† sn: Normally in the Song, the person/gender of the pronouns and suffixes makes the identify of the speaker or addressee clear. However, there are several places in which there is grammatical ambiguity that makes it difficult to identify either the speaker or the addressee (e.g., 'span class="bibleref" title="Song of Solomon 6:11-13;7:9"6:11-13; 7:9b). This is particularly true when 1st person common plural or 3rd person common plural verbs or suffixes are present ( 1:3[4]; 2:15; 5:1b; 8:8-9), as is the case in the three lines of 1:3b[4b]. There are four views to the identity of the speaker(s): (1) NASB attributes all three lines to the maidens, (2) NIV attributes the first two lines to the friends and the third line to the Beloved (= woman), (3) NJPS attributes all three lines to the Beloved, speaking throughout 1:2-4, and (4) The first line could be attributed to the young man speaking to his beloved, and the last two lines attributed to the Beloved who returns praise to him. The referents of the 1st person common plural cohortatives and the 2sg suffixes have been taken as: (1) the maidens of Jerusalem, mentioned in 1:4[5] and possibly referred to as the 3rd person common plural subject of אהבוך

The term "dark" does not appear in the Hebrew in this line but is supplied in the translation from the preceding line for the sake of clarity. The poetic structure of this tricolon is an example of redistribution. The terms "black but beautiful" in the A-line are broken up - the B-line picks up on "black" and the C-line picks up on "beautiful." The Beloved was "black" like the rugged tents of Qedar woven from the wool of black goats, but "beautiful" as the decorative inner tent-curtains of King Solomon (J. L. Kugel, The Idea of Biblical Poetry, 40; W. G. E. Watson, Classical Hebrew Poetry [JSOTSup], 181). ‡† sn: The comparison of her dark, outdoors appearance to the "tents of Qedar" is quite fitting for two reasons. First, the name "Qedar" refers to an ancient Arabian tribe of bedouin who lived in tents and inhabited a region in northern Arabia. Their tents were traditionally woven from the wool of black goats. They were not beautiful to look

‡‡† sn: In the ancient Near East there was an unusual emphasis on beauty of a woman's eyes. This was probably due to the practice of women veiling themselves and wearing long robes so that no portion of their body or face was exposed to sight except for their eyes (e.g., Gen 26:17). The only indication of a woman's beauty was her eyes. There was no better (and no other, in light of the attire) way to praise a woman's beauty in the ancient Near East (G. L. Carr, Song of Solomon [TOTC], 86). ‡‡‡ tn: Heb "Your eyes are doves." This metaphor compares her eyes to doves. There is no lack of suggestions as to the point of the comparison: (1) Arabic love literature describes doves having sentimental eyes, the point here (Marcia Falk, Love Lyrics from the Bible, 113). (2) The comparison has to do with the color of her eyes (G. L. Carr, Song of Solomon [TOTC], 86). (3) The comparison has to do with the glistening color of the dove and its quick movements, that is, her eyes had a beautiful color and had lively motion (M. H. Pope, Song of Songs [AB], 356). (4)
The comparison has to do with the fluttering of her eyes which reminded him of the fluttering of a dove's wings (M. D. Goulder, The Song of Fourteen Songs [JSOTSup], 5). (5) The comparison has to do with gentleness and purity, as well as longing and simplicity (K&D 18:38). § sn: The statement הנה יפה כעיתי

To find a cultivated apple tree growing in the forest among other wild trees would be quite unusual; the apple tree would stand out and be a delightful surprise. Like a cultivated apple tree, the Lover was unique and stood out among all other men. In ancient Near Eastern love literature, the apple tree was a common symbol for romantic love and sexual fertility (S. N. Kramer, The Sacred Marriage Rite, 100-101). The “apple tree” motif is used in the Song in a similar manner (e.g., Song 2:3; 8:5). Likewise, the motif of “apples” is used as a symbol of fertility (Joel 1:12) and sexual desire ( Song 2:5, 7, 9). §† tn: Alternately, “I desired” or “I took delight in.” The meaning of this use of the verb ‡ שושנת השרון

For example, one Egyptian love song reads: "She will make the doctors unnecessary, because she knows my sickness" (Papyrus Harris 4:11). Similarly, "My salvation is her coming in from outside; when I see her, I will be healthy. When she opens her eye, my body is young; when she speaks, I will be strong. When I embrace her, she exorcises evil from me" (Papyrus Chester Beatty, C 5:1-2). ‡‡† tn: Heb "embraces." Alternately, "May his left hand be under my head, and [may] his right hand embrace me." ‡‡‡ sn: Frequently, when oaths were taken in the ancient world, witnesses were invoked in order to solemnize the vow and to act as jurists should the oath someday be broken. Cosmic forces such as the "heavens and earth" were often personified to act as witnesses to an oath (e.g., Deut 32:1; Isa 1:2; Mic 1:2; 6:1-2; Ps 50:2). In this case, the "witnesses" are the "gazelles and stags of the field" ( 2:7; 3:5). These animals were frequently used as symbols of romantic love in the OT ( Prov 5:19). And in Egyptian and Mesopotamian love literature and Ugaritic poetry the gazelle was often associated with sexual fertility. For instance, in the following excerpt from a Mesopotamian incantation text the stag is referred to in the context of sexual potency in which a woman urges an ailing male: "With the love-[making of the mountain goat] six times, with the lovemaking of a stag seven times, with the lovemaking of a partridge twelve times, make love to me! Make love to me because I am young! And the lovemaking of a stag...Make love to me!" (R. D. Biggs, Ancient Mesopotamian Potency Incantations [TCS], 26, lines 4-8). § tn: Traditionally, "hinds." A hind is a female deer, generally less than three years old. §† tn: Heb "of the field." The Hebrew term refers to open fields or open country as the home of wild animals; if taken adjectivally this could modify the previous term: "wild young does" (cf. NRSV). sn: The "gazelles" and "does of the fields" are probably zoomorphisms for love personified. In other words, the witness of this oath is "love" itself. Should the daughters violate this Gazelles were often figures in Hebrew, Akkadian, and Ugaritic literature for mighty warriors or virile young men (e.g., 2 Sam 1:19; 2:18; Isa 14:9; Zech 10:3). In ancient Near Eastern love literature gazelles often symbolize the excitement and swiftness of the lover coming to see his beloved, as in an ancient Egyptian love song: "O that you came to your sister swiftly like a bounding gazelle! Its feet reel, its limbs are weary, terror has entered its body. A hunter pursues it with his hounds, they do not see it in its dust; It sees a resting place as a trap, it takes the river as its road. May you find her hiding-place before your hand is kissed four times. Pursue your sister's love, the Golden gives her to you, my friend!" † sn: The dove was a common figure for romantic love in ancient Near Eastern love literature. This emphasis seems to be suggested by his use of the term "my dove." Just as the young man heard the voice of the turtledove in 2:12, so now he wants to hear her voice. Doves were often associated with timidity in the ancient world. Being virtually defenseless, they would often take refuge in crevices and cliffs for safety (Jer 48:28). The emphasis on timidity and the need for security is undoubtedly the emphasis here because of the explicit description of this "dove" hiding in the "clefts of the rock" and in "the hiding places of the mountain crevice." Fortresses were sometimes built in the clefts of the rocks on mountainsides because they were inaccessible and therefore, in a secure place of safety (Jer 49:16; Obad 3). Perhaps he realized it might be intimidating for her to join him and communicate with him freely. She would need to feel secure in his love to do this. It would be easy for her to hide from such emotionally exposing experiences.

tendencies with regard to vineyards (Judg 15:4; Neh 4:3; Ps 63:10; Lam 5:18; Ezek 13:4). The description of these foxes as being destructive here seems to confirm that this is the point of comparison in mind. †† sn: In ancient Near Eastern love literature it was common to use wild animals to symbolize potential problems which could separate lovers and destroy their love. For instance, in Egyptian love songs it is the crocodile, rather than the foxes, which were used as figures for obstacles which might threaten a couple's love. Here the "foxes" are probably used figuratively to represent potentially destructive problems which could destroy their romantic relationship and which could hinder it from ripening into marriage. ‡‡ sn: The term "vineyard" is also a figure. In 1:6 she used the vineyard motif as a metaphor for her physical appearance, but here it is "our vineyards" which is probably a figure for their romantic relationship. The phrase "in bloom" makes the metaphor more specific, so that the phrase "our vineyards are in bloom" means that their romantic love relationship was in its initial stages, that is, before it had ripened into marriage. ‡‡‡ sn: This line may be translated either as "the one who grazes among the lilies" or as "the one who feeds [his flock] among the lilies." The latter would picture him as a shepherd pasturing his flock among a bed of flowers which they were eating, while the former would be picturing him as a gazelle feeding among a bed of flowers. Because of the occurrence of the gazelle motif in the following verse, it is most likely that this motif is present in this verse as well. Although it seems likely that he is therefore being pictured as a gazelle eating these flowers, it is far from clear as to what this figurative picture denotes. It is possible that it conveys the peaceful nature of his relationship with her because she was earlier portrayed as a lily (e.g., 2:1). ‡‡‡ sn: Heb "until the day breathes," which is figurative (personification) for the morning, that is, the time when the day begin its "life" (e.g., Song 4:6). Likewise, "the shadows flee" is figurative (personification) for the dawn, i.e., the time when the dark shadows of the night disappear, or the shadows of the evening which lengthen and are just as fleeting. § tn: The exact meaning of סָב

§†† sn: There is debate about the reason why the woman brought her beloved to her mother's house. Campbell notes that the mother's house is sometimes referred to as the place where marital plans were made ( Gen 24:28; Ruth 1:8). Some suggest, then, that the woman here was unusually bold and took the lead in proposing marriage plans with her beloved. This approach emphasizes that the marriage plans in 3:4 are followed by the royal wedding procession ( 3:6-11) and the wedding night ( 4:1-5:1). On the other hand, others suggest that the parallelism of "house of my mother" and "chamber of she who conceived me" focuses on the bedroom of her mother's house. Fields suggests that her desire was to make love to her beloved in the very bedroom chambers where she herself was conceived, to complete the cycle of life/love. If this is the idea, it would provide a striking parallel to a similar picture in 8:5 in which the woman exults that they had made love in the very location where her beloved had been conceived: "Under the apple tree I aroused you; it was there your mother conceived you, there she who bore you conceived you." §‡ tn: The term קָדָר

† sn: Song 4:1-7 is often compared to ancient Near Eastern wasfs songs sung by the groom to his new bride, praising her beauty from head to foot. Examples have been found in Egyptian, Syrian, Sumerian, and Arabic love literature. The wasfs song is a poetic celebration by the groom of his bride's physical beauty. The typical form has three parts: (1) introductory words by the wedding guests, (2) invitation by the bride to the groom to celebrate her physical beauty, and (3) the groom's poetic comparative praise of his bride's beauty from head to foot – comprising the bulk of the song. The groom's praise typically is characterized by three movements: (1) introductory summary praise of his bride's beauty, (2) lengthy and detailed figurative description of her physical beauty, and (3) concluding summary praise which reiterates the introductory words of the song. Although the introductory words of the wedding guests and the invitation by the bride are absent, the form of the Lover's praise of his bride is identical, as are the types of comparative praise. His song falls into the same three movements: (1) introductory summary praise of his bride's beauty in 4:1a, (2) lengthy and detailed figurative description of her beauty in 4:1b-6, and (3) concluding summary praise in 4:7. Like most of the other metaphors in 4:1-7, this is probably a comparison of sight rather than sense: (1) the shape of a woman's eyes, especially in Egyptian art, resemble the shape of a dove, and (2) the white color of the eyeballs resemble the white color of a dove's body. On the other hand, many Jewish and Christian interpreters have suggested that this is a comparison of sense, usually suggesting that the dove is a symbol for purity and that the eyes of a person are the windows of their soul or character, that is, the bride has a pure character as can be seen through her eyes. ‡† tn: Heb "flowing down" or "descending." † tn: Scholars debate whether this refers to (1) the interior walls of a tower upon which warriors would hang their shields when not in use or (2) the external upper wall of a military fortress upon which warriors would hang their shields to add to their protection during battle. A few scholars suggest that what is pictured here are the internal walls of the tower and, on the basis of Ezek 27:10-11, posit that in the ancient world there was a practice in which mercenaries, who had joined themselves to a king, would hang their shields upon his fortress wall as a sign of their allegiance. Following Crim, Deere suggests, "the custom of hanging shields on the tower was symbolic of the warriors' allegiance to and valor for a particular king." Crim suggests that the point of comparison of his praise would be something similar to what follows: "Just as the fame of Tyre in Ezek. 27:11 attracted mercenaries, the fame of the tower of David has attracted soldiers to come and enter its service. The shields hanging there show that they have given their allegiance to the tower. Your neck is like that tower. It is so beautiful that it could win the allegiance of a thousand heroic soldiers." We would then translate something like this: "Your neck attracts men as the tower of David attracts warriors. A thousand heroic soldiers would swear allegiance to your beauty." J. S. Deere suggests that the point of the comparison is that the bride's neck was so beautiful and majestic that mighty warriors from near and far would have given their allegiance to her...It is as if he were saying that these soldiers would be willing to surrender their shields to her beauty. On the other hand, most scholars suggest that it refers to the common practice in the ancient Near East of lining the top wall of a military fortress tower with shields, behind which the soldiers could stand for protection leaving both hands free for bow and arrows (Note: It is possible to view Ezek 27:10-11 and 2 Chr 32:5 in this manner). This is supported by ancient Near Eastern art which pictures such a practice, especially by the relief of Sennacherib's siege of Lachish which shows the top wall of Lachish lined with shields. The Illustrated Family Encyclopedia of the Living Bible, 10:56, notes: "The art of the ancient East often shows us the shields that were, in time of war, set in position on the towers of the city walls, so that defenders could safely fire arrows and hurl stones while standing upright behind them." Those who see this as the imagery all agree that the point of comparison is to jeweled necklaces with pendants which could be compared to shields, as in 1:10-11 (A. Robert, T. J. Meek, G. Gerlemann, A. M. Honeyman, B. S. J. Isserlin, J. McKenzie). McKenzie expresses this view when he posits that she was wearing jewelry around her neck and that this was being compared to the shields hung around this military tower: "One of the many physical charms that the Beloved finds in his mistress (Song of Sol. 4:1-4) is her long neck which, with its stately poise, reminds him of the lofty tower of David. Just as this tower is hung all round with shields placed there by mighty men of valor, so is his mistress' neck adorned with chains and strings of jewels. This is supported by the fact that 4:9 explicitly mentions a necklace with a multitude of jewels in it which she was wearing at this time. And Isserlin suggests that the complete image in view fits the evidence of both ancient Near Eastern military towers and jewelry which has been recovered archaeologically: "It seems to the present writer that a reading of the verse...can be taken to refer to the presence not of one, but two elements on the tower: there is the coursed masonry, and on top of it there are the shields. If we keep the idea that a multiple necklace is alluded to, then this should be made up of two kinds of elements: on top there should be a series of beads resembling round shields; below we should find something resembling either the short or the long side of building stones (according to whether the masonry is laid in headers or stretchers). Can necklaces of this type be found in the ancient Near East? It seems to the writer that the well-known sculpture from Arsos in Cyprus (Pl. VI) represents just this type of necklace. The upper beads do look like a row of round shields, as shown on the tower in the relief slab representing Sennacherib's siege of Lachish, while the lower elements do evoke roughly bossed headers, as found in ancient Palestinian defence works" (B. S. J. Isserlin, The Israelites, 59, and plate VI). Composite necklaces such as this one might be referred to in Prov 1:9. In any case, it is quite unlikely that the point of comparison was that she had a large, muscular neck, as some have suggested (M. Jastrow, L. Waterman, and R. Gordis). See A. M. Honeyman, "Two Contributions to Canaanite Toponymy," JTS 50 (1949): 51; B. S. J. † sn: There is no little debate about the identity of the speaker(s) and the audience addressed in 5:1b. There are five options: (1) He is addressing his bride. (2) The bride is addressing him. (3) The wedding guests are addressing him and his bride. (4) He and his bride are addressing the wedding guests. (5) The poet is addressing him and his bride. When dealing with this issue, the following factors should be considered: (1) the form of both the exhortations and the addressees are plural. This makes it unlikely that he is addressing his bride or that his bride is addressing him. (2) The exhortation has an implicitly sexual connotation because the motif of "eating" and "drinking" refers to sexual consummation in 5:1a. This makes it unlikely that he or his bride are addressing the wedding guests – an orgy is quite out of the question! (3) The poet could be in view because as the writer who created the Song, only he could have been with them – in a poetic sense – in the bridal chamber as a "guest" on their wedding night. (4) The wedding guests could be in view through the figurative use of apostrophe (addressing an audience that is not in the physical presence of the speaker). While the couple was alone in their wedding chambers, the wedding guests wished them all the joys and marital bliss of the honeymoon. This is supported by several factors: (a) Wedding feasts in the ancient Near East frequently lasted several days and after the couple had consummated their marriage, they would appear again to celebrate a feast with their wedding guests. (b) The structure of the Song is composed of paired-dialogues which either begin or conclude with the words of the friends or daughters of Jerusalem ( 1:2-4, 5-11; 3:6-11; 5:9-16; 6:1-3, 4-13; 7:1-10) or which conclude with an exhortation addressed to them ( 2:1-7; 3:1-5; 8:1-4). In this case, the poetic unit of 4:1-5:1 would conclude with an exhortation by the friends in 5:1b. †† sn: The physical love between the couple is compared to eating and drinking at a wedding feast. This is an appropriate figure of comparison because it would have been issued during the feast which followed the wedding and the consummation. The term "drink" refers to intoxication, that is, it compares becoming drunk on wine with enjoying the physical love of one's spouse (e.g., Prov 5:19-20). † tn: Heb "my heart." The term לבי

So beautiful was Tirzah that it would be chosen by Jeroboam as the original capital of the northern kingdom ( 1 Kgs 15:33; 16:8, 15, 23). The ancient city Tirzah has been identified as Tel el-Far`ah near Nablus: see B. S. J. The syntax is enigmatic and the textual reading is uncertain. The difficulty of this verse has generated a plethora of different translations: "Or ever I was aware, my soul made me [like] the chariots of Ammi-nadib" (KJV), "Before I knew it, my soul made me like the chariots of Ammi-nadib" (AV), "Before I knew it, my fancy set me in a chariot beside my prince" (AT), "Before I knew...my desire hurled me on the chariots of my people, as their prince" (JB), "Before I knew it, my desire set me mid the chariots of Ammi-nadib" (JPSV), "I did not know myself, she made me feel more than a prince reigning over the myriads of his people" (NEB), "Before I knew it, my heart had made me the blessed one of my kins-women" (NAB), "Before I was aware, my soul set me [over] the chariots of my noble people" (NASB), "Before I realized it, my desire set me among the royal chariots of my people" (NIV), "...among the chariots of Amminadab" (NIV margin), "...among the chariots of the people of the prince" (NIV margin), and "Before I realized it, I was stricken with a terrible homesickness and wanted to be back among my own people" (NLT). The mountain range borders the southern edge of the plain of Esdraelon, dividing the Palestinian coastal plain into the Plain of Acco to the north and the Plains of Sharon and Philistia to the south. Its luxuriant foliage was legendary ( Isa 33:9; Amos 1:2; Nah 1:4). Rising to a height of approximately 1750 feet (525 m), it extends southeast from the Mediterranean for 13 miles (21 km). Due to its greatness and fertility, it was often associated with majesty and power ( Isa 35:2; Jer 46:18). The point of the comparison is that her head crowns her body just as the majestic Mount Carmel rested over the landscape, rising above it in majestic and fertile beauty. See ZPEB 1:755; C. F. The Journey to the Countryside

The Beloved to Her Lover:

11 Come, my beloved, let us go to the countryside;
 let us spend the night in the villages.
 12 Let us rise early to go to the vineyards, to see if the vines have budded,
 to see if their blossoms have opened,
 if the pomegranates are in bloom –
 there I will give you my love.
 13 The mandrakes‡‡‡ send out their fragrance;
 over our door is every delicacy, †‡‡ both new and old, which I have stored up for you, my lover.

The Beloved to Her Lover:

8 Oh, how I wish you were<sup>s</sup> my little brother, st

‡‡ tn: Heb "his desire is for me" (so NASB, NIV, NRSV). ‡‡† sn: In the ancient Near East the mandrake was a widely used symbol of erotic love because it was thought to be an aphrodisiac and therefore was used as a fertility drug. The unusual shape of the large forked roots of the mandrake resembles the human body with extended arms and legs. This similarity gave rise to the popular superstition that the mandrake could induce conception and it was therefore used as a fertility drug. It was so thoroughly associated with erotic love that its name is derived from the Hebrew root דוד דודים

‡‡‡ sn: Her comparison of their love to fruit stored "over our door" reflects an ancient Near Eastern practice of storing fruit on a shelf above the door of a house. In the ancient Near East, fruits were stored away on shelves or cupboards above doorways where they were out of reach and left to dry until they became very sweet and delectable. The point of comparison in this figurative expression seems to be two-fold: (1) She was treasuring up special expressions of her sexual love to give to him, and (2) All these good things were for him alone to enjoy. See M. H. Pope, The Song of Songs [AB], 650.

§‡† sn: A

Palestinian palm tree grower would climb a palm tree for two reasons: (1) to pluck the fruit and (2) to pollinate the female palm trees.
 Because of their height and because the dates would not naturally fall off the tree, the only way to harvest dates from a palm tree is to climb the tree and pluck the fruit off the stalks. This seems to be the primary imagery behind this figurative expression. The point of comparison here would be that just as one would climb a palm tree to pluck its fruit so that it might be eaten and enjoyed, so too Solomon wanted to embrace his Beloved so that he might embrace and enjoy her breasts. It is possible that the process of pollination is also behind this figure. A palm tree is climbed to pick its fruit or to dust the female flowers with pollen from the male flowers (the female and male flowers were on separate trees). To obtain a better yield and accelerate the process of pollination, the date grower would transfer pollen from the male trees to the flowers on the female trees. This method of artificial pollination is depicted in ancient Near Eastern art. For example, a relief from Gozan (Tel Halaf) dating to the 9th century B.C.

phemism: the Beloved wished to give her breasts to Solomon, like a mactic point of the "lover's wish song" of Song 8:1-2. The Beloved wished that Solomon was her little brother still nursing on her mother's breast. The Beloved, who had learned from her mother's example, would bring him inside their home and she would give him her breast: "I would give you spiced wine to drink, the nectar of my pomegranates." The phrase "my pomegranates" is a euphemism for her breasts. Rather than providing milk from her breasts for a nursing baby, the Beloved's breasts would provide the sensual delight of "spiced wine" and "nectar" for her lover. tc: The MT reads the

The cycle of life and love had come around full circle under the apple tree. While his mother had awakened his eyes to life, the Beloved had awakened him to love. For example: "His soul was vexed to death," means that he could not stand it any longer (Judg 16:16). "I do well to be angry to death," means that he was extremely angry (Jonah 4:9). "My soul is sorrowful to death," means that he was exceedingly sorrowful (Matt 26:38 = Mark 14:34) (D. W. The verb in the first line does double duty in the parallelism. §† tn: Although both verbs have no object, the parallelism suggests that Israel fails to recognize the Lord as the one who provides for their needs. In both clauses, the placement of "Israel" and "my people" at the head of the clause focuses the reader's attention on the rebellious nation (C. van der Merwe, J. Naudé, J. The prophet contrasts four terms of privilege - nation, people, offspring, children - with four terms that depict Israel's sinful condition in Isaiah's day - sinful, evil, wrong, wicked (see J. A. Motyer, The Prophecy of Isaiah, 43). §† sn: Holy One of Israel is one of Isaiah's favorite divine titles for God. It pictures the Lord as the sovereign king who rules over his covenant people and exercises moral authority over them. §† tn: Heb "they are estranged backward." The LXX omits this statement, which presents syntactical problems and seems to be outside the synonymous parallelistic structure of the verse.

§§† sn: In vv. 5-9 Isaiah addresses the battered nation (5-8) and speaks as their representative (9). §§† tn: Heb "Why are you still beaten? [Why] do you continue rebellion?" The rhetorical questions express the prophet's disbelief over Israel's apparent masochism and obsession with sin. The interrogative construction in the first line does double duty in the parallelism. H. Wildberger (Isaiah, 1:18) offers another alternative by translating the two statements with one question: "Why do you still wish to be struck that you persist in revolt?" §§§ tn: Heb "all the head is ill"; NRSV "the whole head is sick"; CEV "Your head is badly bruised." <sup>18</sup> tn: Heb "and all the heart is faint." This phrase answers the possible objection that an Israelite could raise in response to God's indictment: "But we are offering the sacrifices you commanded!" sn: In this section the Lord refutes a potential objection that his sinful people might offer in their defense. He has charged them with rebellion (vv. 2-3), but they might respond that they have brought him many sacrifices. The verb "trample" probably refers to the eager worshipers and their sacrificial animals walking around in the temple area. §† tn: Or "worthless" (NASB, NCV, CEV); KJV, ASV "vain." §† sn: Notice some of the other practices that Yahweh regards as "detestable": homosexuality ( Lev 18:22-30; 20:13), idolatry ( Deut 7:25; 13:15), human sacrifice ( Deut 12:31), eating ritually unclean animals ( Deut 14:3-8), sacrificing defective animals ( Deut 17:1), engaging in occult activities ( Deut 18:9-14), and practicing ritual prostitution ( 1 Kgs 14:23). §§† tn: Heb "sin and assembly" (these two nouns probably represent a hendiadys). The point is that their attempts at worship are unacceptable to God because the people's everyday actions in the socio-economic realm prove they have no genuine devotion to God (see vv. 16-17). §§† tn: Heb "I close my eyes from you." §§§ sn: This does not just refer to the blood of sacrificial animals, but also the blood, as it were, of their innocent victims. By depriving the poor and destitute of proper legal recourse and adequate access to the economic system, the oppressors have, for all intents and purposes, "killed" their victims. 18 sn: Having demonstrated the people's guilt, the Lord calls them to repentance, which will involve concrete action in the socio-economic realm, not mere emotion.

 See the note at v. 17. 23 sn: The rich oppressors referred to in Isaiah and the other eighth century prophets were not rich capitalists in the modern sense of the word. They were members of the royal military and judicial bureaucracies in Israel and Judah. As these bureaucracies grew, they acquired more and more land and gradually commandeered the economy and legal system. At various administrative levels bribery and graft became commonplace. The common people outside the urban administrative centers were vulnerable to exploitation in such a system, especially those, like widows and orphans, who had lost their family provider through death. Through confiscatory taxation, excessive interest rates, and other oppressive governmental measures and policies, they were gradually disenfranchised and lost their landed property, and with it, their rights as citizens. The socio-economic equilibrium envisioned in the law of Moses was radically disturbed.

The second person pronouns in vv. 25-26 are feminine singular. Personified Jerusalem is addressed. The idiom "turn the hand against" has the nuance of "strike with the hand, attack," in Ps 81:15 HT (81:14 ET); Ezek 38:12; Am 1:8; Zech 13:7. In Jer 6:9 it is used of gleaning grapes. ‡‡† tn: Heb "I will purify your dross as [with] flux." "Flux" refers here to minerals added to the metals in a furnace to prevent oxides from forming. In this context, where social injustice and legal corruption are denounced (see v. 23), the "judges" are probably government officials responsible for making legal decisions, while the "advisers" are probably officials who helped the king establish policies. Both offices are also mentioned in 3:2. §† sn: The third person reference to the Lord in v. 28 indicates that the prophet is again (see vv. 21-24a) speaking. Since v. 27 is connected to v. 28 by a conjunction, it is likely that the prophet's words begin with v. 27. §†† tn: Heb "Zion will be ransomed with justice." The "idols" could be the subject; they will "go" into the caves and holes when the idolaters throw them there in their haste to escape God's judgment (see vv. 20-21). The picture of the idols, which represent the foreign deities worshiped by the people, fleeing from the Lord would be highly polemical and fit the overall mood of the chapter. However it seems more likely that the idolaters themselves are the subject, for v. 10 uses similar language in sarcastically urging them to run from judgment. §†† tn: Heb "dust"; ASV "into the holes of the earth." §† tn: Heb "from the dread of the Lord," that is, from the dread that he produces in the objects of his judgment."  people in this manner. 29 tn: Heb "the master, the Lord who

The verb that introduces this verse serves as a discourse particle and is untranslated; see note on “in the future” in 2:2. † tn: The pronoun is feminine singular, suggesting personified Zion, as representative of its women, is the addressee. The reference to “her gates” in v. 26 makes this identification almost certain. †† tn: Heb “your strength in battle.” The verb in the first clause provides the verbal idea for the second clause. ††† tn: Heb “she will be empty, on the ground she will sit.” Jerusalem is personified as a destitute woman who sits mourning the empty city. †† tn: Or “in that day” (ASV). sn: The seven to one ratio emphasizes the great disparity that will exist in the population due to the death of so many men in battle. ††† tn: Heb “eat” (so NASB, NIV, NRSV); CEV “buy.” ††† tn: Heb “wear” (so NASB, NRSV); NCV “make.” ††† tn: Heb “only let your name be called over us.” The Hebrew idiom “call the name over” indicates ownership. Though the accents in the Hebrew text suggest otherwise, it might be preferable to take "smoke" with what follows, since one would expect smoke to accompany fire. sn: The imagery of the cloud by day and fire by night recalls the days of Moses, when a cloud and fire were tangible reminders that the Lord was guiding and protecting his people ( Exod 13:21-22; 14:19, 24). In the future age envisioned in Isa 4, the Lord's protective presence will be a reality. ‡ tn: Heb "indeed (or "for") over all the glory, a canopy." This may allude to Exod 40:34-35, where a cloud overshadows the meeting tent as it is filled with God's glory. †† tn: Heb "a shelter it will be for shade by day from heat, and for a place of refuge and for a hiding place from cloudburst and rain." Since both of the last nouns of this verse can mean rain, they can either refer to the rain storm and the rain as distinct items or together refer to a heavy downpour. Regardless, they do not represent unrelated phenomena. †† tn: It is uncertain who is speaking here. The reference to his "work" alludes back to v. 12, which refers to his "work" of judgment. With these words the people challenged the prophet's warning of approaching judgment. They were in essence saying that they saw no evidence that God was about to work in such a way. †† sn: See the note on the phrase "the Holy One of Israel" in 1:4. ‡ tn: Heb "draw near" (so NASB); NRSV "hasten to fulfillment." ‡† tn: Heb "Woe [to] those who call." While this lack of symmetry is odd, it has a clear rhetorical purpose. Having established a pattern in vv. 8-17, the prophet deviates from it in vv. 18-21 to grab his audience's attention. By placing the "woes" in rapid succession and heaping up the accusatory elements, he highlights the people's guilt and introduces an element of tension and anticipation. One is reasonably certain that judgment will come, and when it does, it will be devastating. This anticipated devastation is described in frightening detail after the sixth and final woe (see vv. 22-30). § tn: The language used here is quite sarcastic and paves the way for the shocking description of the enemy army in vv. 25-30. The rich leaders of Judah are nothing but "party animals" who are totally incapable of withstanding real warriors. §† tn: Heb "Woe [to]..." See the note at v. 8. §†† tn: Heb "and the just cause of the innocent ones they turn aside from him." sn: In vv. 22-23 the prophet returns to themes with which he opened his speech. The plural pronoun refers to the Lord, the seraphs, and the rest of the heavenly assembly. §§† sn: Do we take this commission at face value? Does the Lord really want to prevent his people from understanding, repenting, and being healed? Verse 9, which ostensibly records the content of Isaiah's message, is clearly ironic. As far as we know, Isaiah did not literally proclaim these exact words. The Hebrew imperatival forms are employed rhetorically and anticipate the response Isaiah will receive. When all is said and done, Isaiah might as well preface and conclude every message with these ironic words, which, though imperatival in form, might be paraphrased as follows: "You continually hear, but don't understand; you continually see, but don't perceive." Isaiah might as well command them to be spiritually insensitive, because, as the preceding and following chapters make clear, the people are bent on that anyway. (This ironic command is comparable to saying to a particularly recalcitrant individual, "Go ahead, be stubborn!") Verse 10b is also clearly sarcastic. On the surface it seems to indicate Isaiah's hardening ministry will prevent genuine repentance. But, as the surrounding chapters clearly reveal, the people were hardly ready or willing to repent. Therefore, Isaiah's preaching was not needed to prevent repentance! Verse 10b reflects the people's attitude and might be paraphrased accordingly: "Otherwise they might see with their eyes, hear with their ears, understand with their mind, repent, and be restored, and they certainly wouldn't want that, would they?" Of course, this sarcastic statement may also reveal that the Lord himself is now bent on judgment, not reconciliation. Just as Pharaoh's rejection of Yahweh's ultimatum ignited judgment and foreclosed, at least temporarily, any opportunity for repentance, so the Lord may have come to the point where he has decreed to bring judgment before opening the door for repentance once more. The sarcastic statement in verse 10b would be an emphatic way of making this clear. (Perhaps we could expand our paraphrase: "Otherwise they might...repent, and be restored, and they certainly wouldn't want that, would they? Besides, it's too late for that!") Within this sarcastic framework, verse 10a must also be seen as ironic. As in verse 9 the imperatival forms should be taken as rhetorical and as anticipating the people's response. One might paraphrase: "Your preaching will desensitize the minds of these people, make their hearing dull, and

‡‡ sn: Some understand "feet" here as a euphemistic reference to the genitals. ‡†† tn: Some have seen a reference to the Trinity in the seraphs' threefold declaration, "holy, holy, holy." This proposal has no linguistic or contextual basis and should be dismissed as allegorical. Hebrew sometimes uses repetition for emphasis. (See IBHS 233-34 §12.5a; and GKC 431-32 §133. k.) By repeating the word "holy," the seraphs emphasize the degree of the Lord's holiness. For another example of threefold repetition for emphasis, see Ezek 21:27 (Heb. v. 32). (Perhaps Jer 22:29 provides another example.) sn: Or "The Lord who commands armies has absolute sovereign authority!" The basic sense of the word "holy" is "set apart from that which is commonplace, special, unique." In this context the Lord's holiness is first and foremost his transcendent sovereignty as the ruler of the world. He is "set apart" from the world over which he rules. Note the emphasis on the elevated position of his throne in v. 1 and his designation as "the king" in v. 5. At the same time his holiness encompasses his moral authority, which derives from his royal position. As king he has the right to dictate to his subjects how they are to live; indeed his very own character sets the standard for proper behavior. He is "set apart" from his subjects in a moral sense as well. He sets the standard; they fall short of it. Note that in v. 5 Isaiah laments that he is morally unworthy to be in the king's presence. ‡‡† tn: Perhaps in this context, the title has a less militaristic connotation and pictures the Lord as the ruler of the heavenly assembly. See the note at 1:9. § tn: On the phrase אֲנִי אֲנִי אֲנִי

†† tn: The Hebrew term translated "sovereign master" here and in vv. 14, 19 is מְלֹךְ ‡ tn: Heb "Ephraim will be too shattered to be a nation"; NIV "to be a people." sn: This statement is problematic for several reasons. It seems to intrude stylistically, interrupting the symmetry of the immediately preceding and following lines. Furthermore, such a long range prophecy lacks punch in the midst of the immediate crisis. After all, even if Israel were destroyed sometime within the next 65 years, a lot could still happen during that time, including the conquest of Judah and the demise of the Davidic family. Finally the significance of the time frame is uncertain. Israel became an Assyrian province within the next 15 years and ceased to exist as a nation. For these reasons many regard the statement as a later insertion, but why a later editor would include the reference to "65 years" remains a mystery. Some try to relate the prophecy to the events alluded to in Ezra 4:2, 10, which refers to how the Assyrian kings Esarhaddon and Ashurbanipal settled foreigners in former Israelite territory, perhaps around 670 B.C.

†† tn: Heb "if you do not believe, you will not endure." The verb forms are second plural; the Lord here addresses the entire Davidic family and court. (Verse 4 was addressed to the king.) "Believe" ( תִּאֱמֵן תִּאֱמֵן אֲמֵן †† tn: Heb "Make it as deep as Sheol or make it high upwards." The subject is unexpressed, but the reference to "my God" at the end of the verse indicates the prophet is speaking. § tn: The verb is second plural in form, because the prophet addresses the whole family of David. He continues to use the plural in v. 14 (with one exception, see the notes on that verse), but then switches back to the second singular (addressing Ahaz specifically) in vv. 16-17. §† tn: Heb "house." See the note at v. 2. §†† sn: The address to the "house of David" is designed to remind Ahaz and his royal court of the protection promised to them through the Davidic covenant. It is very likely that Isaiah pointed to a woman who was present at the scene of the prophet's interview with Ahaz. Isaiah's address to the "house of David" and his use of second plural forms suggests other people were present, and his use of the second feminine singular verb form ("you will name") later in the verse is best explained if addressed to a woman who is present. §† tn: Traditionally, "virgin." Because this verse from Isaiah is quoted in Matt 1:23 in connection with Jesus' birth, the Isaiah passage has been regarded since the earliest Christian times as a prophecy of Christ's virgin birth. Much debate has taken place over the best way to translate this Hebrew term, although ultimately one's view of the doctrine of the virgin birth of Christ is unaffected. ‡† tn: Heb "days" (so KJV, NAB); NASB, NRSV "such days." ‡‡ sn: Initially the prophecy appears to be a message of salvation. Immanuel seems to have a positive ring to it, sour milk and honey elsewhere symbolize prosperity and blessing (see Deut 32:13-14; Job 20:17), verse 16 announces the defeat of Judah's enemies, and verse 17a could be taken as predicting a return to the glorious days of David and Solomon. However, the message turns sour in verses 17b-25. God will be with his people in judgment, as well as salvation. The curds and honey will be signs of deprivation, not prosperity, the relief announced in verse 16 will be short-lived, and the new era will be characterized by unprecedented humiliation, not a return to glory. Because of Ahaz's refusal to trust the Lord, potential blessing would be transformed into a curse, just as Isaiah turns an apparent prophecy of salvation into a message of judgment. Because the words "the king of Assyria" are rather awkwardly tacked on to the end of the sentence, some regard them as a later addition. However, the very awkwardness facilitates the prophet's rhetorical strategy here, as he suddenly turns what sounds like a positive message into a judgment speech. Actually, "the king of Assyria," stands in apposition to the earlier object "days," and specifies who the main character of these coming "days" will be. ‡‡† tn: Heb "in that day" (so KJV). The metaphors are well chosen, for the Assyrians (symbolized by the bees) were much more powerful and dangerous than the Egyptians (symbolized by the flies). Nevertheless both would put pressure on Judah, for Egypt wanted Judah as a buffer state against Assyrian aggression, while Assyrian wanted it as a base for operations against Egypt. Following the reference to sour milk and honey, the metaphor is especially apt, for flies are attracted to dairy products and bees can be found in the vicinity of honey. § tn: Heb "and shall rest" (so KJV, ASV); NASB, NIV, NRSV "and settle." §† tn: The meaning of this word (לָלַךְ

Eventually Immanuel would be forced to eat sour milk and honey, which would enable him to make correct moral decisions. How would this situation come about and how would it constitute a sign? Before this situation developed, the Israelites and Syrians would be defeated. But then the Lord would usher in a period of time unlike any since the division of the kingdom almost 200 years before. The Assyrians would overrun the land, destroy the crops, and force the people to subsist on goats' milk and honey. At that time, as the people saw Immanuel eating his sour milk and honey, the Davidic family would be forced to acknowledge that God was indeed with them. He was present with them in the Syrian-Israelite crisis, fully capable of rescuing them; but he was also present with them in judgment, disciplining them for their lack of trust. The moral of the story is quite clear: Failure to appropriate God's promises by faith can turn

The metaphor changes here from raging flood to predatory bird. §†† sn: The appearance of the name Immanuel ("God is with us") is ironic at this point, for God is present with his people in judgment. Immanuel is addressed here as if he has already been born and will see the judgment occur. This makes excellent sense if his birth has just been recorded. There are several reasons for considering Immanuel and Maher-Shalal-Hash-Baz one and the same. 8:3 is a birth account which could easily be understood as recording the fulfillment of the birth prophecy of 7:14. The presence of a formal record/witnesses ( 8:1-2) suggests a sign function for the child (cf. 7:14). As in 7:14-16, the removal of Judah's enemies would take place before the child reached a specified age (cf. 8:4). Both 7:17-25 and 8:7-8 speak of an Assyrian invasion of Judah which would follow the defeat of Israel/Syria. The major objection to this view is the fact that different names appear, but such a phenomenon is not without parallel in the OT (cf. Gen 35:18). The name Immanuel may emphasize the basic fact of God's presence, while the name Maher focuses on the specific nature of God's involvement. In 7:14 the mother is viewed as naming the child, while in 8:3 Isaiah is instructed to give the child's name, but one might again point to Gen 35:18 for a precedent. The sign child's age appears to be different in 8:4 than in 7:15-16, but 7:15-16 pertains to the judgment on Judah, as well as the defeat of Israel/Syria (cf. vv. 17-25), while 8:4 deals only with the downfall of Israel/Syria. Some argue that the suffixed form "your land" in 8:8 points to a royal referent (a child of Ahaz or the Messiah), but usage elsewhere shows that the phrase does not need to be so restricted. While the suffix can refer to the king of a land (cf. Num 20:17; 21:22; Deut 2:27; Judg 11:17, 19; 2 Sam 24:13; 1 Kgs 11:22; Isa 14:20), it can also refer to one who is a native of a particular land (cf. Gen 12:1; 32:9; Jonah 1:8). (See also the use of "his land" in Isa 13:14 [where the suffix refers to a native of a land] and 37:7 [where it refers to a king].) §† tn: The verb רָעַע

§†† tn: The imperative form ( Heb "be shattered") is rhetorical and expresses the speaker's firm conviction of the outcome of the nations' attack. See the note on "be broken." §† tn: The initial imperative ("get ready for battle") acknowledges the reality of the nations' hostility; the concluding imperative ( Heb "be shattered") is rhetorical and expresses the speakers' firm conviction of the outcome of the nations' attack. (See the note on "be broken.") One could paraphrase, "Okay, go ahead and prepare for battle since that's what you want to do, but your actions will backfire and you'll be shattered." This rhetorical use of the imperatives is comparable to saying to a child who is bent on climbing a high tree, "Okay, go ahead, climb the tree and break your arm!" What this really means is: "Okay, go ahead and climb the tree since that's what you really want to do, but your actions will backfire and you'll break your arm." The repetition of the statement in the final two lines of the verse gives the challenge the flavor of a taunt (ancient Israelite "trash talking," as it were).

† tn: Heb "speak a word, but it will not stand." †† sn: In these vv. 9-10 the tone shifts abruptly from judgment to hope. Hostile nations like Assyria may attack God's people, but eventually they will be destroyed, for God is with his people, sometimes to punish, but ultimately to vindicate. In addition to being a reminder of God's presence in the immediate crisis faced by Ahaz and Judah, Immanuel (whose name is echoed in this concluding statement) was a guarantee of the nation's future greatness in fulfillment of God's covenantal promises. Eventually God would deliver his people from the hostile nations (vv. 9-10) through another child, an ideal Davidic ruler who would embody God's presence in a special way (see 9:6-7). Jesus the Messiah is the fulfillment of the Davidic ideal prophesied by Isaiah, the one whom Immanuel foreshadowed. Through the miracle of the incarnation he is literally "God with us." Matthew realized this and applied Isaiah's ancient prophecy of Immanuel's birth to Jesus ( Matt 1:22-23). The first Immanuel was a reminder to the people of God's presence and a guarantee of a greater child to come who would manifest God's presence in an even greater way. The second Immanuel is "God with us" in a heightened and infinitely superior sense. He "fulfills" Isaiah's Immanuel prophecy by bringing the typology intended by God to realization and by filling out or completing the pattern designed by God. Of course, in the ultimate fulfillment of the type, the incarnate Immanuel's mother must be a virgin, so Matthew uses a Greek term ( παρθένοσ parthenos

‡† tn: Heb "to [the] instruction and to [the] testimony." The words "then you must recall" are supplied in the translation for stylistic reasons. In the Hebrew text vv. 19-20a are one long sentence, reading literally, "When they say to you..., to the instruction and to the testimony." On the identity of the "instruction" and "testimony" see the notes at v. 16. ‡‡ tn: Heb "If they do not speak according to this word, [it is] because it has no light of dawn." The literal translation suggests that "this word" refers to the instruction/testimony. However, it is likely that אֶל־מֶנְעַם

‡‡† tn: Heb "he will pass through it." The subject of the collective singular verb is the nation. (See the preceding note.) The immediately preceding context supplies no antecedent for "it" (a third feminine singular suffix in the Hebrew text); the suffix may refer to the land, which would be a reasonable referent with a verb of motion. Note also that אָרַח

So one could translate, "Indeed there will be no gloom for the land which was anxious." In this case the statement introduces the positive message to follow. Some assume an emendation of אֶל־ל' 17 ל' 7 ל' 7

§† tn: The Lord must be understood as the subject of the two verbs in this verse. §§† sn: The statement probably alludes to the Assyrian conquest of Israel in ca. 734-733 B.C.

§§† tn: Heb Just as in earlier times he humiliated..., [in] the latter times he has brought honor." The main verbs in vv. 1b-4 are Hebrew perfects. The prophet takes his rhetorical stance in the future age of restoration and describes future events as if they have already occurred. To capture the dramatic effect of the original text, the translation uses the English present or present perfect. §§§ sn: These three geographical designations may refer to provinces established by the Assyrians in 734-733 B.C.

(To do so would be theologically problematic, for the "Son" is the messianic king and is distinct in his person from God the "Father.") Perhaps this is a bizarre picture of an ox growing so fat that it breaks the yoke around its neck or can no longer fit into its yoke. If a belt worn outside the robe is in view, then the point might be that justice/integrity will be readily visible or that these qualities will give support to his rule. If an undergarment is in view, then the idea might be that these characteristics support his rule or that they are basic to everything else. 19 tn: The verb גָּרָה

 just because the club that beat you has been broken§‡

† tn: Heb "I will sweep her away with the broom of destruction."†† sn: Having announced the downfall of the Chaldean empire, the Lord appends to this prophecy a solemn reminder that the Assyrians, the major Mesopotamian power of Isaiah's day, would be annihilated, foreshadowing what would subsequently happen to Babylon and the other hostile nations. ‡ tn: Heb "to break Assyria." ‡† tn: Heb "him." This is a collective singular referring to the nation, or a reference to the king of Assyria who by metonymy stands for the entire nation. ‡‡ tn: Heb "and his [i.e., Assyria's] yoke will be removed from them [the people?], and his [Assyria's] burden from his [the nation's?] shoulder will be removed." There are no antecedents in this oracle for the suffixes in the phrases "from them" and "from his shoulder." Since the Lord's land and hills are referred to in the preceding line and the statement seems to echo 10:27, it is likely that God's people are the referents of the suffixes; the translation uses "my people" to indicate this. ‡†† tn: Heb "and this is the hand that is outstretched over all the nations." ‡‡‡ tn: Or "For" (KJV, NASB, NIV, NRSV). § tn: Heb "His hand is outstretched and who will turn it back?" §† sn: Perhaps 715 B.C. §†† tn: Heb "this oracle came." §‡ sn: The identity of this "club" (also referred to as a "serpent" in the next line) is uncertain. It may refer to an Assyrian king, or to Ahaz. For discussion see J. N. Oswalt, Isaiah (NICOT), 1:331-32. The viper/adder referred to in the second half of the verse is his successor. §†† tn: Heb "flying burning one." The designation "burning one" may allude to the serpent's appearance or the effect of its poisonous bite. (See the note at 6:2.) The qualifier "flying" probably refers to the serpent's quick, darting movements, though one might propose a homonym here, meaning "biting." (See J. N. Oswalt, Isaiah [NICOT], 1:332, n. 18.) Some might think in terms of a mythological flying, fire breathing dragon (cf. NAB "a flying saraph"; CEV "a flying fiery dragon"), but this proposal does not make good sense in 30:6, where the phrase "flying burning one" appears again in a list of desert animals. §† tc: The Hebrew text has, "the firstborn of the

Perhaps the prophet, playing the role of a panic stricken Moabite refugee, requests the leaders of Judah (the imperatives are plural) to take pity on the fugitives. ††† tn: Heb “Make your shade like night in the midst of noonday.” “Shade” here symbolizes shelter, while the heat of noonday represents the intense suffering of the Moabites. 20 The LORD revealed the following message during the year in which King Sargon of Assyria sent his commanding general to Ashdod, and he fought against it and captured it. 212 At that time the LORD announced through22 Isaiah son of Amoz : "Go, remove the sackcloth from your waist and take your sandals off your feet." He did as instructed and walked around in undergarments23 and barefoot. 3 Later the LORD explained, "In the same way that my servant Isaiah has walked around in undergarments and barefoot for the past three years, as an object lesson and omen pertaining to Egypt and Cush, 4 so the king of Assyria will lead away the captives of Egypt and the exiles of Cush, both young and old. They will be in undergarments and barefoot, with the buttocks exposed; the Egyptians will be publicly humiliated. 245 Those who put their hope in Cush and took pride in Egypt will be afraid and embarrassed. 256 At that time26 those who live on this coast27 will say, 'Look what has happened to our source of hope to whom we fled for help, expecting to be rescued from the king of Assyria ! How can we escape now?'"

21 Here is a message about the Desert by the Sea 28

§§† tn: The text could be translated, "and Egypt will serve Assyria" (cf. NAB), but subjugation of one nation to the other does not seem to be a theme in vv. 23-25. Rather the nations are viewed as equals before the Lord (v. 25). Therefore it is better to take אָרָץ

§§§ tn: Heb "will be a blessing" (so NCV). 18 tn: Or "land" (KJV, NAB). 19 tn: Heb "which the Lord who commands armies [traditionally, the Lord of hosts] will bless [it], saying." The third masculine singular suffix on the form בְּרַכְוּ

אָרָץ
 20 tn: Or "my inheritance" (NAB, NASB, NIV). 21 tn: Heb "In the year the commanding general came to Ashdod, when Sargon king of Assyria sent him, and he fought against Ashdod and captured it." sn: This probably refers to the Assyrian campaign against Philistia in 712 or 711 B.C. 22 tn: Heb "spoke by the hand of." 23 tn: The word used here (עָרוֹם)

עָרוֹם
 24 tn: Heb "lightly dressed and barefoot, and bare with respect to the buttocks, the nakedness of Egypt." 25 tn: Heb "and they will be afraid and embarrassed because of Cush their hope and Egypt their beauty." 26 tn: Heb "in that day" (so KJV). 27 sn: This probably refers to the coastal region of Philistia (cf. TEV). 28 sn: The phrase is quite cryptic, at least to the modern reader. Verse 9 seems to indicate that this message pertains to Babylon. Southern Mesopotamia was known as the Sealand in ancient times, because of its proximity to the Persian Gulf. Perhaps the reference to Babylon as a "desert" foreshadows the destruction that would overtake the city, making it like a desolate desert.

Like strong winds blowing in the south, †
one invades from the desert,
from a land that is feared.

2 I have received a distressing message :††

"The deceiver deceives,
the destroyer destroys.

Attack, you Elamites !
Lay siege, you Medes !

I will put an end to all the groaning!" ‡

3 For this reason my stomach churns; ‡ cramps overwhelm me
like the contractions of a woman in labor.

I am disturbed‡‡ by what I hear, horrified by what I see.

4 My heart palpitates, ‡‡

I shake in fear; ‡‡
the twilight I desired
has brought me terror.

5 Arrange the table,
lay out<sup>s</sup> the carpet,
eat and drink !‡†

Get up, you officers, smear oil on the shields! ‡††

6 For this is what the sovereign master‡‡ has told me:
"Go, post a guard!

He must report what he sees.

7 When he sees chariots, teams of horses, ‡†† riders on donkeys,
riders on camels,
he must be alert,
very alert."

8 Then the guard‡† cries out :

"On the watchtower, O sovereign master, ‡‡
I stand all day long;

at my post
I am stationed every night.

9 Look what's coming !

† tn: Or "in the Negev" (NASB). †† tn: Heb "a severe revelation has been related to me." ‡ sn: This is often interpreted to mean "all the groaning" that Babylon has caused others. ‡† tn: Heb "my waist is filled with shaking [or "anguish"]." ‡‡ tn: Or perhaps, "bent over [in pain]"; cf. NRSV "I am bowed down." ‡†† tn: Heb "wanders," perhaps here, "is confused." ‡‡‡ tn: Heb "shuddering terrifies me." § tn: The precise meaning of the verb in this line is debated. Some prefer to derive the form from the homonymic <sup>צפ</sup>

§† tn: The verbal forms in the first three lines are infinitives absolute, which are functioning here as finite verbs. It is uncertain if the forms should have an imperatival or indicative/descriptive force here. §†† sn: Smearing the shields with oil would make them more flexible and effective in battle. See J. N. Oswalt, Isaiah (NICOT), 1:394. §‡ tn: The Hebrew term translated "sovereign master" here and in vv. 8, 16 is <sup>אֲדָנִי</sup> ‡†† tn: Or "a pair of horsemen." ‡† tn: The Hebrew text has, "the lion," but this makes little sense here. <sup>אֲרִיָּה</sup>

a team of horses." ‡‡†

When questioned, he replies, ‡‡‡

"Babylon has fallen, fallen !

All the idols of her gods lie shattered on the ground!"

10 O my downtrodden people, crushed like stalks on the threshing floor, ‡‡‡

what I have heard from the LORD who commands armies,

the God of Israel,

I have reported to you.

Bad News for Seir

11 Here is a message about Dumah :<sup>18</sup>

Someone calls to me from Seir, <sup>19</sup>

12 The watchman replies,

" Morning is coming, but then night. <sup>21</sup>

If you want to ask, ask;

come back again." <sup>22</sup>

The Lord Will Judge Arabia

13 Here is a message about Arabia :

In the thicket of Arabia you spend the night,
you Dedanite caravans.

14 Bring out some water for the thirsty.

You who live in the land of Tema,
bring some food for the fugitives.

15 For they flee from the swords –
from the drawn sword

and from the battle-ready bow

and from the severity of the battle.

16 For this is what the sovereign master<sup>23</sup> has told me : "Within exactly one year<sup>24</sup> all the splendor of Kedar will come to an end. <sup>17</sup> Just a handful of archers, the warriors of Kedar, will be left." <sup>25</sup> Indeed, <sup>26</sup> the LORD God of Israel has spoken.

‡‡† tn: Or "[with] teams of horses," or perhaps, "with a pair of horsemen." ‡‡‡ tn: Heb "and he answered and said" (so KJV, ASV). ‡‡‡ tn: Heb "My trampled one, and the son of the threshing floor." <sup>18</sup> tn: The noun <sup>דומה</sup>

דומה

19 sn: Seir is another name for Edom. See BDB 973 s.v. <sup>20</sup> <sup>שְׂעִיר</sup> sn: The "night" probably here symbolizes distress and difficult times. See BDB 539 s.v. <sup>21</sup> <sup>לַיְלָה</sup> sn: Dumah will experience some relief, but it will be short-lived as night returns. <sup>22</sup> sn: The point of the watchman's final instructions ("if you want to ask, ask; come again") is unclear. Perhaps they are included to add realism to the dramatic portrayal. The watchman sends the questioner away with the words, "Feel free to come back and ask again." <sup>23</sup> tn: The Hebrew term translated "sovereign master" here is <sup>אֲדָנִי</sup> <sup>24</sup> tn: Heb "in still a year, like the years of a hired worker." See the note at 16:14. <sup>25</sup> tn: Heb "and the remnant of the number of the bow, the mighty men of the sons of Kedar, will be few." <sup>26</sup> tn: Or "for" (KJV, ASV, NAB, NASB, NRSV).

22 Here is a message about the Valley of Vision:†
 What is the reason†† that all of you go up to the rooftops?
 2 The noisy city is full of raucous sounds;
 the town is filled with revelry.‡
 Your slain were not cut down by the sword;
 they did not die in battle.‡‡‡ ‡
 All your leaders ran away together –
 they fled to a distant place;
 all your refugees‡‡‡ were captured together – they were captured without a single arrow being shot. ‡‡
 4 So I say:
 “Don’t look at me!§
 I am weeping bitterly.
 Don’t try§† to console me concerning the destruction of my defenseless people.” §††
 5 For the sovereign master,§‡ the LORD who commands armies,
 has planned a day of panic, defeat, and confusion. §‡†† In the Valley of Vision§† people shout§‡ and cry out to the hill. §‡†

† sn: The following message pertains to Jerusalem. The significance of referring to the city as the Valley of Vision is uncertain. Perhaps the Hinnom Valley is in view, but why it is associated with a prophetic revelatory “vision” is not entirely clear. Maybe the Hinnom Valley is called this because the destruction that will take place there is the focal point of this prophetic message (see v. 5). †† tn: Heb “What to you, then?” ‡ tn: Heb “the boisterous town.” The phrase is parallel to “the noisy city” in the preceding line. ‡† sn: Apparently they died from starvation during the siege that preceded the final conquest of the city. See J. N. Oswalt, Isaiah (NICOT), 1:409. ‡‡ tn: Verse 3 reads literally, “All your leaders ran away, apart from a bow they were captured, all your found ones were captured together, to a distant place they fled.” J. N. Oswalt (Isaiah [NICOT], 1:403, n. 3) suggests that the lines of the verse are arranged chiasmatically; lines 1 and 4 go together, while lines 2 and 3 are parallel. To translate the lines in the order they appear in the Hebrew text is misleading to the English reader, who is likely unfamiliar with, or at least insensitive to, chiasmatic parallelism. Consequently, the translation above arranges the lines as follows: line 1 (Hebrew) = line 1 (in translation); line 2 (Hebrew) = line 4 (in translation); line 3 (Hebrew) = line 3 (in translation); line 4 (Hebrew) = line 2 (in translation). ‡†† tn: Heb “all your found ones.” To achieve tighter parallelism (see “your leaders”) some prefer to emend the form to אָמְצִיךָ

‡‡‡ tn: Heb “apart from [i.e., without] a bow they were captured”; cf. NAB, NRSV “without the use of a bow.” § tn: Heb “look away from me” (so KJV, ASV, NRSV). §† tn: Heb “don’t hurry” (so NCV). §†† tn: Heb “the daughter of my people.” “Daughter” is here used metaphorically to express the speaker’s emotional attachment to his people, as well as their vulnerability and weakness. §‡ tn: The Hebrew term translated “sovereign master” here and in vv. 12, 14, 15 is אֲדֹנָי §‡† tn: Heb “For [there is] a day of panic, and trampling, and confusion for the master, the Lord who commands armies [traditionally, the Lord of hosts].” §† tn: The traditional accentuation of the Hebrew text suggests that this phrase goes with what precedes. §‡ tn: The precise meaning of this statement is unclear. Some take אֶל הַהַר

6 The Elamites picked up the quiver, and came with chariots and horsemen; §‡‡
 the men of Kir§‡§§ prepared<sup>18</sup> the shield. <sup>19</sup> 7 Your very best valleys were full of chariots; <sup>20</sup> horsemen confidently took their positions<sup>21</sup> at the
 At that time<sup>24</sup> you looked for the weapons in the House of the Forest. <sup>25</sup> 9 You saw the many breaks in the walls of the city of David; <sup>26</sup>
 you stored up water in the lower pool.
 10 You counted the houses in Jerusalem, <sup>27</sup> and demolished houses so you could have material to reinforce the wall. <sup>28</sup> 11 You made a reservoir between the two walls for the water of the old pool – but you did not trust in<sup>29</sup> the one who made it;<sup>30</sup> you did not depend on<sup>31</sup> the one who formed it long ago!
 12 At that time the sovereign master, the LORD who commands armies, called for weeping and mourning, for shaved heads and sackcloth. <sup>32</sup>
 13 But look, there is outright celebration! <sup>33</sup>
 You say, “Kill the ox and slaughter the sheep, eat meat and drink wine.
 Eat and drink, for tomorrow we die!” <sup>34</sup>
 14 The LORD who commands armies told me this:<sup>35</sup>
 “Certainly this sin will not be forgiven as long as you

§‡‡ tn: Heb “[with] the chariots of men, horsemen.” §‡§§ sn: A distant region in the direction of Mesopotamia; see Amos 1:5; 9:7. <sup>18</sup> tn: Heb “Kir uncovers” (so NAB, NIV). <sup>19</sup> sn: The Elamites and men of Kir may here symbolize a fierce army from a distant land. If this oracle anticipates a Babylonian conquest of the city (see 39:5-7), then the Elamites and men of Kir are perhaps viewed here as mercenaries in the Babylonian army. See J. N. Oswalt, Isaiah (NICOT), 1:410. <sup>20</sup> tn: The verb that introduces this verse serves as a discourse particle and is untranslated; see note on “in the future” in 2:2. <sup>21</sup> tn: Heb “taking a stand, take their stand.” The infinitive absolute emphasizes the following finite verb. The translation attempts to bring out this emphasis with the adverb “confidently.” <sup>22</sup> tn: Heb “he,” i.e., the enemy invader. NASB, by its capitalization of the pronoun, takes this to refer to the Lord. <sup>23</sup> tn: Heb “covering.” <sup>24</sup> tn: Heb “in that day” (so KJV), likewise at the beginning of v. 12. <sup>25</sup> sn: Perhaps this refers to a royal armory, or to Solomon’s “House of the Forest of Lebanon,” where weapons may have been kept (see 1 Kgs 10:16-17). <sup>26</sup> tn: Heb “the breaks of the city of David, you saw that they were many.” <sup>27</sup> map: For location see . <sup>28</sup> tn: Heb “you demolished the houses to fortify the wall.” <sup>29</sup> tn: Heb “look at”; NAB, NRSV “did not look to.” <sup>30</sup> tn: The antecedent of the third feminine singular suffix here and in the next line is unclear. The closest feminine noun is “pool” in the first half of the verse. Perhaps this “old pool” symbolizes the entire city, which had prospered because of God’s provision and protection through the years. <sup>31</sup> tn: Heb “did not see.” <sup>32</sup> tn: Heb “for baldness and the wearing of sackcloth.” See the note at 15:2. <sup>33</sup> tn: Heb “happiness and joy.” <sup>34</sup> tn: The prophet here quotes what the fatalistic people are saying. The introductory “you say” is supplied in the translation for clarification; the concluding verb “we die” makes it clear the people are speaking. The six verbs translated as imperatives are actually infinitives absolute, functioning here as finite verbs. <sup>35</sup> tn: Heb “it was revealed in my ears [by?] the Lord who commands armies [traditionally, the Lord of hosts].”

15 This is what the sovereign master, the LORD who commands armies, says :

"Go visit this administrator, Shebna, who supervises the palace, †† and tell him: ‡

16' What right do you have to be here ? What relatives do you have buried here ?††

Why‡ do you chisel out a tomb for yourself here ? He chisels out his burial site in an elevated place, he carves out his tomb on a cliff.

17 Look, the LORD will throw you far away, ††† you mere man !‡††

He will wrap you up tightly. §

18 He will wind you up tightly into a ball and throw you into a wide, open land. §†

There you will die, and there with you will be your impressive chariots, §††

which bring disgrace to the house of your master. §†

19 I will remove you from§†† your office; you will be thrown down§† from your position.

20 " At that time§† I will summon my servant Eliakim, son of Hilkiah. 21 I will put your robe on him, tie your belt around him, and transfer your authority to him. §†† He will become a protector of§§§ the residents of Jerusalem and of the people§§§ of Judah. 22 I will place the key<sup>18</sup> to the house of David on his shoulder. When he opens the door, no one can close it; when he closes

† tn: Heb "Certainly this sin will not be atoned for until you die." This does not imply that their death will bring atonement; rather it emphasizes that their sin is unpardonable. The statement has the form of an oath. †† tn: Heb "who is over the house" (so ASV); NASB "who is in charge of the royal household." ‡ tn: The words "and tell him" are supplied in the translation for clarification. ‡† tn: Heb "What to you here? And who to you here?" The point of the second question is not entirely clear. The interpretation reflected in the translation is based on the following context, which suggests that Shebna has no right to think of himself so highly and arrange such an extravagant burial place for himself. ‡†† tn: Heb "that you chisel out." ‡††† tn: Heb "will throw you with a throwing." ‡†††† tn: Heb "O man" (so NASB); NAB "mortal man"; NRSV "my fellow." § tn: Heb "and the one who wraps you [will] wrap." §† tn: Heb "and he will tightly [or "surely"] wind you [with] winding like a ball, to a land broad of hands [i.e., "sides"]." §††† tn: Heb "and there the chariots of your splendor." §† sn: Apparently the reference to chariots alludes to Shebna's excessive pride, which in turn brings disgrace to the royal family. §††† tn: Heb "I will push you away from." §†††† tn: Heb "he will throw you down." The shift from the first to third person is peculiar and abrupt, but certainly not unprecedented in Hebrew poetry. See GKC 462 §144. p. The third person may be indefinite ("one will throw you down"), in which case the passive translation is justified. §††††† tn: Heb "in that day." The verb that introduces this verse serves as a discourse particle and is untranslated; see note on "in the future" in 2:2. §§††††† tn: Heb "and your dominion I will place in his hand." §§†††††† tn: Heb "a father to." The Hebrew term גַּב

25 " At that time," 24 says the LORD who commands armies, "the peg fastened into a solid place will come loose. It will be cut off and fall, and the load hanging on it will be cut off." 25 Indeed, 26 the LORD has spoken.

19 sn: The metaphor depicts how secure his position will be. 20 tn: Heb "and he will become a glorious throne for the house of his father." 21 tn: Heb "and all the glory of the house of his father they will hang on him." The Lord returns to the peg metaphor of v. 23a. Eliakim's secure position of honor will bring benefits and jobs to many others in the family. 22 tn: The precise meaning and derivation of this word are uncertain. Cf. KJV, ASV, NRSV "the issue"; CEV "relatives." 23 tn: Heb "all the small vessels, from the vessels that are bowls to all the vessels that are jars." The picture is that of a single peg holding the weight of all kinds of containers hung from it. 24 tn: Or "In that day" (KJV). 25 sn: Eliakim's authority, though seemingly secure, will eventually be removed, and with it his family's prominence. 26 tn: Or "for" (KJV, NAB, NASB, NRSV). 27 tn: Heb "ships of Tarshish." This probably refers to large ships either made in or capable of traveling to the distant western port of Tarshish. 28 tc: The Hebrew text reads literally, "for it is destroyed, from a house, from entering." Apparently in vv. 15-16a an unidentified group responds to the praise they hear in the west by exhorting others to participate. ‡† tn: Heb “Beauty belongs to the just one.” These words may summarize the main theme of the songs mentioned in the preceding line. ‡† sn: The prophet seems to contradict what he hears the group saying. Their words are premature because more destruction is coming. ‡†† tn: Heb “and [with] deception deceivers deceive.” tn: Verse 16b is a classic example of Hebrew wordplay. The literary structure of chap. 26 is not entirely clear. The chapter begins with an eschatological song of praise and ends with a lament and prophetic response (vv. 16-21). It is not certain where the song of praise ends or how vv. 7-15 fit into the structure. Verses 10-11a seem to lament the presence of evil and v. 11b anticipates the arrival of judgment, so it is possible that vv. 7-15 are a prelude to the lament and announcement that conclude the chapter. †† tc: The Hebrew text has, “upright, the path of the righteous you make level.” There are three possible ways to translate this line. The subject of the final verb ("does he strike down") would then be God, while the pronoun "him" would again refer to Israel. ‡† tn: The Hebrew text reads literally, "Or like the killing of his killed ones is he killed?" If one accepts the interpretation of the parallel line outlined in the previous note, then this line too would contain a rhetorical question suggesting that Israel has not experienced destruction to the same degree as its enemies. Evidence of this can be seen in the way farmers utilize divinely imparted wisdom to grow and harvest crops. God's dealings with his people will exhibit this same kind of wisdom and order. Judgment will be accomplished according to a divinely ordered timetable and, while severe enough, will not be excessive. Judgment must come, just as planting inevitably follows plowing. God will, as it were, thresh his people, but he will not crush them to the point where they will be of no use to him. † tn: Heb "Woe [to] Ariel." The meaning of the name "Ariel" is uncertain. The name may mean "altar hearth" (see v. 2) or, if compound, "lion of God." The name is used here as a title for Mount Zion/Jerusalem (see v. 8). †† tn: Heb "the town where David camped."  6 Judgment will come from the LORD who commands armies, †† accompanied by thunder, earthquake, and a loud noise, by a strong gale, a windstorm, and a consuming flame of fire.
 7 It will be like a dream, a night vision. There will be a horde from all the nations that fight against Ariel, those who attack her and her stronghold and besiege her.

Changes are Coming

<sup>17</sup> In just a very short time<sup>19</sup> Lebanon will turn into an orchard, and the orchard will be considered a forest. <sup>20</sup> <sup>18</sup> At that time<sup>21</sup> the deaf will be able to hear words read from a scroll, and the eyes of the blind will be able to see through deep darkness. <sup>22</sup>

the poor among humankind will take delight<sup>23</sup> in the

those who taunt will vanish, and all those who love to do wrong will be eliminated<sup>25</sup> -

who entrap the one who arbitrates at the city gate<sup>27</sup> and deprive the innocent of justice by making false charges. <sup>28</sup>

Abraham, says to the family of Jacob :<sup>29</sup>
"Jacob will no longer be ashamed;
their faces will no longer show their embarrassment.

<sup>23</sup> For when they see their children, whom I will produce among them,<sup>31</sup>
they will honor<sup>32</sup> my name.

They will honor the Holy One of Jacob; <sup>33</sup>
they will respect<sup>34</sup> the God of Israel.

those who complain will acquire insight. <sup>36</sup>

19 tn: The Hebrew text phrases this as a rhetorical question, "Is it not yet a little, a short [time]?" 20 sn: The meaning of this verse is debated, but it seems to depict a reversal in fortunes. The mighty forest of Lebanon (symbolic of the proud and powerful, see 2:13; 10:34) will be changed into a common orchard, while the common orchard (symbolic of the oppressed and lowly) will grow into a great forest. See J. N. Oswalt, Isaiah (NICOT), 1:538. 21 tn: Or "In that day" (KJV). 22 tn: Heb "and out of gloom and darkness the eyes of the blind will see." sn: Perhaps this depicts the spiritual transformation of the once spiritually insensitive nation (see vv. 10-12, cf. also 6:9-10). 23 tn: Or "will rejoice" (NIV, NCV, NLT). 24 sn: See the note on the phrase "the Holy One of Israel" in 1:4. 25 tn: Heb "and all the watchers of wrong will be cut off." 26 tn: Heb "the ones who make a man a sinner with a word." The Hiphil of אָדָּן

27 sn: Legal disputes were resolved at the city gate, where the town elders met. See Amos 5:10. 28 tn: Heb "and deprive by emptiness the innocent." 29 tn: Heb "So this is what the Lord says to the house of Jacob, the one who ransomed Abraham." The relative pronoun must refer back to "the Lord," not to the immediately preceding "Jacob." It is uncertain to what event in Abraham's experience this refers. Perhaps the name "Abraham" stands here by metonymy for his descendants through Jacob. If so, the Exodus is in view. 30 tn: Heb "and his face will no longer be pale." 31 tn: Heb "for when he sees his children, the work of my hands in his midst." 32 tn: Or "treat as holy" (also in the following line); NASB, NRSV "will sanctify." 33 sn: Holy One of Jacob is similar to the phrase "Holy One of Israel" common throughout Isaiah; see the sn 34 tn: Or "fear," in the sense of "stand in awe of."

 by snakes and darting adders,§†
 they transport§† their wealth on the backs of donkeys, their riches on the humps of camels,
 to a nation that cannot help them.§††
 7 Egypt is totally incapable of helping.§††
 For this reason I call her
 'Proud one§§§ who is silenced.'" 18

8 Now go, write it<sup>19</sup> down on a tablet in their presence,<sup>20</sup>
 inscribe it on a scroll,
 so that it might be preserved for a future time
 as an enduring witness.<sup>21</sup> 9 For these are rebellious people - they are lying children, children unwilling to obey the LORD's law.<sup>22</sup> 10 They<sup>23</sup> say to the visionaries, "See no more visions!"
 and to the seers, "Don't relate messages to us about what is right!<sup>24</sup> Tell us nice things, relate deceptive messages.<sup>25</sup> 11 Turn aside from the way, stray off the path.<sup>26</sup>
 Remove from our presence the Holy One of Israel."<sup>27</sup> 12 For this reason this is what the Holy One of Israel says:

 you trust instead in your ability to oppress and trick,<sup>29</sup> and rely on that kind of behavior.<sup>30</sup> 13 So this sin will become your downfall.

On the use of the preposition here, see DDB 86 s.v. II 21 אֶת sn: Recording the message will enable the prophet to use it in the future as evidence that God warned his people of impending judgment and clearly spelled out the nation's guilt. An official record of the message will also serve as proof of the prophet's authority as God's spokesman. 22 tn: Or perhaps, "instruction" (so NASB, NIV, NRSV); NCV, TEV "teachings." 23 tn: Heb "who" (so NASB, NRSV). A new sentence was started here in the translation for stylistic reasons. 24 tn: Heb "Do not see for us right things." 25 tn: Heb "Tell us smooth things, see deceptive things." 26 sn: The imagery refers to the way or path of truth, as revealed by God to the prophet. 27 sn: See the note on the phrase "the Holy One of Israel" in 1:4. 28 tn: The sentence actually begins with the word "because." In the Hebrew text vv. 12-13 are one long sentence. 29 tn: Heb "and you trust in oppression and cunning." 30 tn: Heb "and you lean on it"; NAB "and depend on it." 31 tn: The verse reads literally, "So this sin will become for you like a breach ready to fall, bulging on a high wall, the breaking of which comes suddenly, in a flash." Their sin produces guilt and will result in judgment. Like a wall that collapses their fall will be swift and sudden. 32 tn: Heb "Its shattering is like the shattering of a jug of [i.e., "made by"] potters, [so] shattered one cannot save [any of it]."

Among its fragments one cannot find a shard large enough†

 15 For this is what the master, the LORD, the Holy One of Israel says:
 “If you repented and patiently waited for me, you would be delivered;‡‡ if you calmly trusted in me you would find strength,‡‡ but you are unwilling.
 16 You say, ‘No, we will flee on horses,’ so you will indeed flee.
 You say, ‘We will ride on fast horses,’ so your pursuers will be fast.
 17 One thousand will scurry at the battle cry of one enemy soldier;‡‡‡ at the battle cry of five enemy soldiers you will all run away;‡‡‡ until the remaining few are as isolated§ as a flagpole on a mountaintop or a signal flag on a hill.”

The Lord Will Not Abandon His People

18 For this reason the LORD is ready to show you mercy;
 he sits on his throne, ready to have compassion on you.§† Indeed, the LORD is a just God;
 all who wait for him in faith will be blessed.§†† 19 For people will live in Zion;
 in Jerusalem§† you will weep no more.§††
 When he hears your cry of despair, he will indeed show you mercy;
 when he hears it, he will respond to you.§†

† tn: The words “large enough” are supplied in the translation for clarification. †† tn: Heb “to remove fire from the place of kindling.” ‡ tn: On the meaning of אָרָב

‡† tn: Heb “in returning and in quietness you will be delivered.” Many English versions render the last phrase “shall be saved” or something similar (e.g., NAB, NASB, NRSV). ‡‡ tn: Heb “in quietness and in trust is your strength” (NASB and NRSV both similar). ‡‡† tn: Heb “One thousand from before [or “because of”] one battle cry.” אֶחָדָּם

‡‡‡ tn: Heb “from before [or “because of”] the battle cry of five you will flee. § tn: Heb “until you are left” (so NAB, NASB, NRSV). §† tn: Heb “Therefore the Lord waits to show you mercy, and therefore he is exalted to have compassion on you.” The logical connection between this verse and what precedes is problematic. The point seems to be that Judah’s impending doom does not bring God joy. Rather the prospect of their suffering stirs within him a willingness to show mercy and compassion, if they are willing to seek him on his terms. §†† tn: Heb “Blessed are all who wait for him.” §‡ map: For location see . §†† tn: Heb “For people in Zion will live, in Jerusalem, you will weep no more.” The phrase “in Jerusalem” could be taken with what precedes. The number “seven” is used symbolically to indicate intensity. The exact meaning of the phrase “the light of seven days” is uncertain; it probably means “seven times brighter” (see the parallel line). 27 tn: Heb “the fracture of his people” (so NASB). sn: The Lord is here compared to a physician setting a broken bone in a bandage or cast. 28 tn: Heb “the injury of his wound.” The joining of synonyms emphasizes the severity of the wound. Another option is to translate, “the wound of his blow.” In this case the pronominal suffix might refer to the Lord, not the people, yielding the translation, “the wound which he inflicted.” 29 sn: The “name” of the Lord sometimes stands by metonymy for the Lord himself, see Exod 23:21; Lev 24:11; Pss 54:1 ( 54:3 HT); 124:8. In Isa 30:27 the point is that he reveals that aspect of his character which his name suggests – he

†† tn: Heb "his lips are full of anger, and his tongue is like consuming fire." The Lord's lips and tongue are used metonymically for his word (or perhaps his battle cry; see v. 31). † tn: Heb "his breath is like a flooding river." This might picture the Lord breathing heavily as he runs down his enemy, but in light of the preceding verse, which mentions his lips and tongue, "breath" probably stands metonymically for the word or battle cry that he expels from his mouth as he shouts. In Isa 34:16 and Ps 33:6 the Lord's "breath" is associated with his command. †† tn: Heb "shaking nations in a sieve of worthlessness." It is not certain exactly how מְשֻׁבֵּה

The Lord Will Defend Zion

 "The LORD will be like a growling lion,
 like a young lion growling over its prey. † Though a whole group of shepherds gathers against it,
 it is not afraid of their shouts or intimidated by their yelling. ††
 In this same way the LORD who commands armies will descend
 to do battle on Mount Zion and on its hill. ‡ <sup>5</sup> Just as birds hover over a nest, ‡† so the LORD who commands armies will protect Jerusalem. ‡
 He will protect and deliver it;
 as he passes over ‡†† he will rescue it.
<sup>6</sup> You Israelites ! Return to the one against whom you have so blatantly rebelled! ‡††<sup>7</sup> For at that time§ everyone will get rid of§† the silver and gold idols your hands sinfully made. ‡†† <sup>8</sup> Assyria will fall by a sword, but not one human-made; ‡
 a sword not made by humankind will destroy them. ‡††
 They will run away from this sword§† and their young men will be forced to do hard labor.
<sup>9</sup> They will surrender their stronghold§‡ because of fear, ‡††

† tn: Heb "As a lion growls, a young lion over its prey." In the Hebrew text the opening comparison is completed later in the verse ("so the Lord will come down..."), after a parenthesis describing how fearless the lion is. The present translation divides the verse into three sentences for English stylistic reasons. †† tn: Heb "Though there is summoned against it fullness of shepherds, by their voice it is not terrified, and to their noise it does not respond." ‡ tn: Some prefer to translate the phrase מַלְאָכִים נֹצֵרִים

The noun נֹצֵרִים

‡†† tn: Heb "Return to the one [against] whom the sons of Israel made deep rebellion." The syntax is awkward here. A preposition is omitted by ellipsis after the verb (see GKC 446 §138. f, n. 2), and there is a shift from direct address (note the second plural imperative "return") to the third person (note "they made deep"). For other examples of abrupt shifts in person in poetic style, see GKC 462 §144. p. § tn: Or "in that day" (KJV). ‡† tn: Heb "reject" (so NIV); NRSV, TEV, CEV, NLT "throw away." ‡†† tn: Heb "the idols of their idols of silver and their idols of gold which your hands made for yourselves [in] sin." אֱדֹלָתָם

reign,§† King Sennacherib of Assyria marched up against all the fortified cities of Judah and captured them. <sup>2</sup> The king of Assyria sent his chief adviser§†† from Lachish to King Hezekiah in Jerusalem, §† along with a large army. The chief adviser§† stood at the conduit of the upper pool which is located on the road to the field where they wash and dry cloth. <sup>§††3</sup> Eliakim son of Hilkiah, the palace supervisor, accompanied by Shebna the scribe and Joah son of Asaph, the secretary, went out to meet him.

is what the great king, the king of Assyria, says: "What is your source of confidence? <sup>§§†5</sup> Your claim to have a strategy and military strength is just empty talk. §§§ In whom are you trusting, that you would dare to rebel against me? <sup>6</sup> Look, you must be trusting in Egypt, that splintered reed staff. If someone leans on it for support, it punctures his hand and wounds him. That is what Pharaoh king of Egypt does to all who trust in him! <sup>7</sup> Perhaps you will tell me, 'We are trusting in the LORD our God.' But Hezekiah is the one who eliminated his high places and altars and then told the people of Judah and Jerusalem, 'You must worship at this altar.' <sup>8</sup> Now make a deal with my master the king of Assyria, and I will give you two thousand horses, provided you can find enough riders for them. <sup>9</sup> Certainly you will not refuse one of my master's minor officials and trust in Egypt for chariots and horsemen. <sup>1810</sup> Furthermore it was by the command of the LORD that I marched up against this land to destroy it. The LORD told me,
'March up against this land and destroy it!'" <sup>19</sup>

er, "Speak to your servants in Aramaic, <sup>20</sup> for we understand it. Don't speak with us in the Judahite dialect<sup>21</sup> in the hearing of the people who are on the wall." <sup>12</sup> But the chief adviser said, "My master did not send me to speak these words only to your master and to you. <sup>22</sup>
His message is also for the men who sit on the wall, for they will eat their own excrement and drink their own urine along with you!" <sup>23</sup>

<sup>13</sup> The chief adviser then stood there and called out loudly in the Judahite dialect, <sup>24</sup> "Listen to the message of the great king, the king of Assyria. <sup>14</sup> This is what

†† tn: The precise meaning of this line is uncertain. The text reads literally "and it is for them, the one who walks [on the] way." In this context those authorized to use the Way of Holiness would be morally upright people who are the recipients of God's deliverance, in contrast to the morally impure and foolish who are excluded from the new covenant community. ‡† tn: In this context "fools" are those who are morally corrupt, not those with limited intellectual capacity. ‡†† tn: Heb "will go up on

1:10). The statement may also be an ironic twist on the idiom "earth/dust on the head" (cf. 2 Sam 1:2; 13:19; 15:32; Job 2:12), referring to a mourning practice. §† tn: Heb "will overtake" (NIV); NLT "they at this point. The phrase "word of lips" refers to mere or empty talk in Prov 14:23. <sup>18</sup> tn: Heb "How can you turn back the face of an official [from among] the least of my master's servants and trust in Egypt for chariots and horsemen?" In vv. 8-9 the chief adviser develops further the argument begun in v. 6. His reasoning seems to be as follows: "In your weakened condition you obviously need military strength. Agree to the king's terms and I will personally give you more horses than you are capable of outfitting. If I, a mere minor official, am capable of giving you such military might, just think what power the king has. There is no way the Egyptians can match our strength. It makes much better sense to deal with us." <sup>19</sup> sn:

In v. 10 the chief adviser develops further the argument begun in v.
7. He claims that Hezekiah has offended the Lord and that the Lord has commissioned Assyria as his instrument of discipline and judgment. <sup>20</sup> sn: Aramaic was the diplomatic language of the Assyroan empire. <sup>21</sup> tn: Or "in Hebrew" (NIV, NCV, NLT); NAB, NASB "in send me to speak these words?" The rhetorical question expects a negative answer. <sup>23</sup> tn: Heb "[Is it] not [also] to the men...?" The rhetorical question expects the answer, "Yes, it is." sn: The chief adviser alludes to the horrible reality of siege warfare, when the starving people in the besieged city would resort to eating and drinking anything to stay alive. <sup>24</sup> tn: The Hebrew text includes "and he

For this is what the king of Assyria says, 'Send me a token of your submission and surrender to me.† Then each of you may eat from his own vine and fig tree and drink water from his own cistern, <sup>17</sup> until I come and take you to a land just like your own – a land of grain and new wine, a land of bread and vineyards. <sup>18</sup> Hezekiah is misleading you when he says, "The LORD will rescue us." Has any of the gods of the nations rescued his land from the power of the king of Assyria? ††<sup>19</sup> Where are the gods of Hamath and Arpad ? <sup>22</sup> Eliakim son of Hilkiyah, the palace supervisor, accompanied by Shebna the scribe and Joah son of Asaph, the secretary, went to Hezekiah with their clothes torn in grief††† and reported to him what the chief adviser had said.

37 When King Hezekiah heard this,<sup>5</sup> he tore his clothes, put on sackcloth, and went to the LORD's temple. <sup>2</sup> Eliakim the palace supervisor, Shebna the scribe, and the leading priests, <sup>5†</sup> clothed in sackcloth, sent this message to the prophet Isaiah son of Amoz: <sup>3</sup> " This is what Hezekiah says :<sup>5††</sup> 'This is a day of distress, insults, <sup>5†</sup> and humiliation, <sup>5††</sup> as when a baby is ready to leave the birth canal, but the mother lacks the strength to push it through. <sup>5†4</sup> Perhaps the LORD your God will hear all these things the chief adviser

 ††† tn: Heb "that they rescued Samaria from my hand?" But this gives the impression that the gods of Sepharvaim were responsible for protecting Samaria, which is obviously not the case. The implied subject of the plural verb "rescued" must be the generic "gods of the nations/lands" (vv. 18, 20). ††† tn: Heb "that the Lord might rescue Jerusalem from my hand?" <sup>5</sup> When King Hezekiah's servants came to Isaiah, <sup>6</sup> Isaiah said to them, "Tell your master this: 'This is what the LORD says : "Don't be afraid because of the things you have heard – these insults the king of Assyria's servants have hurled against me. <sup>5††7</sup> Look, I will take control of his mind;<sup>18</sup> he will receive a report and return to his own land.  39 At that time Merodach-Baladan son of Baladan, king of Babylon, sent letters and a gift to Hezekiah, for he heard that Hezekiah had been ill and had recovered. 2 Hezekiah welcomed<sup>28</sup> them and showed them his storehouse with its silver, gold, spices, and high-quality olive oil, as well as his whole armory and everything in his treasuries. Hezekiah showed them everything in his palace and in his whole kingdom. 29<sup>3</sup> Isaiah the prophet visited King Hezekiah and asked him, "What did these men say? Where do they come from?" See 2 Kgs 20:7-8. 27 tc: If original to Isaiah 38, vv. 21-22 have obviously been misplaced in the course of the text's transmission, and would most naturally be placed here, between Isa 38:6 and 38:7. See 2 Kgs 20:7-8, where these verses are placed at this point in the narrative, not at the end. Another possibility is that these verses were not in the original account, and a scribe, familiar with the 2 Kgs version of the story, appended vv. 21-22 to the end of the account in Isaiah 38. 28 tn: Heb "was happy with"; NAB, NASB "was pleased"; NIV "received the envoys gladly." 29 tn: Heb "there was nothing which Hezekiah did not show them in his house and in all his kingdom." 30 tn: Heb "he"; the referent (Isaiah) has been specified in the translation for clarity.

† tn: The rhetorical question is sarcastic. The sense is, "Who is foolish enough...?" †† tn: The pronoun "his" probably refers to the one who forms/casts an idol (v. 10), in which case it refers to the craftsman's associates in the idol-manufacturing guild. ‡ sn: The point seems to be this: If the idols are the mere products of human hands, then those who trust in them will be disappointed, for man-made gods are incapable of helping their "creators." †† tn: The noun מַצֵּבָה

22 tc: The verb in the Hebrew text is a Niphal imperfect with a pronominal suffix. Although the Niphal ordinarily has the passive sense, it can have a reflexive nuance as well (see above translation). Some have suggested an emendation to a Qal form: "Do not forget me" (all the ancient versions, NEB, REB; see GKC 369 §117. x). "Do not forget me" would make a good parallel with "remember these things" in the first line. Since the MT is the harder reading and fits with Israel's complaint that God had forgotten her (Isa 40:27), the MT reading should be retained (NASB, NKJV, NRSV, ESV). The passive has been rendered as an active in the translation in keeping with contemporary English style (so also NIV, NCV, TEV, NLT). 23 tn: Heb "I blot out like a cloud your rebellious deeds, and like a cloud your sins." 14 This is what the LORD says:
 "The profit<sup>23</sup> of Egypt and the revenue<sup>24</sup> of Ethiopia, along with the Sabean, those tall men, will be brought to you<sup>25</sup> and become yours.
 They will walk behind you, coming along in chains.<sup>26</sup>

 "Truly God is with<sup>28</sup> you; he has no peer;<sup>29</sup>
 there is no other God!"
 15 Yes, you are a God who keeps hidden,
 O God of Israel, deliverer!
 16 They will all be ashamed and embarrassed;
 those who fashion idols will all be humiliated.<sup>30</sup> 17 Israel will be delivered once and for all by the LORD
 you will never again be ashamed or humiliated.<sup>32</sup> 18 For this is what the LORD says, the one who created the sky –
 he is the true God,<sup>33</sup>
 the one who formed the earth and made it;
 he established it,
 he did not create it without order,<sup>34</sup>

18 tn: The words "who live" are supplied in the translation for stylistic reasons. 19 tn: Heb "I, even my hands"; NASB "I stretched out...with My hands"; NRSV "it was my hands that stretched out." Cf. KJV, ASV "Surely God is in thee." 29 tn: Heb "there is no other" (so NIV, NRSV). The same phrase occurs at the end of v. 18, in v. 21, and at the end of v. 22. 30 tn: "together they will walk in humiliation, the makers of images." 31 tn: Heb "Israel will be delivered by the Lord [with] a permanent deliverance." 32 tn: Heb "you will not be ashamed and you will not be humiliated for ages of future time." 33 tn: Heb "he [is] the God." the LORD.

49 Listen to me, you coastlands!<sup>22</sup>
Pay attention, you people who live far away!
The LORD summoned me from birth;<sup>23</sup>
he commissioned me when my mother brought me into the world.<sup>24</sup> 2 He made my mouth like a sharp sword,
he hid me in the hollow of his hand;
he made me like a sharpened<sup>25</sup> arrow,
he hid me in his quiver.<sup>26</sup>
3 He said to me, "You are my servant,
Israel, through whom I will reveal my splendor."<sup>27</sup> 4 But I thought,<sup>28</sup> "I have worked in vain;
I have expended my energy for absolutely nothing."<sup>29</sup>
But the LORD will vindicate me;
my God will reward me.<sup>30</sup> 5 So now the LORD says, the one who formed me from birth<sup>31</sup> to be his servant

19 tn: Heb "to the end of the earth" (so KJV, NASB, NRSV).
20 tn: Heb "redeems." See the note at 41:14. 21 sn: The translation above (present tense) assumes that this verse describes God's provision for returning Babylonian exiles (see v. 20; 35:6; 49:10) in terms reminiscent of the Exodus from Egypt (see Exod 17:6). 22 tn: Or "islands" (NASB, NIV); NLT "in far-off lands." sn:
The Lord's special servant, introduced in chap. 42, speaks here of his commission. 23 tn: Heb "called me from the womb." 24 tn: Heb
"from the inner parts of my mother he mentioned my name." 25 tn: Or perhaps, "polished" (so KJV, ASV, NAB, NIV, NRSV); NASB "a select arrow." 26 sn: The figurative language emphasizes the ser-vant's importance as the Lord's effective instrument. The servant's mouth, which stands metonymically for his words, is compared to a sharp sword because he will be an effective spokesman on God's behalf (see 50:4). The Lord holds his hand on the servant, ready to draw and use him at the appropriate time. The servant is like a sharpened arrow reserved in a quiver for just the right moment.
27 sn: This verse identifies the servant as Israel. This seems to refer to the exiled nation (cf. 41:8-9; 44:1-2, 21; 45:4; 48:20), but in vv.
5-6 this servant says he has been commissioned to reconcile Israel to God, so he must be distinct from the exiled nation. This servant is an ideal "Israel" who, like Moses of old, mediates a covenant for the nation (see v. 8), leads them out of bondage (v. 9a), and carries out God's original plan for Israel by positively impacting the pagan nations (see v. 6b). By living according to God's law, Israel was to be a model of God's standards of justice to the surrounding nations (cf.
Deut 4:6-8). The sinful nation failed, but the servant, the ideal "Israel," will succeed by establishing justice throughout the earth. 28 tn: Or "said" (KJV, NASB, NIV, NRSV); NLT "I replied." 29 tn: Heb "for nothing and emptiness." Synonyms are combined to emphasize the common idea. 30 tn: Heb "But my justice is with the Lord, and my

he did this† to restore Jacob to himself, so that Israel might be gathered to him;
 and I will be honored†† in the LORD's sight, for my God is my source of strength‡ – 6 he says, "Is it too insignificant a task for you to be my servant,
 to reestablish the tribes of Jacob,
 and restore the remnant‡† of Israel? ‡††
 I will make you a light to the nations, ‡†† so you can bring‡†† my deliverance to the remote regions of the earth."
 7 This is what the LORD, the protector§ of Israel, their Holy One, §† says to the one who is despised§†† and rejected§† by nations, §††
 a servant of rulers:
 "Kings will see and rise in respect,§† princes will bow down, because of the faithful LORD,
 the Holy One of Israel who has chosen you."
 8 This is what the LORD says:
 "At the time I decide to show my favor, I will respond to you;
 in the day of deliverance I will help you;
 I will protect you§† and make you a covenant mediator for people, §§†
 and to reassign the desolate property.

A number of recent translations adopt this reading: "Syene" (NAB, NRSV); "Aswan" (NIV); "Egypt" (NLT). sn: The precise location of the land of Sinim is uncertain, but since the north and west are mentioned in the previous line, it was a probably located in the distant east or south. 23 tn: Or "O heavens." The Hebrew term מַעְרָב

 27 tn: Heb "so as not to have compassion on the son of her womb?"
 28 tn: Heb "these" (so ASV, NASB).
 29 sn: The argument of v. 15 seems to develop as follows: The Lord has an innate attachment to Zion, just like a mother does for her infant child. But even if mothers were to suddenly abandon their children, the Lord would never forsake Zion. In other words, the Lord's attachment to Zion is like a mother's attachment to her infant child, but even stronger. 30 tn: Heb "you." Here the pronoun is put by metonymy for the person's name.

 while those who destroyed and devastated you de-

<sup>18</sup> Look all around you !†
 All of them gather to you.
 As surely as I live," says the LORD ,
 "you will certainly wear all of them like jewelry;
 you will put them on as if you were a bride.
<sup>19</sup> Yes, your land lies in ruins;
 it is desolate and devastated. ††
 But now you will be too small to hold your residents, and those who devoured you will be far away.
<sup>20</sup> Yet the children born during your time of bereavement
 will say within your hearing,
 ' This place is too cramped for us,‡ make room for us so we can live here.' †† <sup>21</sup> Then you will think to yourself,‡‡
 'Who bore these children for me?
 I was bereaved and barren, dismissed and divorced. †††
 Who raised these children ?
 Look, I was left all alone;
 where did these children come from?'"
<sup>22</sup> This is what the sovereign LORD says:
 "Look I will raise my hand to the nations;
 I will raise my signal flag to the peoples.
 They will bring your sons in their arms and carry your daughters on their shoulders.

 I can cover it with sackcloth."

The Servant Perseveres

<sup>4</sup> The sovereign LORD has given me the capacity to be his spokesman, <sup>23</sup>
 so that I know how to help the weary. <sup>24</sup>

§† sn: Verse 26a depicts siege warfare and bloody defeat. The besieged enemy will be so starved they will their own flesh. The bloodstained bodies lying on the blood-soaked battle site will look as if they collapsed in drunkenness. §†† tn: Heb "flesh" (so KJV, NASB). §† tn: Heb "your redeemer." See the note at 41:14. §† tn: Heb "the powerful [one] of Jacob." See 1:24. §§† sn: The Lord challenges the exiles (Zion's children) to bring incriminating evidence against him. The rhetorical questions imply that Israel accused the Lord of divorcing his wife (Zion) and selling his children (the Israelites) into slavery to pay off a debt. §§† sn: The Lord admits that he did sell the Israelites, but it was because of their sins, not because of some debt he owed. If he had sold them to a creditor, they ought to be able to point him out, but the preceding rhetorical question implies they would not be able to do so. §§§ sn: The Lord admits he did divorce Zion, but that too was the result of the nation's sins. The force of the earlier rhetorical question comes into clearer focus now. The question does not imply that a certificate does not exist and that no divorce occurred. Rather, the question asks for the certificate to be produced so the accuser can see the reason for the divorce in black and white. The Lord did not put Zion away arbitrarily. 18 sn: The present tense translation of the verbs assumes that the Lord is questioning why Israel does not attempt to counter his arguments. Another possibility is to take the verbs as referring to past events: "Why did no one meet me when I came? Why did no one answer when I called?" In this case the Lord might be asking why Israel rejected his calls to repent and his offer to deliver them. 19 tn: Heb "short" (so NAB, NASB, NIV). 20 tn:
 Or "ransom" (NAB, NASB, NIV). 21 tn: Heb "with my rebuke." 22 tn: Heb "the fish stink from lack of water and die from thirst." 23 tn: Heb "has given to me a tongue of disciples." sn: Verses 4-11 contain the third of the so-called servant songs, which depict the career of the Lord's special servant, envisioned as an ideal Israel ( 49:3) who rescues the exiles and fulfills God's purposes for the world. Here the servant alludes to opposition (something hinted at in 49:4), but also expresses his determination to persevere with the Lord's help.
 24 tc: Heb "to know [?] the weary with a word." Comparing it with Arabic and Aramaic cognates yields the meaning of "help, sus-

The exiles are addressed in the immediately preceding verses (note the critical tone of vv. 12-13 and the reference to the exiles in v. 14). However, it seems unlikely that they are addressed in v. 16, for the addressee appears to be commissioned to tell Zion, who here represents the restored exiles, "you are my people." The addressee is distinct from the exiles. The language of v. 16a is reminiscent of 49:2 and 50:4, where the Lord's special servant says he is God's spokesman and effective instrument. Perhaps the Lord, having spoken to the exiles in vv. 1-15, now responds to this servant, who spoke just prior to this in 50:4-11. 21 tn: Heb "I place my words in your mouth." 22 tn: Heb "with the shadow of my hand." 23 tc: The Hebrew text has לְנֶטֶל

24 tn: The infinitives in v. 16b are most naturally understood as indicating the purpose of the divine actions described in v. 16a. The relationship of the third infinitive to the commission is clear enough – the Lord has made the addressee (his special servant?) his spokesman so that the latter might speak encouraging words to those in Zion. But how do the first two infinitives relate? The text seems to indicate that the Lord has commissioned the addressee so that the latter might create the universe! Perhaps creation imagery is employed metaphorically here to refer to the transformation that Jerusalem will experience (see 65:17-18). 25 tn: Heb "[you] who have drunk from the hand of the Lord the cup of his anger." 26 tn: Heb "the goblet, the cup [that causes] staggering, you drank, you drained."

For another example, see Gen 21:7. § sn: The speaker shifts here from God to an unidentified group (note the first person plural pronouns throughout vv. 1-6). The content of the speech suggests that the prophet speaks here as representative of the sinful nation Israel. The group acknowledges its sin and recognizes that the servant suffered on their behalf. §† tn: The first half of v. 1 is traditionally translated, "Who has believed our report?" or "Who has believed our message?" as if the group speaking is lamenting that no one will believe what they have to say. But that doesn't seem to be the point in this context. Here the group speaking does not cast itself in the role of a preacher or evangelist. No, they are repentant sinners, who finally see the light. The phrase "our report" can mean (1) the report which we deliver, or (2) the report which was delivered to us. The latter fits better here, where the report is most naturally taken as the announcement that has just been made in 52:13-15. §†††† tn: Heb "to whom" (so KJV, NASB, NIV, NRSV). §†† tn: Heb "the arm of the Lord." The "arm of the Lord" is a metaphor of military power; it pictures the Lord as a warrior who bares his arm, takes up his weapon,

 like a root out of parched soil;§†
 he had no stately form or majesty that might catch our attention,§†

<sup>3</sup> He was despised and rejected by people,§§† one who experienced pain and was acquainted with illness;
 people hid their faces from him,§§§
 he was despised, and we considered him insignificant.<sup>18</sup>

<sup>4</sup> But he lifted up our illnesses, he carried our pain;<sup>19</sup>
 even though we thought he was being punished, attacked by God, and afflicted for something he had done.<sup>20</sup>

<sup>5</sup> He was wounded because of<sup>21</sup> our rebellious deeds, crushed because of our sins;
 he endured punishment that made us well;<sup>22</sup> because of his wounds we have been healed.<sup>23</sup> and crushes his enemies (cf. 51:9-10; 63:5-6). But Israel had not seen the Lord's military power at work in the servant. §††† tn: Heb "before him." Some suggest an emendation to "before us." If the third singular suffix of the Hebrew text is retained, it probably refers to the Lord (see v. 1b). For a defense of this reading, see R. Whybray, Isaiah 40-66 (NCBC), 173-74. §† sn: The metaphor in this verse suggests insignificance. §†† tn: Heb "that we might see him." The vav conjunctive prefixed to the imperfect introduces a result clause here. See GKC 504-5 §166. a. §§††† tn: Heb "lacking of men." If the genitive is taken as specifying ("lacking with respect to men"), then the idea is that he lacked company because he was rejected by people. Another option is to take the genitive as indicating genus or larger class (i.e., "one lacking among men"). In this case one could translate, "he was a transient" (cf. the use of תַּדְרֹךְ

<sup>12</sup> For you are aware of our many rebellious deeds,<sup>29</sup> and our sins testify against us; indeed, we are aware of our rebellious deeds; we know our sins all too well.<sup>30</sup>

<sup>13</sup> We have rebelled and tried to deceive the LORD; we turned back from following our God. We stir up<sup>31</sup> oppression and rebellion; we tell lies we concocted in our minds.<sup>32</sup>

The Lord Intervenes

Here the verb refers to covenantal loyalty. <sup>24</sup> tn: Heb "in all their distress, there was distress to him" (reading לוֹ <sup>25</sup> tn: Heb "the messenger [or "angel"] of his face"; NIV "the angel of his presence." sn: This may refer to the "angel of God" mentioned in Exod 14:19, who in turn may be identical to the divine "presence" (literally, "face") referred to in Exod 33:14-15 and Deut 4:37. Here in Isa 63 this messenger may be equated with God's "holy Spirit" (see vv. 10-11) and "the Spirit of the Lord" (v. 14). See also Ps 139:7, where God's "Spirit" seems to be equated with his "presence" (literally, "face") in the synonymous parallelistic structure. <sup>26</sup> tn: Or "redeemed" (KJV, NAB, NIV), or "delivered." <sup>27</sup> tn: Heb "all the days of antiquity"; KJV, NAB, NASB, NIV, NRSV "days of old." <sup>28</sup> tn: Or "grieved, hurt the feelings of." <sup>29</sup> sn: The phrase "holy Spirit" occurs in the OT only here (in v. 11 as well) and in Ps 51:11 ( 51:13 HT), where it is associated with the divine presence.

† tn: Heb “and he remembered the days of antiquity, Moses, his people.” The syntax of the statement is unclear. The translation assumes that “his people” is the subject of the verb “remembered.” If original, “Moses” is in apposition to “the days of antiquity,” more precisely identifying the time period referred to. However, the syntactical awkwardness suggests that “Moses” may have been an early marginal note (perhaps identifying “the shepherd of his flock” two lines later) that has worked its way into the text. †† tn: The Hebrew text has a plural form, which if retained and taken as a numerical plural, would probably refer to Moses, Aaron, and the Israelite tribal leaders at the time of the Exodus. Most prefer to emend the form to the singular ( הַיְהוָה )
††† tn: Heb “making for himself a lasting name.” †††† tn: Heb “in the desert [or “steppe”].” ††††† tn: The words “to graze” are supplied in the translation for clarification. § tn: Or “so” (KJV, ASV), or “thus” (NAB, NRSV). §† tn: Heb “making for yourself a majestic name.” §††† tn: This probably refers to his zeal for his people, which motivates him to angrily strike out against their enemies.
§† tn: The Hebrew text reads literally, “the agitation of your intestines and your compassion to me they are held back.” The phrase “agitation of your intestines” is metonymic, referring to the way in which one’s nervous system reacts when one feels pity and compassion toward another. הַיְהוָה

§† tn: This probably refers to God’s commands. §†† tn: Heb “[Why do] you harden our heart[s] so as not to fear you.” The interrogative particle is understood by ellipsis (note the preceding line). sn: How direct this hardening is, one cannot be sure. The speaker may envision direct involvement on the Lord’s part. The Lord has brought the exile as judgment for the nation’s sin and now he continues to keep them at arm’s length by blinding them spiritually. The second half of 64:7 might support this, though the precise reading of the final verb is uncertain. On the other hand, the idiom of lament is sometimes ironic and hyperbolically deterministic. For example, Naomi lamented that Shaddai was directly opposing her and bringing her calamity ( Ruth 1:20-21), while the author of Ps 88 directly attributes his horrible suffering and loneliness to God (see especially vv. 6-8, 16-18). Both individuals make little, if any, room for intermediate causes or the principle of sin and death which ravages the human race. In the same way, the speaker in Isa 63:17 (who evidences great spiritual sensitivity and is anything but “hardened”) may be referring to the hardships of exile, which discouraged and even embittered the people, causing many of them to retreat from their Yahwistic faith. In this case, the “hardening” in view is more indirect and can be lifted by the Lord’s intervention. Whether the hardening here is indirect or direct, it is important to recognize that the speaker sees it as one of the effects of rebellion against the Lord (note especially 64:5-6). §§† tn: Or “holy” (ASV, NASB, NRSV, TEV, NLT). §§§ tn: Heb “for a short time they had a possession, the people of your holiness.” 18 tn: Heb “your adversaries trampled on.” 19 tn: Heb “we were from antiquity” (see v. 16).
20 tn: Heb “you did not rule them, your name was not called over them.” The expression “the name is called over” indicates ownership; see the note at 4:1. As these two lines stand they are very difficult to interpret. They appear to be stating that the adversaries just mentioned in v. 18 have not been subject to the Lord’s rule in the past, perhaps explaining why they could commit the atrocity described in v. 18b. 21 sn: In BHS the chapter division occurs in a different place from the English Bible: 64:1 ET ( 63:19b HT) and 64:2-12 ( 64:1-11 HT). Beginning with 65:1 the verse numbers in the English Bible and the Hebrew Bible are again the same. 22 tn: Or “the heavens.” The Hebrew term שָׁמַיִם anyone who fails to reach† the age of a hundred will be considered cursed.

The point would be that even in this new era the snake (often taken as a symbol of Satan) remains under God's curse. However, it is unlikely that such an allusion exists. Even if there is an echo of Gen 3:14, the primary allusion is to 11:8, where snakes are pictured as no longer dangerous. They will no longer attack other living creatures, but will be content to crawl along the ground. (The statement "you will eat dirt" in Gen 3:14 means "you will crawl on the ground." In the same way the statement "dirt will be its food" in Isa 65:25 means "it will crawl on the ground.") §‡† tn: Heb "in all my holy mountain." These same words appear in 11:9. It is the sound of the LORD paying back his enemies.

Heb "to the humble and the lowly in spirit and the one who trembles at my words." §§§ tn: Heb "one who slaughters a bull, one who strikes down a man." Some understand a comparison here and in the following lines. In God's sight the one who sacrifices is like (i.e., regarded as) a murderer or one whose worship is ritually defiled or idolatrous. The translation above assumes that the language is not metaphorical, but descriptive of the sinners' hypocritical behavior. (Note the last two lines of the verse, which suggests they are guilty of abominable practices.) On the one hand, they act pious and offer sacrifices; but at the same time they commit violent crimes against men, defile their sacrifices, and worship other gods. 18 tn: Heb "one who sacrifices a lamb, one who breaks a dog's neck." Some understand a comparison, but see the previous note. sn: The significance of breaking a dog's neck is uncertain, though the structure of the statement when compared to the preceding and following lines suggests the action is viewed in a negative light. According to Exod 13:13 and 34:20, one was to "redeem" a firstborn donkey by offering a lamb; if one did not "redeem" the firstborn donkey in this way, then its neck must be broken. According to Deut 21:1-9 a heifer's neck was to be broken as part of the atonement ritual to purify the land from the guilt of bloodshed. It is not certain if these passages relate in any way to the action described in Isa 66:3. 19 tn: Heb "one who offers an offering, pig's blood." Some understand a comparison, but see the note at the end of the first line. 20 tn: Heb "one who offers incense as a memorial offering, one who blesses something false." Some understand a comparison, but see the note at the end of the first line. ׀׀׀

<sup>21</sup> tn: Heb "also they have chosen their ways." <sup>22</sup> tn: Heb "their being [or "soul"] takes delight in their disgusting [things]." <sup>23</sup> tn: The precise meaning of the noun is uncertain. Some suggest that the words “their deeds and their thoughts” have been displaced from v. 17. This line presents two primary challenges. In the first place, the personal pronoun “I” has no verb after it. Most translations insert “know” for the sake of clarity (NASB, NRSV, NLT, ESV). The NIV has “I, because of their actions and their imaginations...” Since God’s “knowledge” of Israel’s sin occasions judgment, the verb “hate” is an option as well (see above translation). ## The Superscription

† tn: Or "This is a record of what Jeremiah prophesied and did"; Heb "The words [or affairs] of Jeremiah." The phrase could refer to either the messages of Jeremiah recorded in the book or to both his messages and the biographical (and autobiographical) narratives recorded about him in the book. Since the phrase is intended to serve as the title or superscription for the whole book and recurs again in 51:64 at the end of the book before the final appendix, it might refer to the latter. The expression "The words of [someone]" is a standard introductory formula ( Deut 29:1[28:69]; 2 Sam 23:1; Amos 1:1; Eccl 1:1; Neh 1:1). †† sn: The translation reflects the ancient Jewish tradition of substituting the word for "Lord" for the proper name for Israel's God which is now generally agreed to have been Yahweh. The parallelism here with "set you apart" and "appointed you" make clear that Jeremiah is speaking of his foreordination to be a prophet. For this same nuance of the Hebrew verb see Gen 18:19; Amos 3:2.

Before you were born I set you apart.
 I appointed you to be a prophet to the nations."

The Hebrew word can refer to an infant ( Exod 2:6), a young boy ( 1 Sam 2:11), a teenager ( Gen 21:12), or a young man ( 2 Sam 18:5). ### Visions Confirming Jeremiah's Call and Commission

11 Later the LORD asked me, "What do you see, Jeremiah?" I answered, "I see a branch of an almond tree." 12 Then the LORD said, "You have observed correctly. This means† I am watching to make sure my threats are carried out."††

13 The LORD again asked me, "What do you see?" I answered, "I see a pot of boiling water; it is tipped toward us from the north."††† Then the LORD said, "This means†† destruction will break out from the north on all who live in the land. 15 For I will soon summon all the peoples of the kingdoms of the north," says the LORD. "They will come and their kings will set up their thrones‡ near the entrances of the gates of Jerusalem. ‡‡ They will attack all the walls surrounding it, and all the towns in Judah. <sup>‡‡‡16</sup> In this way§ I will pass sentence§† on the people of Jerusalem and Judah§†† be-

‡ tn: Heb "a blown upon [= heated; boiling] pot and its face from the face of the north [= it is facing away from the north]." ‡† tn: There is nothing in the Hebrew text for these words but it is implicit in the connection. Once again the significance of the vision is spelled out. Compare the translator's note on v. 12. ‡‡ tn: Heb "they will each set up." The pronoun "they" refers back to the "kingdoms" in the preceding sentence. However, kingdoms do not sit on thrones; their kings do. This is an example of a figure of speech called metonymy where the kingdom is put for its king. For a similar use see 2 Chr 12:8. ‡‡† map: For location see . ‡‡‡ tn: Or "They will come and set up their thrones in the entrances of the gates of Jerusalem. They will destroy all the walls surrounding it and also destroy all the towns in Judah." The text of v. 15b reads in Hebrew, "they will each set up his throne [near? in?] the entrance of the gates of Jerusalem and against all its walls...and against all the towns..." Commentators are divided over whether the passage refers to the kings setting up their thrones after victory in preparation for passing judgment on their defeated enemies in the city or whether it refers to setting up siege against it. There is no Hebrew preposition before the word for "the entrance" so that it could be "in" (which would imply victory) or "at/near" (which would imply siege), and the same verb + object (i.e., "they will set up their thrones") governs all the locative statements. It is most often taken to refer to the aftermath of victory because of the supposed parallel in Jer 43:8-13 and the supposed fulfillment in Jer 39:3. Though this may fit well with the first part of the compound expression, it does not fit well with the latter part which is most naturally taken to refer to hostile attacks against Jerusalem and the other cities of Judah. The translation given in the text is intended to reflect the idea of an army setting up for siege. The alternate translation is intended to reflect the other view. § tn: The Hebrew particle (the vav [ ו )

2 The LORD spoke to me. He said: 2 "Go and declare in the hearing of the people of Jerusalem: 18 'This is what the LORD says: "I have fond memories of you, 19 how devoted you were to me in your early years. 20 I remember how you loved me like a new bride; you followed me through the wilderness, through a land that had never been planted. 3 Israel was set apart to the LORD; they were like the first fruits of a harvest to

The antecedent goes back to Jerusalem and the cities of Judah (i.e., the people in them) in v. 15. §‡ tn: I.e., idols. §†† tn: The name "Jeremiah" is not in the text. There is a play on words here involving two different forms of the same Hebrew verb and two different but related prepositional phrases, "from before/of," a preposition introducing the object of a verb of fearing, and "before, in front of," a preposition introducing a spatial location. §§† tn: See the note on "Jeremiah" at the beginning of v. 17. §§‡ tn: Heb "today I have made you." † sn: Heb "the first fruits of his harvest." Many commentators see the figure here as having theological significance for the calling of the Gentiles. It is likely, however, that in this context the metaphor – here rendered as a simile – is intended to bring out the special relationship and inviolability that Israel had with God. As the first fruits were the special possession of the LORD

‡† tn: Or "I did not wrong your ancestors in any way. Yet they went far astray from me." Both translations are an attempt to render the rhetorical question which demands a negative answer.

‡†† tn: Heb "They went/followed after." This idiom is found most often in Deuteronomy or covenant contexts. It refers to loyalty to God and to his covenant or his commandments (e.g., 1 Kgs 14:8; 2 Chr 34:31) with the metaphor of a path or way underlying it (e.g., Deut 11:28; 28:14). To "follow other gods" was to abandon this way and this loyalty (i.e., to "abandon" or "forget" God, Judg 2:12; Hos 2:13) and to follow the customs or religious traditions of the pagan nations (e.g., 2 Kgs 17:15). The classic text on "following" God or another god is 1 Kgs 18:18, 21 where Elijah taunts the people with "halting between two opinions" whether the LORD

words "to me" are not in the Hebrew text but are implicit from the context: Heb "they followed after the worthless thing/things and became worthless." There is an obvious wordplay on the verb "became worthless" and the noun "worthless thing," which is probably to be understood collectively and to refer to idols as it does in Jer 8:19; 10:8; 14:22; Jonah 2:8. § tn: This word is erroneously rendered "shadow of death" in most older English versions; that translation is based on a faulty etymology. Contextual studies and comparative Semitic linguistics have demonstrated that the word is merely another word for darkness. It is confined to poetic texts and often carries connotations of danger and distress. It is associated in poetic texts with the darkness of a prison ( Ps 107:10, 14), a mine ( Job 28:3), and a ravine ( Ps 23:4). Here it is associated with the darkness of the wasteland and ravines of the Sinai desert. §† sn: The context suggests that the question is related to a lament where the people turn to God in their troubles, asking him for help and reminding him of his past benefactions. See for example Isa 63:11-19 and Ps 44. It is an implicit prayer for his intervention, cf. 2 Kgs 2:14.

Deut 33:10). According to Jer 8:8 it could possibly refer to the scribes who copied the law. §§§ tn: Or "were not committed to me." The Hebrew verb rendered "know" refers to more than mere intellectual knowledge. It carries also the ideas of emotional and volitional commitment as well intimacy. See for example its use in contexts like Hos 4:1; 6:6. <sup>18</sup> tn: Heb "by Baal." <sup>19</sup> tn: Heb "and they followed after those things [the word is plural] which do not profit." The poetic structure of the verse, four lines in which a distinct subject appears at the beginning followed by a fifth line beginning with a prepositional phrase and no distinct subject, argues that this line is climactic and refers to all four classes enumerated in the preceding lines. See W. L. Holladay, Jeremiah (Hermeneia), 1:88-89. There may be a play or pun in the Hebrew text on the name for the god Baal ( בַּעַל

The figure includes polar opposites to indicate totality, i.e., everywhere from west to east. † sn: Kedar is the home of the Bedouin tribes in the Syro-Arabian desert. See Gen 25:18 and Jer 49:38. See also the previous note for the significance of the reference here. †† tn: Heb "have exchanged their glory [i.e., the God in whom they glory]." This is a case of a figure of speech where the attribute of a person or thing is put for the person or thing. Compare the common phrase in Isaiah, the Holy One of Israel, obviously referring to the LORD ‡ tn: Heb "what cannot profit." The verb is singular and the allusion is likely to Baal. See the translator's note on 2:8 for the likely pun or wordplay. ‡‡ sn: In earlier literature the heavens (and the earth) were called on to witness Israel's commitment to the covenant ( Deut 30:12) and were called to serve as witnesses to Israel's fidelity or infidelity to it ( Isa 1:2; Mic 6:1). ‡‡‡ tn: It is difficult to decide whether to translate "fresh, running water" which the Hebrew term for "living water" often refers to (e.g., Gen 26:19; Lev 14:5), or "life-giving water" which the idiom "fountain of life" as source of life and vitality often refers to (e.g., Ps 36:9; Prov 13:14; 14:27). The contrast with cisterns, which collected and held rain water, suggests "fresh, running water," but the reality underlying the metaphor contrasts the LORD

The Lord Expresses His Exasperation at Judah's Persistent Idolat

20 " Indeed, † long ago you threw off my authority and refused to be subject to me.††
 You said, 'I will not serve you.' ‡ Instead, you gave yourself to other gods on every high hill and under every green tree, like a prostitute sprawls out before her lovers. †† 21 I planted you in the land like a special vine of the very best stock.
 Why in the world have you turned into something like a wild vine that produces rotten, foul-smelling grapes? †† 22 You can try to wash away your guilt with a strong detergent.

You can use as much soap as you want.
 But the stain of your guilt is still there for me to see,††† says the Lord God. †††
 23 " How can you say, 'I have not made myself unclean.'
 I have not paid allegiance to§ the gods called Baal.'
 Just look at the way you have behaved in the Valley of Hinnom!§†
 Think about the things you have done there!
 You are like a flighty, young female camel that rushes here and there, crisscrossing its path. §†† 24 You are like a wild female donkey brought up in the wilderness.
 In her lust she sniffs the wind to get the scent of a male.§†
 No one can hold her back when she is in heat.
 None of the males need wear themselves out chasing after her.
 At mating time she is easy to find. §†† 25 Do not chase after other gods until your shoes wear out and your throats become dry. §†
 But you say, 'It is useless for you to try and stop me because I love those foreign gods§† and want to pursue them!'
 26 Just as a thief has to suffer dishonor when he is caught, so the people of Israel§§† will suffer dishonor for what they have done.§§†
 So will their kings and officials, their priests and their prophets.
 27 They say to a wooden idol,§§§ 'You are my father.'
 They say to a stone image, 'You gave birth to me.'<sup>18</sup>
 Yes, they have turned away from me instead of turning to me.<sup>19</sup>
 Yet when they are in trouble, they say, 'Come and save us!'
 28 But where are the gods you made for yourselves?

† tn: Or "For." The Hebrew particle ( כִּי )
 †† tn: Heb "you broke your yoke...tore off your yoke ropes." The metaphor is that of a recalcitrant ox or heifer which has broken free from its master. ‡ tc: The MT of this verse has two examples of the old second feminine singular perfect, שִׁבַּרְתִּי נִתְקַרְתִּי

אָמַבֹּד

†† tn: Heb "you sprawled as a prostitute on...." The translation reflects the meaning of the metaphor. ††† tc: Heb "I planted you as a choice vine, all of it true seed. How then have you turned into a putrid thing to me, a strange [or wild] vine." The question expresses surprise and consternation. The translation is based on a redivision of the Hebrew words סוּרְיָה גִּפְן סוּרְיָה גִּפְן

סוּרְיָה גִּפְן

††† tn: Heb "Even if you wash with natron/lye, and use much soap, your sin is a stain before me." †††† tn: Heb "Lord Yahweh." For an explanation of this title see the study notes on 1:6. § tn: Heb "I have not gone/followed after." See the translator's note on 2:5 for the meaning and usage of this idiom. §† tn: Heb "Look at your way in the valley." The valley is an obvious reference to the Valley of Hinnom where Baal and Molech were worshiped and child sacrifice was practiced. §†† sn: The metaphor is intended to depict Israel's lack of clear direction and purpose without the LORD. §††† tn: The words "to get the scent of a male" are implicit and are supplied in the translation for clarification. §††† sn: The metaphor is intended to depict Israel's irrepressible desire to worship other gods. §† tn: Heb "Refrain your feet from being bare and your throat from being dry/thirsty." §†† tn: Heb "It is useless! No!" For this idiom, see Jer 18:12; NEB "No; I am desperate." §§†† tn: Heb "house of Israel." §§§†† tn: The words "for what they have done" are implicit in the comparison and are supplied in the translation for clarification. §§§ tn: Heb "wood...stone..." 18 sn: The reference to wood and stone is, of course, a pejorative reference to idols made by human hands. See the next verse where reference is made to "the gods you have made." 19 tn: Heb "they have turned [their] backs to me, not [their] faces."

Let them save you when you are in trouble. The sad fact is that† you have as many gods as you have towns, Judah.

29 " Why do you try to refute me ?† All of you have rebelled against me," says the LORD.

30 " It did no good for me to punish your people. They did not respond to such correction. You slaughtered your prophets like a voracious lion." ‡

31 You people of this generation, listen to what the LORD says. "Have I been like a wilderness to you, Israel ? Have I been like a dark and dangerous land to you?† Why then do you‡ say, 'We are free to wander. ‡† We will not come to you any more?'

32 Does a young woman forget to put on her jewels ? Does a bride forget to put on her bridal attire ? But my people have forgotten me for more days than can even be counted.

33 " My, how good you have become at chasing after your lovers !‡‡ Why, you could even teach prostitutes a thing or two!

34 Even your clothes are stained with the lifeblood of the poor who had not done anything wrong; you did not catch them breaking into your homes.‡† Yet, in spite of all these things you have done, ‡††

35 you say, 'I have not done anything wrong, so the LORD cannot really be angry with me any more.'

But, watch out !‡† I will bring down judgment on you

"How good you have made your ways to seek love." ‡†† tn: Heb "so that even the wicked women you teach your ways." ‡††† tn: The words "for example" are implicit and are supplied in the translation for clarification. This is only one example of why their death was not legitimate. sn: Killing a thief caught in the act of breaking and entering into a person's home was pardonable under the law of Moses, cf. Exod 22:2. ‡†††† tn: KJV and ASV read this line with 2:34. The ASV makes little sense and the KJV again erroneously reads the archaic second person feminine singular perfect as first person common singular. All the modern English versions and commentaries take this line with 2:35. ‡††††† tn: This is an attempt to render the Hebrew particle often translated "behold" ( הִנֵּה )

because you say, 'I have not committed any sin.'

36 Why do you constantly go about changing your political allegiances ?‡††† You will get no help from Egypt just as you got no help from Assyria. ‡†

37 Moreover, you will come away from Egypt with your hands covering your faces in sorrow and shame‡† because the LORD will not allow your reliance on them to be successful and you will not gain any help from them. ‡††

3 " If a man divorces his wife and she leaves him and becomes another man's wife, he may not take her back again. ‡††† Doing that would utterly defile the land. ‡†††† But you, Israel, have given yourself as a prostitute to many gods.18

So what makes you think you can return to me?19 says the LORD.

2 " Look up at the hilltops and consider this.20

You have had sex with other gods on every one of them.21

You waited for those gods like a thief lying in wait in the desert. 22

You defiled the land by your wicked prostitution to other gods. 23

3 That is why the rains have been withheld, and the spring rains have not come.

Yet in spite of this you are obstinate as a prostitute. 24 You refuse to be ashamed of what you have done.

The question is rhetorical and expects a negative answer. sn: For the legal background for the illustration that is used here see Deut 24:1-4. ‡††††††† tn: Heb "Would the land not be utterly defiled?" The stative is here rendered actively to connect better with the preceding. The question is rhetorical and expects a positive answer. 18 tn: Heb "But you have played the prostitute with many lovers." 19 tn: Heb "Returning to me." The form is the bare infinitive which the KJV and ASV have interpreted as an imperative "Yet, return to me!" However, it is more likely that a question is intended, expressing surprise in the light of the law alluded to and the facts cited. For the use of the infinitive absolute in the place of a finite verb, cf. GKC 346 §113. ee. For the introduction of a question without a question marker, cf. GKC 473 §150. a. 20 tn: Heb "and see." 21 tn: Heb "Where have you not been ravished?" The rhetorical question expects the answer "nowhere," which suggests she has engaged in the worship of pagan gods on every one of the hilltops. 22 tn: Heb "You sat for them [the lovers, i.e., the foreign gods] beside the road like an Arab in the desert." 23 tn: Heb "by your prostitution and your wickedness." This is probably an example of hendiadys where, when two nouns are joined by "and," one expresses the

The rhetorical question expects a positive answer. †† tn: Heb "Will he keep angry forever? Will he maintain [it] to the end?" The questions are rhetorical and expect a negative answer. The change to direct address in the English translation is intended to ease the problem of the rapid transition, common in Hebrew style (but not in English), from second person direct address in the preceding lines to third person indirect address in these two lines. See GKC 462 §144. p. ‡ tn: Heb "You do the evil and you are able." This is an example of hendiadys, meaning "You do all the evil that you are able to do." ‡† tn: "Have you seen..." The question is rhetorical and expects a positive answer. ‡‡ tn: Heb "she played the prostitute there." This is a metaphor for Israel's worship; she gave herself to the worship of other gods like a prostitute gives herself to her lovers. There seems no clear way to completely spell out the metaphor in the translation. ‡‡† tn: Or "I said to her, 'Come back to me!'" The verb אָמַר

The Lord Calls on Israel and Judah to Repent

12 "Go and shout this message to my people in the countries in the north. ‡‡‡ Tell them, 'Come back to me, wayward Israel,' says the LORD. 'I will not continue to look on you with displeasure. 18 For I am merciful,' says the LORD.

'I will not be angry with you forever.
13 However, you must confess that you have done wrong,<sup>19</sup> and that you have rebelled against the LORD your God.

You must confess<sup>20</sup> that you have given yourself to<sup>21</sup> foreign gods under every green tree, and have not obeyed my commands,' says the LORD.

14 "Come back to me, my wayward sons," says the LORD, "for I am your true master.<sup>22</sup> If you do, <sup>23</sup>I will take one of you from each town and two of you from each family group, and I will bring you back to Zion. 15 I will give you leaders<sup>24</sup> who will be faithful to me.<sup>25</sup> They will lead you with knowledge and insight. 16 In those days, your population will greatly increase<sup>26</sup> in the land. At that time," says the LORD, "people will no

The translation assumes that the message is directed toward the exiles of northern Israel who have been scattered in the provinces of Assyria to the north. 18 tn: Heb "I will not cause my face to fall on you." 19 tn: Heb "Only acknowledge your iniquity." 20 tn: The words "You must confess" are repeated to convey the connection. The Hebrew text has an introductory "that" in front of the second line and a coordinative "and" in front of the next two lines. 21 tc: MT reads דִּבְרֵיךָ דִּבְרֵיךָ

22 tn: Or "I am your true husband." sn: There is a wordplay between the term "true master" and the name of the pagan god Baal. The pronoun "I" is emphatic, creating a contrast between the LORD

23 tn: The words, "If you do" are not in the text but are implicit in the connection of the Hebrew verb with the preceding. 24 tn: Heb "shepherds." 25 tn: Heb "after/according to my [own] heart." 26 tn: Heb "you will become numerous and fruitful."

All nations will gather there in Jerusalem to honor the LORD's name.‡ They will no longer follow the stubborn inclinations of their own evil hearts. <sup>‡†18</sup> At that time‡‡ the nation of Judah and the nation of Israel will be reunited. § Together they will come back from a land in the north to the land that I gave to your ancestors as a permanent possession. §†

§†† tn: The words

"What a joy it would be for me to" are not in the Hebrew text but are implied in the parallel structure. §† tn: Heb "the most beautiful heritage among the nations." §‡ tn: Heb "my father." §§† tn: Heb "turn back from [following] after me." §§‡ tn: Heb "house of Israel." §§§ tn: Heb "a wife unfaithful from her husband." 18 tn: Heb "A sound is heard on the hilltops, the weeping of the supplication of the children of Israel because [or indeed] they have perverted their way." At issue here is whether the supplication is made to Yahweh in repentance because of what they have done or whether it is supplication to the pagan gods which is evidence of their perverted ways. The reference in this verse to the hilltops where idolatry was practiced according to 3:2 and the reference to Israel's unfaithfulness in the preceding verse make the latter more likely. For the asseverative use of the Hebrew particle (here ren-

Compare also the shift in certain names such as Ishbaal ("man of Baal") to Ishbosheth ("man of shame"). <sup>25</sup> tn: Heb "fathers" (also in v. 25). <sup>26</sup> tn: Heb "Let us lie down in..." <sup>27</sup> tn: Heb "Let us be covered with disgrace." <sup>28</sup> tn: Or "If you, Israel, want to turn [away from your shameful ways (those described in 3:23-25)]...then you must turn back to me." Or perhaps, "Israel, you must turn back...Yes, you must turn back to me." <sup>29</sup> tn: Heb "disgusting things." <sup>30</sup> tn: Or possibly, "If you get those disgusting idols out of my sight, you will not need to flee." This is less probable because the normal meaning of the last verb is "to wander," "to stray." <sup>31</sup> tn: Heb "If you [= you must, see the translator's note on the word "do" later in this verse]

If you do,† the nations will pray to be as blessed by him as you are and will make him the object of their boasting."†† <sup>3</sup> Yes, ‡ the LORD has this to say to the people of Judah and Jerusalem:
 "Like a farmer breaking up hard unplowed ground, you must break your rebellious will and make a new beginning;
 just as a farmer must clear away thorns lest the seed is wasted, you must get rid of the sin that is ruining your lives."‡‡ <sup>4</sup> Just as ritual circumcision cuts away the foreskin as an external symbol of dedicated covenant commitment, you must genuinely dedicate yourselves to the LORD and get rid of everything that hinders your commitment to me,‡‡ people of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem.
 If you do not, ‡‡‡ my anger will blaze up like a flaming fire against you that no one will be able to extinguish.
 That will happen because of the evil you have done."

The translation is an attempt to bring out the force of a metaphor. The idea seems to be that they are to plow over the thorns and make the ground ready for the seeds which will produce a new crop where none had been produced before. ‡‡ tn: Heb "Circumcise yourselves to the LORD

 Run for safety! Do not delay!
 For I am about to bring disaster out of the north.
 It will bring great destruction. §†† <sup>7</sup> Like a lion that has come up from its lair§†
 the one who destroys nations has set out from his home base.§‡
 He is coming out to lay your land waste.
 Your cities will become ruins and lie uninhabited.
<sup>8</sup> So put on sackcloth!
 Mourn and wail, saying,
 'The fierce anger of the LORD has not turned away from us!'"§§† <sup>9</sup> "When this happens," §§‡ says the LORD,
 "the king and his officials will lose their courage.
 The priests will be struck with horror,
 and the prophets will be speechless in astonishment."
 you have surely allowed<sup>19</sup> the people of Judah and Jerusalem<sup>20</sup> to be deceived by those who say, 'You will be safe!<sup>21</sup> But in fact a sword is already at our throats.'"<sup>22</sup>

<sup>20</sup> tn: Heb "this people and Jerusalem." <sup>21</sup> tn: Heb "Jerusalem, saying, 'You will have peace'; or 'You have deceived the people of Judah and Jerusalem, saying, 'You will have peace.'" The words "you will be safe" are, of course, those of the false prophets (cf., Jer 6:14; 8:11; 14:13; 23:16-17). It is difficult to tell whether the charge here is meant literally as the emotional outburst of the prophet (compare for example, Jer 15:18) or whether it is to be understood as a figure of speech in which a verb of direct causation is to be understood as permissive or tolerative, i.e., God did not command the prophets to say this but allowed them to do so. While it is not beyond God to use false prophets to accomplish his will (cf., e.g., 1 Kgs 22:19-23), he elsewhere in the book of Jeremiah directly denies having sent the false prophets to say such things as this (cf., e.g., Jer 14:14-15; 23:21, 32). For examples of the use of this figure of speech, see E. W. Bullinger, Figures of Speech, 571, 823 and compare Ezek 20:25. The translation given attempts to resolve the issue. <sup>22</sup> tn: Heb "touches the throat/soul." For this use of the word usually translated

The term "daughter of" is appositional to "my people" and is supplied in the translation as a term of sympathy and endearment. Compare the common expression "daughter of Zion." ‡† tn: Heb "not for winnowing and not for cleansing." The words "It will not be a gentle breeze" are not in the text but are implicit in the connection. They are supplied in the translation here for clarification. ‡‡ tn: The word "No" is not in the text but is carried over from the connection with the preceding line "not for..." ‡†† tn: Heb "will speak judgments against them." ‡††† tn: Heb "he is coming up like clouds." The words "The enemy" are supplied in the translation to identify the referent and the word "gathering" is supplied to try to convey the significance of the simile, i.e., that of quantity and of an approaching storm. § tn: Heb "his chariots [are] like a whirlwind." The words "roar" and "sound" are supplied in the translation to clarify the significance of the simile. §† tn: The words "I cry out" are not in the text, but the words that follow are obviously not the LORD

§††† tn: Heb "Woe to us!" The words "woe to" are common in funeral laments and at the beginning of oracles of judgment. In many contexts they carry the connotation of hopelessness or apprehensiveness of inevitable doom. §† tn: Heb "Oh, Jerusalem, wash your heart from evil." §†† tn: Heb "For a voice declaring from Dan and making heard disaster from the hills of Ephraim." §† tn: The words "They are saying" are not in the text but are implicit in the connection and are supplied in the translation for clarification. §† tn: The word "surrounding" is not in the text but is implicit and is supplied in the translation for clarification. §§† tc: Or "Here they come!" Proclaim this message§§† to Jerusalem :
 "Those who besiege cities§§§ are coming from a distant land.

They are ready to raise the battle cry against<sup>18</sup> the towns in Judah."

17 They will surround Jerusalem<sup>19</sup> like men guarding a field<sup>20</sup>

This is the punishment you deserve, and it will be painful indeed. <sup>22</sup>

The pain will be so bad it will pierce your heart." <sup>23</sup>

liptical here. Some of the modern English versions appear to be emending the text from הַנֶּהֱרָה הַנֶּהֱרָה

§§† tn: The words, "this message," are not in the text but are supplied in the translation to make the introduction of the quote easier. §§§ tn: Heb "Besiegers." For the use of this verb to refer to besieging a city compare Isa 1:8. 18 tn: Heb "They have raised their voices against." The verb here, a vav ( ו )

19 tn: Heb "will surround her." The antecedent is Jerusalem in the preceding verse. The referent is again made explicit in the translation to avoid any possible lack of clarity. The verb form here is a form of the verb that emphasizes the fact as being as good as done (i.e., it is a prophetic perfect). 20 sn: There is some irony involved in the choice of the simile since the men guarding a field were there to keep thieves from getting in and stealing the crops. Here the besiegers are guarding the city to keep people from getting out. 21 tn: Heb "Your way and your deeds." 22 tn: Heb "How bitter!" 23 tn: Heb "Indeed, it reaches to your heart." The subject must be the pain alluded to in the last half of the preceding line; the verb is masculine, agreeing with the adjective translated "painful." The only other possible antecedent "punishment" is feminine. 24 tn: The words "I said" are not in the text. They are used to mark the shift from the LORD

25 tn: Heb "My bowels! My bowels!" 26 tn: Heb "the walls of my heart!" 27 tn: Heb "ram's horn," but the modern equivalent is "trumpet" and is more readily understandable. 28 tc: The translation reflects a different division of the last two lines than that suggested by the Masoretes. The written text (the Kethib) reads "for the sound of the ram's horn I have heard [or "you have heard," if the form is understood as the old second feminine singular perfect] my soul" followed by "the battle cry" in the last line. The translation is based on taking "my soul" with the last line and understanding an elliptical expression "the battle cry [to] my soul." Such an elliptical expression is in keeping with the elliptical nature of the exclamations at the beginning of the verse (cf. the literal translations of the first two lines of the verse in the notes on the words "stomach" and "heart"). 29 tn: The words, "I see" are not in the text here or at the beginning of the third line. They are supplied in the translation to show that this is Jeremiah's vi-so that the whole land lies in ruins.

 I see our† tents suddenly destroyed, their†† curtains torn down in a mere instant. † 21 "How long must I see the enemy's battle flags and hear the military signals of their bugles?" †† 22 The LORD answered, †
 "This will happen‡‡‡ because my people are foolish.
 They do not know me.
 They are like children who have no sense. ‡‡
 They have no understanding.
 They are skilled at doing evil.
 They do not know how to do good."
 23 "I looked at the land and saw§ that it was an empty wasteland. §†
 I looked up at the sky, and its light had vanished.
 24 I looked at the mountains and saw that they were shaking.
 All the hills were swaying back and forth!
 25 I looked and saw that there were no more people,
 and that all the birds in the sky had flown away.
 26 I looked and saw that the fruitful land had become a desert
 and that all of the cities had been laid in ruins.
 The LORD had brought this all about because of his blazing anger. §†
 27 All this will happen because the LORD said, §††
 "The whole land will be desolate;

sion of what will happen as a result of the invasion announced in 4:5-9, 11-17a. † tn: Heb "my." This is probably not a reference to Jeremiah's own tents since he foresees the destruction of the whole land. Jeremiah so identifies with the plight of his people that he sees the destruction of their tents as though they were his very own. It would probably lead to confusion to translate literally and it is not uncommon in Hebrew laments for the community or its representative to speak of the community as an "I." See for example the interchange between first singular and first plural pronouns in Ps 44:4-8. †† tn: Heb "my." ‡ tn: It is not altogether clear what Jeremiah intends by the use of this metaphor. In all likelihood he means that the defenses of Israel's cities and towns have offered no more resistance than nomads' tents. However, in light of the fact that the word "tent" came to be used generically for a person's home (cf. 1 Kgs 8:66; 12:16), it is possible that Jeremiah is here referring to the destruction of their homes and the resultant feeling of homelessness and loss of even elementary protection. Given the lack of certainty the present translation is rather literal here. †† tn: Heb "the sound of ram's horns," but the modern equivalent is "bugles" and is more readily understandable. ‡‡ tn: These words are not in the text but are supplied in the translation to show clearly the shift in speaker. Jeremiah has been speaking; now the LORD

‡‡† tn: Heb "For..." This gives the explanation for the destruction envisaged in 4:20 to which Jeremiah responds in 4:19, 21. ‡‡‡ tn: Heb "They are senseless children." § tn: Heb "I looked at the land and behold..." This indicates the visionary character of Jeremiah's description of the future condition of the land of Israel. §† tn: Heb "formless and empty." This is a case of hendiadys (two nouns joined by "and" both describe the same thing): one noun retains its full nominal force, the other functions as an adjective. The words יְהוּוּ וְהוּוּ

 My life is ebbing away before these murderers!"

§† sn: The earth and the heavens are personified here and depicted in the act of mourning and wearing black clothes because of the destruction of the land of Israel. §† tn: Heb "has spoken and purposed." This is an example of hendiadys where two verbs are joined by "and" but one is meant to serve as a modifier of the other. §§† tn: Heb "will not turn back from it." §§† tn: Heb "And you that are doomed to destruction." The referent is supplied from the following context and the fact that Zion/Jerusalem represents the leadership which was continually making overtures to foreign nations for help. §§§ tn: Heb "What are you accomplishing...?" The rhetorical question assumes a negative answer, made clear by the translation in the indicative. 18 tn: Heb "clothing yourself in scarlet." 19 tn: Heb "enlarging your eyes with antimony." Antimony was a black powder used by women as eyeliner to make their eyes look larger. 20 tn: Heb "they seek your life." 21 tn: The particle כִּי
 22 sn: Jerusalem is personified as a helpless maiden. 23 tn: Heb "spreading out her hands." The idea of asking or pleading for help is implicit in the figure. 24 tn: Heb "Woe, now to me!" See the translator's note on 4:13 for the usage of "Woe to..." 25 tn: These words are not in the text, but since the words at the end are obviously those of the LORD

26 tn: It is not clear who is being addressed here. The verbs are plural so they are not addressed to Jeremiah per se. Since the passage is talking about the people of Jerusalem, it is unlikely they are addressed here except perhaps rhetorically. Some have suggested that the heavenly court is being addressed here as in Job 1:6-8; 2:1-3. It is clear from Jer 23:18, 22; Amos 3:7 that the prophets had access to this heavenly counsel through visions (cf. 1 Kgs 22:19-23), so Jeremiah could have been privy to this speech through that means. Though these are the most likely addressee, it is too presumptuous to supply such an explicit addressee without al lions are meant. The animals are metaphorical for their enemies.

 Compare Jer 4:7. 19 tn: Heb "their rebellions are so many and their unfaithful acts so numerous." 20 tn: These words are not in the text, but are supplied in the translation to make clear who is speaking. 21 tn: Heb "How can I forgive [or pardon] you." The pronoun "you" is second feminine singular, referring to the city. See
 v. 1. 22 tn: Heb "your children." 23 tn: Heb "and they have sworn [oaths] by not-gods." 24 tn: Heb "I satisfied them to the full." 25 tn: Heb "they committed adultery." It is difficult to decide whether literal adultery with other women or spiritual adultery with other gods is meant. The word for adultery is used for both in the book of Jeremiah. For examples of its use for spiritual adultery see 3:8, 9; 9:2. For examples of its use for literal adultery see 7:9; 23:14. The context here could argue for either. The swearing by other gods and the implicit contradiction in their actions in contrast to the expected gratitude for supplying their needs argues for spiritual adultery. However, the reference to prostitution in the next line and the reference to chasing after their neighbor's wives argues for literal adultery. The translation opts for spiritual adultery because of the contrast implicit in the concessive clause. 26 tn: There is a great deal of debate about the meaning of this word. Most of the modern English versions follow the lead of lexicographers who relate this word to a noun meaning "troop" and understand it to mean "they

The word is supplied in the translation here for clarity. 27 tn: The MT reads the second masculine plural; this is probably a case of attraction to the second masculine plural pronoun in the preceding line. An alternative would be to understand a shift from speaking first to the people in the first half of the verse and then speaking to Jeremiah in the second half where the verb is second masculine singular. E.g., "When you [people] say, "Why...?" then you, Jeremiah, tell them..." 28 tn: Heb "As you left me and..., so you will...." The translation was chosen so as to break up a rather long and complex sentence. 29 sn: This is probably a case of deliberate ambiguity (double entendre). The adjective "foreigners" is used for both foreign people (so Jer 30:8; 51:51) and foreign gods (so Jer 2:25; 3:13). See also Jer 16:13 for the idea of having to serve other gods in the lands of exile. 30 sn: The verbs are

This verb oc- curs only here. The lexicons generally relate it to the word translated "plate" in Song 5:14 and understand it to mean "smooth, shiny" (so BDB 799 s.v. I תִּשְׁטֹף תִּשְׁטֹף) ‡†††† tn: Heb "they cross over/trans-
 gress with respect to matters of evil." sn: There is a wordplay in the use of this word which has twice been applied in v. 22 to the sea not crossing the boundary set for it by God. §§§†† tn: Heb "Should I not punish...? Should I not bring retribution...?" The rhetorical ques- tions function as emphatic declarations. sn: These words are repeat- ed from 5:9 to give a kind of refrain justifying again the necessity of punishment in the light of such sins. 18 tn: Heb "they shall rule at their hands." Since the word "hand" can be used figuratively for authority or mean "side" and the pronoun "them" can refer to the priests themselves or the prophets, the following translations have also been suggested: "the priests rule under their [the prophets'] di- rections," or "the priests rule in league with them [the prophets]." From the rest of the book it would appear that the prophets did not exercise authority over the priests nor did they exercise the same authority over the people that the priests did. Hence it probably mean "by their own hand/power/authority." 19 tn: Heb "But what will you do at its end?" The rhetorical question implies a nega- tive answer: "Nothing!" 20 tn: Heb "Flee for safety, people of Ben- jamin, out of the midst of Jerusalem." sn: Compare and contrast Jer 4:6. There people in the outlying areas were warned to seek safety in the fortified city of Jerusalem. Here they are told to flee it because it was about to be destroyed. map: For location see . 21 tn: Heb "ram's horn," but the modern equivalent is "trumpet" and is more readily understandable. 22 tn: Heb "leans down" or "looks down." This verb personifies destruction leaning/looking down from its win- dow in the sky, ready to attack. 23 tn: Heb "[It will be] a severe fracture." The nation is pictured as a limb being fractured. sn: This passage is emotionally charged. There are two examples of asso- nance or wordplay in the verse: "sound" (Heb tiq'u, "blow"), which has the same consonants as "Tekoa" (Heb uvitqoa'), and "signal fire," which comes from the same root as "light" (Heb sy'u mas'et, "lift up"). There is also an example of personification where disaster is said to "lurk" ( Heb "look down on") out of the north. This gives a sense of urgency and concern for the coming destruction. 24 tn:

The verb here is another example of the Hebrew verb form that indicates the action is as good as done (a Hebrew prophetic perfect).
25 sn: Jerusalem is personified as a young maiden who is helpless in the hands of her enemies. † tn: Heb "The beautiful and delicate one I will destroy, the daughter of Zion. The English versions and commentaries are divided over the rendering of this verse because (1) there are two verbs with these same consonants, one meaning "to be like" and the other meaning "to be destroyed" (intransitive) or "to destroy" (transitive), and (2) the word rendered "beautiful" ( נָאִוָּה

‡ tn: Heb

"They will thrust [= pitch] tents around it." The shepherd imagery has a surprisingly ominous tone. The beautiful pasture filled with shepherds grazing their sheep is in reality a city under siege from an attacking enemy. †† tn: Heb "They will graze each one his portion." For the use of the verb "graze" to mean "strip" or "devastate" see BDB 945 s.v. נָעִוָּה

This is probably an idiom from early Israel's holy wars in which religious rites were to precede the battle. ‡‡‡ tn: These words are not in the text but are supplied in the translation for clarity. Some commentaries and English versions see these not as the words of the enemy but as those of the Israelites expressing their fear that the enemy will launch a night attack against them and further destroy them. The connection with the next verse, however, fits better with them if they are the words of the enemy. § tn: Heb "Woe to us!" For the usage of this phrase see the translator's note on 4:13. The usage of this particle here is a little exaggerated. They have lost the most advantageous time for attack but they are scarcely in a hopeless or doomed situation. The equivalent in English slang is "Bad news!" §† tn: Heb "For." The translation attempts to make the connection clearer. §†† tn: Heb "Yahweh of armies." sn: For an explanation of the significance of this title see the study note on 2:19.

The meaning of this line is uncertain. The LXX reads, "Woe, city of falsehood!" The MT presents two anomalies: a masculine singular verb with a feminine singular subject in a verbal stem (Hophal) that elsewhere does not have the meaning "is to be punished." Hence many follow the Greek which presupposes הוּ עִיר הַשְּׂקֵר הִיא הָעִיר הַפְּקֹדָה

Jeremiah uses a figure of speech (enallage) where the speaker turns from talking about someone to address him/her directly. 18 tn: Heb "lest my soul [= I] becomes disgusted with you." sn: The wordplay begun with "sound...in Tekoa" in v. 1 and continued with "they will pitch" in v. 3 is concluded here with "turn away" ( וּבָתְּקוֹעַ תִּקְעוּ ) 19 tn: Heb "Yahweh of armies." sn: For an explanation of the significance of this title see the study note on 2:19. 20 tn: The words "to me" are not in the text but are supplied in the translation for clarity. 21 tn: Heb "They will thoroughly glean those who are left in Israel like a vine." That is, they will be carried off by judgment. It is not necessary to read the verb forms here as two imperatives or an infinitive absolute followed by an imperative as some English versions and commentaries do. This is an example of a third plural verb used impersonally and translated as a passive (cf. GKC 460 §144. g).

all one long sentence in the Hebrew text. It has been broken up for English stylistic reasons. Somewhat literally it reads "Will you steal...then come and stand...and say, 'We are safe' so as to/in order to do..." The Hebrew of v. 9 has a series of infinitives which emphasize the bare action of the verb without the idea of time or agent. The effect is to place a kind of staccato like emphasis on the multitude of their sins all of which are violations of one of the Ten Commandments. The final clause in v. 8 expresses purpose or result (probably result) through another infinitive. This long sentence is introduced by a marker ( <sup>נ</sup>

The translation follows the ancient Jewish tradition of substituting the Hebrew word for God for the proper name Yahweh. ‡‡‡ tn: Heb "this place." Some see this as a reference to the temple but the context has been talking about what goes on in the towns of Judah and Jerusalem and the words that follow, meant as a further explanation, are applied to the whole land. § tn: Heb "the trees of/in the field and the fruit of/in the ground." §† tn: The words "The LORD

Consider this:§†† When I spoke to your ancestors after I brought them out of Egypt, I did not merely give them commands about burnt offerings and sacrifices. <sup>23</sup> I also explicitly commanded them:§† "Obey me. If you do, I§† will be your God and you will be my people. Live exactly the way I tell you§†† and things will go well with you." <sup>24</sup> But they did not listen to me or pay any attention to me. They followed the stubborn inclinations of their own wicked hearts. They acted worse and worse instead of better. <sup>§§†25</sup> From the time your ancestors departed the land of Egypt until now,§§§ I sent my servants the prophets to you again and again, <sup>18</sup> day after day. <sup>1926</sup> But your ancestors<sup>20</sup> did not listen to me nor pay attention to me. They became obstinate<sup>21</sup> and were more wicked than even their own forefathers."

<sup>27</sup> Then the LORD said to me,<sup>22</sup> "When you tell them all this, they will not listen to you. When you call out to

§†† tn: Heb "For" but this introduces a long explanation about the relative importance of sacrifice and obedience. §† tn: Verses 22-23a read in Hebrew, "I did not speak with your ancestors and I did not command them when I brought them out of Egypt about words/matters concerning burnt offering and sacrifice, but I commanded them this word." Some modern commentators have explained this passage as an evidence for the lateness of the Pentateuchal instruction regarding sacrifice or a denial that sacrifice was practiced during the period of the wilderness wandering. However, it is better explained as an example of what R. de Vaux calls a dialectical negative, i.e., "not so much this as that" or "not this without that" (Ancient Israel, 454-56). For other examples of this same argument see Isa 1:10-17; Hos 6:4-6; Amos 5:21-25. §‡ tn: Heb "Obey me and I will be." The translation is equivalent syntactically but brings out the emphasis in the command. §§† tn: Heb "Walk in all the way that I command you." §§‡ tn: Or "They went backward and not forward"; Heb "They were to the backward and not to the forward." The two phrases used here appear nowhere else in the Bible and the latter preposition plus adverb elsewhere is used temporally meaning "formerly" or "previously." The translation follows the proposal of J. Bright, Jeremiah (AB), 57. Another option is "they turned their backs to me, not their faces," understanding the line as a variant of a line in 2:27. §§§ tn: Heb "from the day your ancestors...until this very day." However, "day" here is idiomatic for "the present time." <sup>18</sup> tn: On the Hebrew idiom see the note at 7:13. <sup>19</sup> tc: There is some textual debate about the legitimacy of this expression here. The text reads merely "day" ( יוֹם

<sup>‡0</sup> tn: Or "But your predecessors..."; Heb "But they..." There is a confusing interchange in the pronouns in vv. 25-26 which has led to some leveling in the ancient versions and the modern English versions. What is involved here are four levels of referents, the "you" of the present generation (vv. 21-22a), the ancestors who were delivered from Egypt (i.e., the "they" of vv. 22b-24), the "you" of v. 25 which involves all the Israelites from the Exodus to the time of speaking, and the "they" of v. 26 which cannot be the ancestors of vv. 22-24 (since they cannot be more wicked than themselves) but must be an indefinite entity which is a part of the "you" of v. 25, i.e., the more immediate ancestors of the present generation. If this is kept in mind, there is no need to level the pronouns to "they" and "them" or to "you" and "your" as some of the ancient versions and modern English versions have done. <sup>21</sup> tn: Heb "hardened [or made stiff] their neck." <sup>22</sup> tn: The words, "Then the LORD them, they will not respond to you.<sup>28</sup> So tell them: 'This is a nation that has not obeyed the LORD their God and has not accepted correction. Faithfulness is nowhere to be found in it. These people do not even profess it anymore.<sup>129</sup> So, mourn,† you people of this nation. ‡ Cut off your hair and throw it away. Sing a song of mourning on the hilltops. For the LORD has decided to reject†† and forsake this generation that has provoked his wrath!''' ‡‡

† tn: Heb "Faithfulness has vanished. It is cut off from their lips." sn: For the need for faithfulness see 5:1, 3. †† tn: The word "mourn" is not in the text. It is supplied in the translation for clarity to explain the significance of the words "Cut your hair and throw it away." sn: Cf. Mic 1:16; Job 1:20 for other examples of this practice which was involved in mourning. ‡ tn: The words, "you people of this nation" are not in the text. Many English versions supply, "Jerusalem." The address shifts from second masculine singular addressing Jeremiah (vv. 27-28a) to second feminine singular. It causes less disruption in the flow of the context to see the nation as a whole addressed here as a feminine singular entity (as, e.g., in 2:19, 23; 3:2, 3; 6:26) than to introduce a new entity, Jerusalem. †† tn: The verbs here are the Hebrew scheduling perfects. For this use of the perfect see GKC 312 §106. m. ††† tn: Heb "the generation of his wrath." †††† tn: The words "I have rejected them" are not in the Hebrew text, which merely says "because." These words are supplied in the translation to show more clearly the connection to the preceding. ††††† tn: Heb "have done the evil in my eyes." § sn: Compare, e.g., 2 Kgs 21:3, 5, 7; 23:4, 6; Ezek 8:3, 5, 10-12, 16. Manasseh had desecrated the temple by building altars, cult symbols, and idols in it. Josiah had purged the temple of these pagan elements. But it is obvious from both Jeremiah and Ezekiel that they had been replaced shortly after Josiah's death. They were a primary cause of Judah's guilt and punishment (see beside this passage, 19:5; 32:34-35). §† tn: Heb "the house which is called by my name." Cf. 7:10, 11, 14 and see the translator's note 7:10 for the explanation for this rendering. §†† tn: Heb "high places." sn: These places of worship were essentially open air shrines often located on hills or wooded heights. They were generally connected with pagan worship and equipped with altars of sacrifice and of incense and cult objects such as wooden poles and stone pillars which were symbols of the god and/or goddess worshiped at the sight. The Israelites were commanded to tear down these Canaanite places of worship ( Num 33:52) but they did not do so, often taking over the site for the worship of Yahweh but even then incorporating some of the pagan cult objects and ritual into their worship of Yahweh ( 1 Kgs 12:31, 32; 14:23). The prophets were especially opposed to these places and to this kind of syncretism ( Hos 10:8; Amos 7:9) and to the pagan worship that was often practiced at them ( Jer 7:31; 19:5; 32:35). §‡ tn: Heb "the high places of [or in] Topheth." sn: The noun Topheth is generally explained as an artificial formation of a word related to the Aramaic word for "cooking stove" combined with the vowels for the word for "shame." Hence, Jewish piety viewed it as a very shameful act, one that was contrary to the law (see Lev 18:21; 20:2-6). Child sacrifice was practiced during the reigns of the wicked kings Ahaz and Manasseh and apparently during Jeremiah's day (cf. 2 Kgs 16:3; 21:6; Jer 32:35).

That is something I never commanded them to do! Indeed, it never even entered my mind to command such a thing! <sup>§††32</sup> So, watch out!§† says the LORD. "The time will soon come when people will no longer call those places Topheth or the Valley of Ben Hinnom. But they will call that valley§† the Valley of Slaughter and they will bury so many people in Topheth they will run out of room. <sup>§§†33</sup> Then the dead bodies of these people will be left on the ground for the birds and wild animals to eat. §§† There will not be any survivors to scare them away. <sup>34</sup> I will put an end to the sounds of joy and gladness, or the glad celebration of brides and grooms throughout the towns of Judah and the streets of Jerusalem. For the whole land will become a desolate wasteland."

8 The LORD says, "When that time comes, §§§ the bones of the kings of Judah and its leaders, the bones of the priests and prophets and of all the other people who lived in Jerusalem will be dug up from their graves. <sup>2</sup> They will be spread out and exposed to the sun, the moon and the stars. <sup>18</sup> These are things they<sup>19</sup> adored and served, things to which they paid allegiance, <sup>20</sup> from which they sought guidance, and worshiped. The bones of these people<sup>21</sup> will never be regathered and reburied. They will be like manure used to fertilize the ground. <sup>223</sup> However, I will leave some of these wicked people alive and banish them to other places. But wherever these people who survive may go, they will wish they had died rather than lived," <sup>23</sup> says the LORD who rules over all. <sup>24</sup>

See the translator's note at 2:5 for the idiom. <sup>21</sup> tn: Heb "they will not" but the referent is far enough removed that it might be ambiguous. <sup>22</sup> tn: Heb "like dung/manure on the surface of the ground." <sup>23</sup> tn: Heb "Death will be chosen rather than life by the remnant who are left from this wicked family in all the places where I have banished them." The sentence is broken up and restructured to avoid possible confusion because of the complexity of the English to some modern readers. There appears to be an extra "those who are left" that was inadvertently copied from the preceding line. It is missing from one Hebrew ms

‡ tn: Or "to their allegiance to false gods," or "to their false professions of loyalty"; Heb "to deceit." Either "to their mistaken beliefs" or "to their allegiance to false gods" would fit the preceding context. The former is more comprehensive than the latter and was chosen for that reason. †† sn: There is a continuing play on the same root word used in the preceding verse. Here the words "turn away from me," "apostasy," and "turn back to me" are all forms from the root that was translated "go the wrong way" and "turn around" in v. 4. The intended effect is to contrast Judah's recalcitrant apostasy with the usual tendency to try and correct one's mistakes. ‡‡ tn: Heb "I have paid attention and I have listened." This is another case of two concepts being joined by "and" where one expresses the main idea and the other acts as an adverbial or adjectival modifier (a figure called hendiadys). ‡‡† tn: Heb "What have I done?" The addition of the word "wrong" is implicit in the context and is supplied in the translation for clarity. The rhetorical question does not function as a denial of wrongdoing, but rather as contrite shock at one's own wrongdoing. It is translated as a declaration for the sake of clarity. ‡‡‡ tn: Heb "each one of them turns aside into their own running course." sn: The wordplay begun in v. 4 is continued here. The word translated "turns aside" in the literal translation and "wayward" in the translation is from the same root as "go the wrong way," "turn around," "turn away from me," "apostasy," "turn back to me." What God hoped for were confessions of repentance and change of behavior; what he got was denial of wrongdoing and continued turning away from him. § tn: Heb "its appointed time." The translation is contextually motivated to avoid lack of clarity. §† tn: There is debate in the commentaries and lexicons about the identification of some of these birds, particularly regarding the identification of the "swallow" which is more likely the "swift" and the "crane" which some identify with the "thrush." For a discussion see the Bible encyclopedias and the UBS handbook Fauna and Flora of the Bible. The identity of the individual birds makes little difference to the point being made and "swallow" is more easily identifiable to the average reader than the "swift." §†† tn: Heb "keep." Ironically birds, which do not think, obey the laws of nature, but Israel does not obey the laws of God.

But my people pay no attention to§† what I, the LORD, require of them. §††

8 How can you say, "We are wise! We have the law of the LORD"? The truth is,§† those who teach it§† have used their writings

They will be dumbfounded and be brought to judgment. §§†

Since they have rejected the word of the LORD, what wisdom do they really have? 10 §§§

So I will give their wives to other men and their fields to new owners.

For from the least important to the most important of them,

11 They offer only superficial help for the hurt my dear people<sup>18</sup> have suffered. 19

They say, "Everything will be all right!" But everything is not all right! 20 12 Are they ashamed because they have done such disgusting things?

No, they are not at all ashamed!

They do not even know how to blush! So they will die just like others have died. 21

They will be brought to ruin when I punish them, says the LORD.

13 I will take away their harvests,<sup>22</sup> says the LORD.

§† tn: Heb "do not know." But here as elsewhere the word "know" is more than an intellectual matter. It is intended here to summarize both "know" and "follow" (Heb "observe") in the preceding lines. §†† tn: Heb "the ordinance/requirement of the LORD" §† tn: Heb "Surely, behold!" §‡ tn: Heb "the scribes." §§† tn: Heb "The lying pen of the scribes have made [it] into a lie." The translation is an attempt to make the most common interpretation of this passage understandable for the average reader. This is, however, a difficult passage whose interpretation is greatly debated and whose syntax is capable of other interpretations. The interpretation of the NJPS, "Assuredly, for naught has the pen labored, for naught the scribes," surely deserves consideration within the context; i.e. it hasn't done any good for the scribes to produce a reliable copy of the law, which the people have refused to follow. That interpretation has the advantage of explaining the absence of an object for the verb "make" or "labored" but creates a very unbalanced poetic couplet. §§‡ tn: Heb "be trapped." However, the word "trapped" generally carries with it the connotation of divine judgment. See BDB 540 s.v. לָכַד

§§§ sn: See Jer 6:12-15 for parallels to 8:10-12. The words of Jeremiah to the people may have been repeated on more than one occasion or have been found appropriate to more than one of his collection of messages in written and edited form. See Jer 36:4 and Jer 36:28 for reference to at least two of these collections. 18 tn: Heb "daughter of my people." For the translation given here see 4:11 and the note on the phrase "dear people" there. 19 tn: Heb "They heal the wound of my people lightly." 20 tn: Heb "They say, 'Peace! Peace!' and there is no peace!" 21 tn: Heb "They will fall among the fallen." 22 tn: Or "I will completely destroy them." The translation which is adopted is based † tn: The meaning of this line is very uncertain. A possible alternate translation is: “They have broken the laws that I gave them.” The line reads rather literally “And I gave them they passed over them.” The translation adopted treats the first expression as a noun clause (cf. GKC 488-89 §155. n) which is the subject of the following verb, i.e., “the things I gave them [contextually, the grapes, etc.] passed over from them.” The alternate translation treats the expression as a dangling object (a Hebrew casus pendens) resumed by the pronoun “them” and understands “the things that I gave them” to be the law or some related entity which is often the object of this verb (see BDB 717 s.v. עָבַר

†† tn: The words “The people say” are not in the text but are implicit in the shift of speakers between vv. 4-13 and vv. 14-16. They are supplied in the translation for clarity. ‡ tn: Heb “Gather together and let us enter into the fortified cities.” ‡† tn: Heb “Let us die there.” The words “at least” and “fighting” are intended to bring out the contrast of passive surrender to death in the open country and active resistance to the death implicit in the context. ‡‡ tn: The words “of judgment” are not in the text but are intended to show that “poison water” is not literal but figurative of judgment at the hands of God through the agency of the enemy mentioned in v. 16. ‡‡† tn: Heb “against the LORD

‡‡‡ tn: Heb “[We hoped] for a time of healing but behold terror.” § tn: Heb “his stallions.” §† tn: The words “They are coming to destroy” are not in the text. They are inserted to break up a long sentence in conformity with contemporary English style. §†† tn: These words which are at the end of the Hebrew verse are brought forward to show at the outset the shift in speaker. §‡ tn: Heb “Indeed [or For] behold!” The translation is intended to convey some of the connection that is suggested by the Hebrew particle כִּי §†† tn: Heb “I am sending against you snakes, poisonous ones which cannot be charmed.” In the light of the context literal snakes are scarcely meant. So the metaphor is turned into a simile to prevent possible confusion. For a similar metaphorical use of animals for enemies see 5:6. §† tn: Heb “they will bite you.” There does not appear to be any way to avoid the possible confusion that literal snakes are meant here except to paraphrase. Possibly one could say “And they will attack you and ‘bite’ you,” but the enclosing of the word “bite” in quotations might lead to even further confusion. §‡ tn: The words, “Then I said” are not in the text but there is a general consensus that the words of vv. 18-19a are the words of Jeremiah. These words are supplied in the translation for clarity. §§† tn: The meaning of this word is uncertain. The translation is based on the redivision and repointing of a word that occurs only here in the MT and whose pattern of formation is unparalleled in the Hebrew Bible. The MT reads מַבְלִיגִיתִי give the mistaken impression that Jeremiah is being addressed. This is another example of the tendency in Hebrew style to turn from description to direct address (a figure of speech called apostrophe).

 been adopted is based on a redivision of the lines, a redivision of some of the words, and a revocalization of some of the consonants.
 The MT reads literally "doing wrong they weary themselves. Your sit-

The Coming Destruction Calls For Mourning

10 I said, §††
 "I will weep and mourn§‡ for the grasslands on the mountains, §††
 I will sing a mournful song for the pastures in the wilderness
 because they are so scorched no one travels through them.
 The sound of livestock is no longer heard there.
 Even the birds in the sky and the wild animals in the fields have fled and are gone."
 11 The LORD said, §†
 "I will make Jerusalem§‡ a heap of ruins.
 Jackals will make their home there. §††
 I will destroy the towns of Judah
 so that no one will be able to live in them."

Who has a word from the LORD that can explain it? 18
 Why does the land lie in ruins?
 Why is it as scorched as a desert through which no one travels?"

13 The LORD answered, "This has happened because these people have rejected my laws which I gave them. They have not obeyed me or followed those laws. 1914 Instead they have followed the stubborn inclinations of their own hearts. They have paid alle-

 Some English versions follow the Greek text which reads a plural imperative here. Since this reading would make the transition between 9:10 and 9:11 easier it is probably not original but a translator's way of smoothing over a difficulty. §‡ tn: Heb "I will lift up weeping

However, without some addition it is not clear to whom the command is addressed. The words are supplied in the translation for clarity and to help resolve a rather confusing issue of who is speaking throughout vv. 16-21. As has been evident throughout the translation, the speaker is not always indicated. Sometimes it is not even clear who the speaker is. In general the translation and the notes have reflected the general consensus in identifying who it is. Here, however, there is a good deal of confusion about who is speaking in vv. 18, 20-21. The Greek translation has the LORD

They have been supplied in the translation to try and help clarify who the speaker is who identifies with the lament of the people. ‡†† tn: The words "They will wail" are not in the text. They are supplied in the translation to make clear that this is the wailing that will be heard. sn: The destruction is still in the future, but it is presented graphically as though it had already taken place. §† tn: Heb "How we are ruined!"

‡†† tn: The order of these two lines has been reversed for English stylistic reasons. The text reads in Hebrew "because we have left our land because they have thrown down our dwellings." The two clauses offer parallel reasons for the cries "How ruined we are! [How] we are greatly disgraced!" But the first line must contain a prophetic perfect (because the lament comes from Jerusalem) and the second a perfect referring to a destruction that is itself future. This seems the only way to render the verse that would not be misleading. ‡† tn: The words "I said" are not in the text. The text merely has "Indeed, yes." The words are supplied in the translation to indicate that the speaker is still Jeremiah though he now is not talking about the mourning woman but is talking to them. See the notes on 9:17-18 for further explanation. §† tn: It is a little difficult to explain how the Hebrew particle וְ

The pronouns in this verse are feminine singular in Hebrew. Jerusalem is being personified as a single woman. This personification carries on down through v. 19 where she speaks in the first person. It is difficult, however, to reflect this in a translation that conveys any meaning without being somewhat paraphrastic like this. §† tn: The meaning of this last line is somewhat uncertain: Heb "I will cause them distress in order that [or with the result that] they will find." The absence of an object for the verb "find" has led to conjecture that the text is wrong. Some commentators follow the lead of the Greek and Latin versions which read the verb as a passive: "they will be found," i.e., be caught and captured. Others follow a suggestion by G. R. Driver ("Linguistic and Textual Problems: Jeremiah," JQR 28 [1937-38]: 107) that the verb be read not as "they will find" ( ימצאו )

The words of vv. 19-20 would best be assigned to a personified Jerusalem who laments the destruction of her city (under the figure of a tent) and the exile of her children (under the figure of children). However, the words of v. 21 which assign responsibility to the rulers do not fit well in the mouth of the people but do fit Jeremiah. The words of v. 22 are very appropriate to Jeremiah being similar to the report in 4:19-20. Likewise the words of v. 23 which appear to express man's incapacity to control his own destiny and his resignation to the fate which awaits him in the light of v. 24 seem more appropriate to Jeremiah than to the people. There has been no indication elsewhere that the people have shown any indication of being resigned to their fate or willing to accept their punishment. Though the issue is far from resolved a majority of commentators see Jeremiah as the speaker so identifying himself with their fate that he speaks as though he were this personified figure. It is not altogether out of the question, however, that the speaker throughout is personified Jerusalem though I know of no commentator who takes that view. For those who are interested, the most thorough discussion of the issue is probably to be found in W. McKane, Jeremiah (ICC), 1:230-35, especially 233-35. Rendering the pronouns throughout as "we" and "our" alleviates some of the difficulty but some speaker needs to be identified in the introduction to allay any possible confusion. Hence I have opted for what is the majority view. §‡ tn: Heb "Woe to me on account of my wound." The words "woe to" in many contexts carry the connotation of hopelessness and of inevitable doom (cf. 1 Sam 4:7, 8; Isa 6:5), hence a "deadly blow." See also the usage in 4:13, 31; 6:4 and the notes on 4:13. For the rendering of the pronoun as "we" and "our" here and in the verses to follow see the preceding note. §†† tn: Some interpret this as a resignation to the punishment inflicted and translate "But I said, 'This is my punishment and I will just need to bear it.'" This is unlikely given the meaning and usage of the word rendered "sickness" ( אִי ) versions. ††† tn: Heb "know you." For this use of the word "know" ( וַדַּד † tn: Heb "tribes/clans." †† tn: Heb "who do not call on your name." The idiom "to call on your name" (directed to God) refers to prayer (mainly) and praise.

See 1 Kgs 18:24-26 and Ps 116:13, 17. Here "calling on your name" is parallel to "acknowledging you." In many locations in the OT "name" is equivalent to the person. In the OT, the "name" reflected the person's character (cf. Gen 27:36; 1 Sam 25:25) or his reputation ( Gen 11:4; 2 Sam 8:13). To speak in a person's name was to act as his representative or carry his authority ( 1 Sam 25:9; 1 Kgs 21:8). To call someone's name over something was to claim it for one's own ( 2 Sam 12:28). ††† tn: Heb "have devoured Jacob." ††† tn: Or "have almost completely destroyed them"; Heb "they have devoured them and consumed them." The figure of hyperbole is used here; elsewhere Jeremiah and God refer to the fact that they will not be completely consumed. See for example 4:27; 5:10, 18. ††† tn: Heb

†† tn: The form is a second masculine plural which is followed in the MT of vv. 2-3 by second masculine singulars. This plus the fact that the whole clause "listen to the terms of this covenant" is nearly repeated at the end of
v. 3 has led many modern scholars to delete the whole clause (cf., e.g. W. McKane, Jeremiah [ICC], 1:236-37). However, this only leads to further adjustments in the rest of the verse which are difficult to justify. The form has also led to a good deal of speculation about who these others were that are initially addressed here. The juxtaposition of second plural and singular forms has a precedent in Deuteronomy, where the nation is sometimes addressed with the plural and at other times with a collective singular. †† sn: The covenant I made with Israel. Apart from the legal profession and Jewish and Christian tradition the term "covenant" may not be too familiar. There were essentially three kinds of "covenants" that were referred to under the Hebrew term used here: (1) "Parity treaties" or "covenants" between equals in which each party pledged itself to certain agreed upon stipulations and took an oath to it in the name them on<sup>s</sup>† to the people of Judah and the citizens of Jerusalem. †††3 Tell them that the LORD, the God of Israel, says, 'Anyone who does not keep the terms of the covenant will be under a curse. 184 Those are the terms that I charged your ancestors<sup>19</sup> to keep<sup>20</sup> when I brought them out of Egypt, that place which was like an iron-smelting furnace. 21 I said at that time, 22 "Obey me and carry out the terms of the agreement<sup>23</sup> exactly as I commanded you. If you do, 24 you will be my people and I will be your God. 255 Then I will keep the of their god or gods (cf. Gen 31:44-54); (2) "Suzerain-vassal treaties" or "covenants" in which a great king pledged himself to protect the vassal's realm and his right to rule over his own domain in exchange for sovereignty over the vassal, including the rendering of absolute loyalty and submission to the great king's demands spelled out in detailed stipulations; (3) "Covenants of grant" in which a great king granted to a loyal servant or vassal king permanent title to a piece of land or dominion over a specified realm in recognition of past service. It is generally recognized that the Mosaic covenant which is being referred to here is of the second type and that it resembles in kind the ancient Near Eastern suzerain-vassal treaties.

These treaties typically contained the following elements: (1) a preamble identifying the great king (cf. Exod 20:2a; Deut 1:1-4); (2) a historical prologue summarizing the great king's past benefactions as motivation for future loyalty (cf. Exod 20:2b; Deut 1:5-4:43); (3) the primary stipulation of absolute and unconditional loyalty (cf. Exod 20:3-8; Deut 5:1- 11:32); (4) specific stipulations governing future relations between the vassal and the great king and the vassal's relation to other vassals (cf. Exod 20:22-23:33; Deut 12:1- 26:15); (5) the invoking of curses on the vassal for disloyalty and the pronouncing of blessing on him for loyalty (cf. Lev 26; Deut 27-28); (6) the invoking of witnesses to the covenant, often the great king's and the vassal's gods (cf. Deut 30:19; 31:28 where the reference is to the "heavens and the earth" as enduring witnesses). It is also generally agreed that the majority of the threats of punishment by the prophets refer to the invocation of these covenant curses for disloyalty to the basic stipulation, that of absolute loyalty. ††† tn: Heb
"this covenant." The referent of "this" is left dangling until it is further defined in vv. 3-4. Leaving it undefined in the translation may lead to confusion hence the anticipatory nature of the demonstrative is spelled out explicitly in the translation. ††† tn: Heb "and speak/tell them." However, the translation chosen is more appropriate to modern idiom. ††† tn: Or "those living in Jerusalem"; Heb "inhabitants of." map: For location see . 18 tn: Heb "Cursed is the person who does not listen to the terms of this covenant." "This covenant" is further qualified in the following verse by a relative clause. The form of the sentence and the qualification "my" before covenant were chosen for better English idiom and to break up a long sentence which really extends to the middle of v. 5. 19 tn:
Heb "fathers" (also in vv. 5, 7, 10). 20 tn: Heb "does not listen...this covenant which I commanded your fathers." The sentence is broken up this way in conformity with contemporary English style. 21 tn: Heb "out of the land of Egypt, out of the iron-smelting furnace."
22 tn: In place of the words "I said at that time" the Hebrew text has "saying." The sentence is again being restructured in English to avoid the long, confusing style of the Hebrew original. 23 tn: Heb "Obey me and carry them out." The "them" refers back to the terms of the covenant which they were charged to keep according to the preceding. The referent is made specific to avoid ambiguity.
24 tn: The words, "If you do" are not in the text. They have been supplied in the translation to break up a long sentence consisting of an imperative followed by a consequential sentence. 25 sn: Obey me and carry out the terms of the agreement...and I will be your God. This refers to the Mosaic law which was instituted at Sinai and renewed on the Plains of Moab before Israel entered into the land.
The words "the terms of the covenant" are explicitly used for the Ten Commandments in Exod 34:28 and for the additional legislation givpromise I swore on oath to your ancestors to give them a land flowing with milk and honey." † That is the very land that you still live in today." †† And I responded, "Amen! Let it be so, LORD!"

Each one of them followed the stubborn inclinations of his own wicked heart. So I brought on them all the punishments threatened in the covenant because they did not carry out its terms as I commanded them to do.'" †††

en in Deut 28:69; 29:8. The formulation here is reminiscent of Deut 29:9-14 (29:10-15 HT). The book of Deuteronomy is similar in its structure and function to an ancient Near Eastern treaty. In these the great king reminded his vassal of past benefits that he had given to him, charged him with obligations (the terms or stipulations of the covenant) chief among which was absolute loyalty and sole allegiance, promised him future benefits for obeying the stipulations (the blessings), and placed him under a curse for disobeying them. Any disobedience was met with stern warnings of punishment in the form of destruction and exile. Those who had witnessed the covenant were called in to confirm the continuing goodness of the great king and the disloyalty of the vassal. The vassal was then charged with a list of particular infringements of the stipulations and warned to change his actions or suffer the consequences. This is the background for Jer 11:1-9. Jeremiah is here functioning as a messenger from the LORD

† tn: The phrase "a land flowing with milk and honey" is very familiar to readers in the Jewish and Christian traditions as a proverbial description of the agricultural and pastoral abundance of the land of Israel. However, it may not mean too much to readers outside those traditions; an equivalent expression would be "a land of fertile fields and fine pastures." E. W. Bullinger (Figures of Speech, 626) identifies this as a figure of speech called synecdoche where the species is put for the genus, "a region...abounding with pasture and fruits of all kinds." †† tn: Heb "a land flowing with milk and honey," as at this day." However, the literal reading is too elliptical and would lead to confusion. † tn: The words "Let it be so" are not in the text; they are an explanation of the significance of the term "Amen" for those who may not be part of the Christian or Jewish tradition. sn: The word amen is found at the end of each of the curses in Deut 27 where the people express their agreement with the appropriateness of the curse for the offense mentioned. †† tn: Heb "the terms of this covenant." However, this was a separate message and the ambiguity of "this" could still cause some confusion. †† tn: Heb "warned them...saying, 'Obey me.'" However, it allows the long sentence to be broken up easier if the indirect quote is used. ††† tn: For the explanation for this rendering see the note on 7:13. †††† tn: Heb "So I brought on them all the terms of this covenant which I commanded to do and they did not do." There is an interesting polarity that is being exploited by two different nuances implicit in the use of the word "terms" (דְּבָרִים) LORD ancestors of old who refused to obey what I told them. They, too, have paid allegiance to§†† other gods and worshiped them. Both the nation of Israel and the nation of Judah§† have violated the covenant I made with their ancestors.<sup>11</sup> So I, the LORD, say this: §†† 'I will soon bring disaster on them which they will not be able to escape! When they cry out to me for help, I will not listen to them.<sup>12</sup> Then those living in the towns of Judah and in Jerusalem will§† go and cry out for help to the gods to whom they have been sacrificing. However, those gods will by no means§† be able to save them when disaster strikes them.<sup>13</sup> This is in spite of the fact that§§† the people of Judah have as many gods as they have towns§§† and the citizens of Jerusalem have set up as many altars to sacrifice to that disgusting god, Baal, as they have streets in the city!<sup>§§§14</sup> So, Jeremiah,<sup>18</sup> do not pray for these people. Do not cry out to me or petition me on their behalf. Do not plead with me to save them.<sup>19</sup> For I will not listen to them when they call out to me for help when disaster strikes them."<sup>20</sup>

§† tn: Heb "Then the towns of Judah and those living in Jerusalem will..." §† tn: The Hebrew construction is emphatic involving the use of an infinitive of the verb before the verb itself (Heb "saving they will not save"). For this construction to give emphasis to an antithesis, cf. GKC 343 §113. p. §†† tn: This is again an attempt to render the Hebrew particle וְ

וְ §§† sn: Cf. Jer 2:28. §§§ tn: Heb "For [or Indeed] the number of your [sing.] cities are your [sing.] gods, Judah, and the number of the streets of Jerusalem [or perhaps (your) streets, Jerusalem] you [plur.] have set up altars to the shameful thing, altars to sacrifice to Baal." This passage involves a figure of speech where the speaker turns from describing something about someone to addressing him/her directly (a figure called apostrophe). This figure is not common in contemporary English literature or conversation and translating literally would lead to confusion on the part of some readers. Hence, the translation retains the third person in keeping with the rest of the context. The shift from singular "your cities" to plural "you have set up" is interpreted contextually to refer to a shift in addressing Judah to addressing the citizens of Jerusalem whose streets are being talked about. The appositional clause, "altars to sacrifice to Baal" has been collapsed with the preceding clause to better identify what the shameful thing is and to eliminate a complex construction. The length of this sentence runs contrary to the usual practice of breaking up long complex sentences in Hebrew into shorter equivalent ones in English. However, breaking up this sentence and possibly losing the connecting link with the preceding used to introduce it might lead to misunderstanding. <sup>18</sup> tn: Heb "you." <sup>19</sup> tn: The words "to save them" are not in the text but are implicit from the context.  The text has been restructured to avoid possible confusion by the shift from third person in the first two lines to second person in the last two lines and the lines of the following verse. The reference to Judah as his “beloved” is certainly ironic and perhaps even sarcastic.
 ‡ tc: The meaning of this line is uncertain. The text reads somewhat literally either “her doing the wicked thing the many” or “doing it, the wicked thing, the many.” The text, relationship between words, and meaning of this whole verse have been greatly debated.
 Wholesale emendation based on the ancient versions is common in both the commentaries and the modern English versions. Many follow the lead of the Greek version which in many cases offers a smoother reading but for that very reason may not be original. The notes that follow will explain some of these emendations but will also attempt to explain the most likely meaning of the MT which is the more difficult and probably the more original text. Since it is presumed to be the original the text will be dealt with in the notes line for line in the MT even though the emendations often relate to more than one line. For example the Greek of the first two lines reads:
 “Why has the beloved done abomination in my house?” This ignores the preposition before “my beloved” (לִידֵי יְיָ) is another example of a verb expressing that the action is as good as done (the Hebrew prophetic perfect). †† tn: Heb "At the sound of a mighty roar he will set fire to it." For the shift from third person

 "he" to the first person "I" see the preceding note. The Hebrew use of the pronouns in vv. 16-17 for the olive tree and the people that it represents is likely to cause confusion if retained. In v. 16 the people are "you" and the olive tree is "it." The people are again "you" in v. 17 but part of the metaphor is carried over, i.e., "he 'planted' you." It creates less confusion in the flow of the passage if the metaphorical identification is carried out throughout by addressing the people/plant as "you." ‡ tn: The verb here has most commonly been derived from a root meaning "to be broken" (cf. BDB 949 s.v. II עָבַר they have done to make me angry [or thus making me angry] by sacrificing to Baal." The lines have been broken up in conformity with contemporary English style. § tn: Heb "caused me to know that I might know." Many English versions supply an unstated object "their plots" which is referred to later in the context (cf. v. 19). The presupposition of this kind of absolute ellipsis is difficult to justify and would create the need for understanding an ellipsis of "it" also after "I knew." It is better to see a bipolar use of the verb "know" here. For the second use of the verb "know" meaning "have understanding" see BDB 394 s.v. יָדַע §† tn: Heb "Then you showed me their deeds." This is another example of the rapid shift in person which is common in Jeremiah. As elsewhere, it has been resolved for the sake of avoiding confusion for the English reader by leveling the referent to the same person throughout. The text again involves an apostrophe, talking about the LORD §†† tn: Heb "against me." The words "to kill me" are implicit from the context and are supplied in the translation for clarity.

I did not know they were saying,§†

 Let's remove Jeremiah§† from the world of the living

<sup>20</sup> So I said to the LORD, §§†

 You examine people's hearts and minds. §§§

Here the parallelism argues that it refers to the nation of Judah. The translation throughout vv. 5-17 assumes that the verb forms are prophetic perfects, the form that conceives of the action as being as good as done. It is possible that the forms are true perfects and re-reader would associate with hate. See Gen 29:31, 33 and E. W.

 Bullinger, Figures of Speech, 556. § tn: Or "like speckled birds of text sentence is a question: "Is not my inheritance to me a bird of prey [or] a hyena/a speckled bird of prey?" The question expects a positive answer and so is rendered here as an affirmative statement. The meaning of the word "speckled" is debated. It occurs only here. BDB 840 s.v. צבוע

§† tn: Heb "Are birds of prey around her?" The question is again rhetorical and expects a positive answer. The birds of prey are of course the hostile nations surrounding her. The metaphor involved in these two lines may be interpreted differently. I.e., God considers Israel a proud bird of prey (hence the word for speckled) but one who is surrounded and under attack by other birds of prey. The fact that the sentences are divided into two rhetorical questions speaks somewhat against this. §†† tn: Heb "Go, gather all the beasts of the field [= wild beasts]. Bring them to devour." The verbs are masculine plural imperatives addressed rhetorically to some unidentified group (the heavenly counsel?) Cf. the notes on 5:1 for further discussion. Since translating literally would raise question about who the commands are addressed to, they have been turned into passive third person commands to avoid confusion. The metaphor has likewise been turned into a simile to help the modern reader. By the way, the imperatives here implying future action argue that the passage is future and that it is correct to take the verb forms as prophetic perfects. §‡ tn: Heb "Many shepherds." For the use of the term "shepherd" as a figure for rulers see the notes on 10:21.

 cause that would miss the figurative nuance altogether. sn: The figure of Israel as God's vine and the land as God's vineyard is found several times in the Bible. The best known of these is the extended metaphor in Isa 5:1-7. This figure also appears in Jer 2:20. §† tn:

Heb "But if they will not listen, I will uproot that nation, uprooting and destroying." IBHS 590-91 §35.3.2d is likely right in seeing the double infinitive construction here as an intensifying infinitive followed by an adverbial infinitive qualifying the goal of the main verb, "uproot it in such a way as to destroy it." However, to translate that way "literally" would not be very idiomatic in contemporary English. The translation strives for the equivalent. Likewise, to translate using the conditional structure of the original seems to put the emphasis of the passage in its context on the wrong point. §§† tn: The term here ( רִיזָה )

Elsewhere the word “Perath” always refers to the Euphrates but it is either preceded by the word “river of” or there is contextual indication that the Euphrates is being referred to. Because a journey to the Euphrates and back would involve a journey of more than 700 miles (1,100 km) and take some months, scholars both ancient and modern have questioned whether “Perath” refers to the Euphrates here and if it does whether a real journey was involved. Most of the attempts to identify the place with the Euphrates involve misguided assumptions that this action was a symbolic message to Israel about exile or the corrupting influence of Assyria and Babylon. However, unlike the other symbolic acts in Jeremiah (and in Isaiah and Ezekiel) the symbolism is not part of a message to the people but to Jeremiah; the message is explained to him (vv. 9-11) not the people. In keeping with some of the wordplays that are somewhat common in Jeremiah it is likely that the reference here is to a place, Parah, which was near Jeremiah’s hometown, but whose name would naturally suggest to Jeremiah later in the LORD

† tn: The Greek version is likely right in interpreting the construction of two perfects preceded by the conjunction as contingent or consequential here, i.e., "and when they say...then say." See GKC 494 §159. g. However, to render literally would create a long sentence. Hence, the words "will probably" have been supplied in v. 12 in the translation to set up the contingency/consequential sequence in the English sentences. †† sn: It is probably impossible to convey in a simple translation all the subtle nuances that are wrapped up in the words of this judgment speech. The word translated "stupor" here is literally "drunkenness" but the word has in the context an undoubted intended double reference. It refers first to the drunken like stupor of confusion on the part of leaders and citizens of the land which will cause them to clash with one another. But it also probably refers to the reeling under God's wrath that results from this (cf. Jer 25:15-29, especially vv. 15-16). Moreover there is still the subtle little play on wine jars. The people are like the wine jars which were supposed to be filled with wine. They were to be a special people to bring glory to God but they had become corrupt. Hence, like wine jars they would be smashed against one another and broken to pieces (v. 14). All of this, both "fill them with the stupor of confusion" and "make them reel under God's wrath," cannot be conveyed in one translation. ‡ tn: Heb "who sit on David's throne." ‡† tn: In Hebrew this is all one long sentence with one verb governing compound objects. The words “Then I said” are not in the text. They are supplied in the translation to show the shift in speaker from vv. 18-19 where the LORD † tn: The word “Jerusalem” is not in the Hebrew text. It is added in the Greek text and is generally considered to be the object of address because of the second feminine singular verbs here and throughout the following verses. The translation follows the consonantal text (Kethib) and the Greek text in reading the second feminine singular here. The verbs and pronouns in vv. 20-22 are all second feminine singular with the exception of the suffix on the word “eyes” which is not reflected in the translation here (“Look up” = “Lift up your eyes”) and the verb and pronoun in v. 23. The text may reflect the same kind of alternation between singular and plural that takes place in Isa 7 where the pronouns refer to Ahaz as an individual and his entourage, the contemporary ruling class (cf., e.g., Isa 7:4-5 [singular], 9 [plural], 11 [singular], 13-14 [plural]). Here the connection with the preceding may suggest that it is initially the ruling house (the king and the queen mother), then Jerusalem personified as a woman in her role as a shepherdess (i.e., leader). However, from elsewhere in the book the leadership has included the kings, the priests, the prophets, and the citizens as well (cf., e.g., 13:13). In v. 27 Jerusalem is explicitly addressed. It may be asking too much of some readers who are not familiar with biblical metaphors to understand an extended metaphor like this. If it is helpful to them, they may substitute plural referents for “I” and “me.” †† tn: The word “enemy” is not in the text but is implicit. It supplied in the translation for clarity. sn: On the phrase the enemy that is coming from the north see Jer 1:14-15; 4:6; 6:1, 22; 10:22.

translation has been restructured to break up a long sentence involving a conditional clause and an elliptical consequential clause. It has also been restructured to define more clearly what “these things” are. The Hebrew text reads: “And if you say, ‘Why have these things happened to me?’ Because of the greatness of your iniquity your skirts [= what your skirt covers] have been uncovered and your heels have been treated with violence.” §†† tn: This is a common proverb in English coming from this biblical passage. For cultures where it is not proverbial perhaps it would be better to translate “Can black people change the color of their skin?” Strictly speaking these are “Cushites” inhabitants of a region along the upper Nile south of Egypt. The Greek text is responsible for the identification with Ethiopia. The term in Greek is actually an epithet = “burnt face.” §† tn: Heb “Can the Ethiopian change his skin or the leopard his spots? [Then] you also will be able to do good who are accustomed to do evil.” The English sentence has been restructured and rephrased in an attempt to produce some of the same rhetorical force the Hebrew original has in this context. §† tn: The words, “The LORD

It might be argued that “them” goes back to the “flock”/“sheep” in v. 20, but the next verse refers the fate described here to “you” (feminine singular). This may be another example of the kind of metaphoric shifts in referents discussed in the notes on 13:20 above. Besides, it would sound a little odd in the translation to speak of scattering one person like chaff. §§† sn: Compare the threat using the same metaphor in Jer 4:11-12. §§§ tn: Heb “over your face and your

This word has been pulled up from the end of the verse to help make the transition. The words "people of" have been supplied in the translation here to ease the difficulty mentioned earlier of sustaining the personification throughout. †† tn: Heb "[I have seen] your adulteries, your neighings, and your shameless prostitution." The meanings of the metaphorical references have been incorporated in the translation for the sake of clarity for readers of all backgrounds. sn: The sentence is rhetorically loaded. It begins with three dangling objects of the verb all describing their adulterous relationship with the false gods under different figures and which are resumed later under the words "your disgusting acts." The Hebrew sentence reads: "Your adulteries, your neighings, your shameful prostitution, upon the hills in the fields I have seen your disgusting acts." This sentence drips with explosive disgust at their adulterous betrayal. ‡ tn: Heb "your disgusting acts." This word is almost always used of idolatry or of the idols themselves. See BDB 1055 s.v. יָזַן

‡† tn: Heb "Woe to you!" sn: See Jer 4:13, 31; 6:4; 10:19 for usage, and the notes on 4:13 and 10:19. ‡† sn: The form of Jer 14:1-15:9 is very striking rhetorically. It consists essentially of laments and responses to them. However, what makes it so striking is its deviation from normal form (cf. 2 Chr 20:5-17 for what would normally be expected). The descriptions of the lamentable situation come from the mouth of God not the people (cf. 14:1-6, 17-18). The prophet utters the petitions with statements of trust ( 14:7-9, 19-22) and the LORD

Drought was one of the punishments for failure to adhere to the terms of their covenant with God. See Deut 28:22-24; Lev 26:18-20. § tn: Heb "Judah mourns, its gates pine away, they are in mourning on the ground." There are several figures of speech involved here. The basic figure is that of personification where Judah and its cities are said to be in mourning. However, in the third line the figure is a little hard to sustain because "they" are in mourning on the ground. That presses the imagination of most moderns a little too far. Hence the personification has been interpreted "people of" throughout. The term "gates" here is used as part for whole for the "cities" themselves as in several other passages in the OT (cf. BDB 1045 s.v. שַׁעַר §† tn: The words "to me" are not in the text. They are implicit from the fact that the LORD Wells have continual sources of water. Cisterns were pits dug in the ground and lined with plaster to hold rain water. The drought had exhausted all the water in the cisterns. ‡†† tn: The word "containers" is a generic word in Hebrew = "vessels." It would probably in this case involve water "jars" or "jugs." But since in contemporary English one would normally associate those terms with smaller vessels, "containers" may be safer. ‡† tn: Heb "they cover their heads." Some of the English versions have gone wrong here because of the "normal" use of the words translated here "disappointed" and "dismayed." They are regularly translated "ashamed" and "disgraced, humiliated, dismayed" elsewhere (see e.g., Jer 22:22); they are somewhat synonymous terms which are often parallel or combined. The key here, however, is the expression "they cover their heads" which is used in 2 Sam 15:30 for the expression of grief. Moreover, the word translated here "disappointed" (

Judgment for Believing the Misleading Lies of the False Prophets

11 Then the LORD said to me, "Do not pray for good to come to these people! ††††† Even if they fast, I will not hear their cries for help. Even if they offer burnt offerings and grain offerings, I will not accept them.st Instead, I will kill them through wars, famines, and plagues."st

13 Then I said, "Oh, Lord God, ††††† look ††††† The prophets are telling them that you said, ††††† 'You will not experience war or suffer famine. 18 I will give you lasting peace and prosperity in this land.'" 19

14 Then the LORD said to me, "Those prophets are prophesying lies while claiming my authority.†† I did not send them. I did not commission them.†† I did not speak to them. They are prophesying to these people false visions, worthless predictions,†† and the delusions of their own mind. 15 I did not send those prophets, though they claim to be prophesying in my name. They may be saying, 'No war or famine will happen in this land.' But I, the LORD, say this about††† them: 'War and starvation will kill those prophets.'<sup>†††††</sup>

††††† tn: Heb "their iniquities." ††††† tn: Heb "on behalf of these people for benefit." ††††† sn: See 6:16-20 for parallels. ††††† tn: Heb "through sword, starvation, and plague." sn: These were penalties (curses) that were to be imposed on Israel for failure to keep her covenant with God (cf. The translation follows the ancient Jewish tradition of substituting the Hebrew word for God for the proper name Yahweh. ††††† tn: Heb "Behold." See the translator's note on usage of this particle in 1:6. 18 tn: The words "that you said" are not in the text but are implicit from the first person in the affirmation that follows. They are supplied in the translation for clarity. 19 tn: Heb "You will not see sword and you will not have starvation [or hunger]." 20 tn: Heb "I will give you unfailing peace in this place." The translation opts for "peace and prosperity" here for the word יְשׁוּעָה

21 tn: Heb "Falsehood those prophets are prophesying in my name." In the OT, the "name" reflected the person's character (cf. Gen 27:36; 1 Sam 25:25) or his reputation ( Gen 11:4; 2 Sam 8:13). To speak in someone's name was to act as his representative or carry his authority ( 1 Sam 25:9; 1 Kgs 21:8). 22 tn: Heb "I did not command them." Compare 1 Chr 22:12 for usage. 23 tn: Heb "divination and worthlessness." The noun "worthlessness" stands as a qualifying "of" phrase (= to an adjective; an attributive genitive in Hebrew) after a noun in Zech 11:17; Job 13:4. This is an example of hendiadys where two nouns are joined by "and" with one serving as the qualifier of the other. sn: The word translated "predictions" here is really the word "divination." Divination was prohibited in Israel (cf. Deut 18:10, 14). The practice of divination involved various mechanical means to try to predict the future. The word was used here for its negative connotations in a statement that is rhetorically structured to emphasize the falseness of the promises of the false prophets. It would be unnatural to contemporary English style to try to capture this emphasis in English. In the Hebrew text the last sentence reads: "False vision, divination, and worthlessness and the deceitfulness of their heart they are prophesying to them." For the emphasis in the preceding sentence see the note there. 24 tn: Heb "Thus says the LORD

The people to whom they are prophesying will die through war and famine. Their bodies will be thrown out into the streets of Jerusalem† and there will be no one to bury them. This will happen to the men and their wives, their sons, and their daughters. †† For I will pour out on them the destruction they deserve.” ‡

†† map: For location see . ‡ tn: Heb “And the people to whom they are prophesying will be thrown out into the streets of Jerusalem and there will not be anyone to bury them, they, their wives, and their sons and their daughters.” This sentence has been restructured to break up a long Hebrew sentence and to avoid some awkwardness due to differences in the ancient Hebrew and contemporary English styles. ‡† tn: Heb “their evil.” Hebrew words often include within them a polarity of cause and effect. Thus the word for “evil” includes both the concept of wickedness and the punishment for it. Other words that function this way are “iniquity” = “guilt [of iniquity]” = “punishment [for iniquity].” Context determines which nuance is proper. ‡‡ tn: The word “Jeremiah” is not in the text but the address is to a second person singular and is a continuation of 14:14 where the quote starts. The word is supplied in the translation for clarity. ‡‡† tn: Many of the English versions and commentaries render this an indirect or third person imperative, “Let my eyes overflow...” because of the particle אַל

אַל-תִּקְרַחְיֶנָּה

tn: Heb “virgin daughter, my people.” The last noun here is appositional to the first two (genitive of apposition). Hence it is not ‘literally’ “virgin daughter of my people.” sn: This is a metaphor which occurs several times with regard to Israel, Judah, Zion, and even Sidon and Babylon. It is the poetic personification of the people, the city, or the land. Like other metaphors the quality of the comparison being alluded to must be elicited from the context. This is easy in Isa 23:12 (oppressed) and Isa 47:1 (soft and delicate) but not so easy in other places. From the nature of the context the suspicion here is that the protection the virgin was normally privileged to is being referred to and there is a reminder that the people are forfeiting it by their actions. Hence God laments for them.

If I go into the city,
 I see those who are sick because of starvation. §

§ tn: This is a poetic personification. To translate with the plural “serious wounds” might mislead some into thinking of literal wounds. sn: Compare Jer 10:19 for a similar use of this metaphor.

§† tn: The word “starvation” has been translated “famine” elsewhere in this passage. It is the word which refers to hunger. The “starvation” here may be war induced and not simply that which comes from famine per se. “Starvation” will cover both. §†† tn: The meaning of these last two lines is somewhat uncertain. The meaning of these two lines is debated because of the uncertainty of the meaning of the verb rendered “go about their business” ( קָרַח )

§†† tn: Heb “does your soul despise.” Here as in many places the word “soul” stands as part for whole for the person himself emphasizing emotional and volitional aspects of the person. However, in contemporary English one does not regularly speak of the “soul” in contexts such as this but of the person. sn: There is probably a subtle allusion to the curses called down on the nation for failure to keep their covenant with God. The word used here is somewhat rare ( נִפְסָה )

§† tn: Heb “Why have you struck us and there is no healing for us.” The statement involves poetic exaggeration (hyperbole) for rhetorical effect. §‡ tn: Heb “[We hope] for a time of healing but

Those who are destined to go into exile will go into exile.” ‡††

3 “ I will punish them in four different ways : I will have war kill them. I will have dogs drag off their dead bodies. I will have birds and wild beasts devour and destroy their corpses. ‡†4 I will make all the people in all the kingdoms of the world horrified at what has happened to them because of what Hezekiah’s son Manasseh, king of Judah, did in Jerusalem.” ‡†

5 The LORD cried out, ‡††

Who will stop long enough‡‡‡

behold terror.” sn: The last two lines of this verse are repeated word for word from 8:15. There they are spoken by the people.

‡‡† tn: Heb “We acknowledge our wickedness [and] the iniquity of our [fore]fathers.” For the use of the word “know” to mean “confess,” “acknowledge” cf. BDB 394 s.v. יָדָע

† tn: This is another example of the intensive use of יָדָע יָדָע †† tn: Heb “For the sake of your name.” ‡ map: For location see . ‡† tn: English versions quite commonly supply “us” as an object for the verb in the first line. This is probably wrong. The Hebrew text reads: “Do not treat with contempt for the sake of your name; do not treat with disdain your glorious throne.” This is case of poetic parallelism where the object is left hanging until the second line. For an example of this see Prov 13:1 in the original and consult E. W. Bullinger, Figures of Speech, 103-4. There has also been some disagreement whether “your glorious throne” refers to the temple (as in 17:12) or Jerusalem (as in 3:17). From the beginning of the prayer in v. 19 where a similar kind of verb has been used with respect to Zion/Jerusalem it would appear that the contextual referent is Jerusalem. The absence of an object from the first line makes it possible to retain part of the metaphor in the translation and still convey some meaning. sn: The place of God’s glorious throne was first of all the ark of the covenant where God was said to be enthroned between the cherubim, then the temple that housed it, then the city itself. See 2 Kgs 19:14-15 in the context of Sennacherib’s attack on Jerusalem. ‡‡ tn: Heb “Remember, do not break your covenant with us.” ‡†† tn: The word לָדָע

Heb “Is it not you, O LORD

‡† tn: Heb “Send them away from my presence and let them go away.”

‡†† tn: It is difficult to render the rhetorical force of this passage in meaningful English. The text answers the question “Where should we go?” with four brief staccato-like expressions with a play on the preposition “to”: Heb “Who to the death, to the death and who to the sword, to the sword and who to the starvation, to the starvation and who to the captivity, to the captivity.” The word “death” here is commonly understood to be a poetic substitute for “plague” because of the standard trio of sword, famine, and plague (see, e.g., 14:12 and the notes there). This is likely here and in 18:21. For further support see W. L. Holladay, Jeremiah (Hermeneia), 1:440. The nuance “starvation” rather than “famine” has been chosen in the translation because the referents here are all things that accompany war. ‡† tn: The translation attempts to render in understandable English some rather unusual uses of terms here. The verb translated “punish” is often used that way (cf. BDB 823 s.v. יָצַד

For this idiom see notes on 6:12. †† tn: There is a difference of opinion on how the verbs here and in the following verses are to be rendered, whether past or future. KJV, NASB, NIV for example render them as future. ASV, RSV, TEV render them as past. NJPS has past here and future in vv. 7-9. This is perhaps the best solution. The imperfect + vav consecutive here responds to the perfect in the first line. The imperfects + vav consecutives followed by perfects in vv. 7-9 and concluded by an imperfect in v. 9 pick up the perfects + vav (

‡ sn: It is difficult to be sure what intertextual connections are intended by the author in his use of vocabulary. The Hebrew word translated "grown tired" is not very common. It has been used twice before. In 9:5-6b where it refers to the people being unable to repent and in 6:11 where it refers to Jeremiah being tired or unable to hold back his anger because of that inability. Now God too has worn out his patience with them (cf. Isa 7:13). ‡† tn: The words "The LORD

Winnowing was the process whereby a mixture of grain and straw was thrown up into the wind to separate the grain from the straw and the husks. The best description of the major steps in threshing and winnowing grain in the Bible is seen in another figurative passage in Isa 41:15-16. ‡‡† tn: Or "did not repent of their wicked ways"; Heb "They did not turn back from their ways." says the LORD.

§ tn: The translation of this line is a little uncertain because of the double prepositional phrase which is not represented in this translation or most of the others. The Hebrew text reads: "I will bring in to them, against mother of young men, a destroyer at noon time." Many commentaries delete the phrase with the Greek text. If the preposition read "against" like the following one this would be a case of apposition of nearer definition. There is some evidence of that in the Targum and the Syriac according to BHS. Both nouns "mothers" and "young men" are translated as plural here though they are singular; they are treated by most as collectives. It would be tempting to translate these two lines "In broad daylight I have brought destroyers against the mothers of her fallen young men." But this may be too interpretive. In the light of 6:4, noontime was a good time to attack. NJPS has "I will bring against them - young men and mothers together - ...." In this case "mother" and "young men" would be a case of asyndetic coordination. §† tn: This word is used only here and in Hos 11:9. It is related to the root meaning "to rouse" (so BDB 735 s.v. יָרַע

§†† tn: The "them" in the Hebrew text is feminine referring to the mothers. §‡ tn: Heb "who gave birth to seven." sn: To have seven children was considered a blessing and a source of pride and honor ( Ruth 4:15; 1 Sam 2:5). §‡† tn: The meaning of this line is debated. Some understand this line to mean "she has breathed out her life" (cf., e.g., BDB 656 s.v. נָפַח

§† tn: Heb "Her sun went down while it was still day." sn: The sun was the source of light and hence has associations with life, prosperity, health, and blessing. The premature setting of the sun which brought these seems apropos as metaphor for the loss of her children which were not only a source of joy, help, and honor. Two references where "sun" is used figuratively, Ps 84:11 ( 84:12 HT) and Mal 4:2, may be helpful here. §‡ sn: She has lost her position of honor and the source of her pride. For the concepts here see 1 Sam 2:5. §§† tn: Heb "I will deliver those of them that survive to the sword before their enemies." The referent of "them" is ambiguous. Does it refer to the children of the widow (nearer context) or the people themselves (more remote context, v. 7)? Perhaps it was meant to include both. Verse seven spoke of the destruction of the people and the killing off of the children.

Jeremiah Complains about His Lot and The Lord Responds

10 I said,†
 "Oh, mother, how I regret†† that you ever gave birth to me!
 I am always starting arguments and quarrels with the people of this land. ‡

See the comments on 4:13 and 10:19. ‡ tn: Heb "A man of strife and a man of contention with all the land." The "of" relationship (Hebrew and Greek genitive) can convey either subjective or objective relationships, i.e., he instigates strife and contention or he is the object of it. A study of usage elsewhere, e.g., Isa 41:11; Job 31:35; Prov 12:19; 25:24; 26:21; 27:15, is convincing that it is subjective. In his role as God's covenant messenger charging people with wrong doing he has instigated counterarguments and stirred about strife and contention against him. †† tc: The translation follows the almost universally agreed upon correction of the MT. ‡‡† tn: "Surely" represents a construct in Hebrew that indicates a strong oath of affirmation. Cf. BDB 50 s.v. אָמַן ‡‡† tn: Or "Can iron and bronze break iron from the north?" The question is rhetorical and expects a negative answer. The translation and meaning of this verse are debated. See note for further details. The two main difficulties here involve the relation of words to one another and the obscure allusion to iron from the north. To translate "literally" is difficult since one does not know whether "iron" is subject of "break" or object of an impersonal verb. Likewise, the dangling "and bronze" fits poorly with either understanding. Options: "Can iron break iron from the north and bronze?" Or "Can one break iron, even iron from the north and bronze." This last is commonly opted for by translators and interpreters, but why add "and bronze" at the end? And what does "iron from the north" refer to? A long history of interpretation relates it to the foe from the north (see already 1:14; 4:6; 6:1; 13:20). The translation follows the lead of NRSV and takes "and bronze" as a compound subject. I have no ready parallels for this syntax but the reference to "from the north" and the comparison to the stubbornness of the unrepentant people to bronze and iron in 6:28 suggests a possible figurative allusion. There is no evidence in the Bible that Israel knew about a special kind of steel like iron from the Black Sea mentioned in later Greek sources. The word "fist" is supplied in the translation to try to give some hint that it refers to a hostile force. sn: Compare Isa 10:5-6 for the idea here. § tc: This reading follows the Greek and Syriac versions and several Hebrew MSS

And after that I will send for many hunters and they will hunt them from every mountain and from every hill and from the cracks in the rocks.” sn: The picture of rounding up the population for destruction and exile is also seen in Amos 4:2 and Hab 1:14-17. §† tn: Heb “For my eyes are upon all their ways. They are not hidden from before me. And their sin is not hidden away from before my eyes.”§†† tn: Heb “First.” Many English versions and commentaries delete this word because it is missing from the Greek version and is considered a gloss added by a postexilic editor who is said to be responsible also for vv. 14-16. This is not the place to resolve issues of authorship and date. It is the task of the translator to translate the “original” which in this case is the MT supported by the other versions. The word here refers to order in rank or order of events. Compare Gen 38:28; 1 Kgs 18:25. Here allusion is made to the restoration previously mentioned. First in order of events is the punishment of destruction and exile, then restoration. §‡ tn: Heb “double.” However, usage in Deut 15:18 and probably Isa 40:2 argues for “full compensation.” This is supported

This follows the Masoretic punctuation but violates usage. The verb “fill” never takes an object preceded by the preposition ך §‡ tn: The words “Then I said” are not in the text. They are supplied in the translation to show the shift from God, who has been speaking to Jeremiah, to Jeremiah, who here addresses God. sn: The shift here is consistent with the interruptions that have taken place in chapters 14 and 15 and in Jeremiah’s response to God’s condemnation of the people of Judah’s idolatry in chapter 10 (note especially vv. 6-16). §§† tn: Heb “O LORD

† tn: The chapter division which was not a part of the original text but was added in the middle ages obscures the fact that there is no new speech here. The division may have resulted from the faulty identification of the "them" in the preceding verse. See the translator's note on that verse. †† tn: The adjective "stone-hard" is not in the Hebrew text. It is implicit in the metaphor and is supplied in the translation for clarity. Cf. Ezek 11:19; 36:26; and Job 19:24 for the figure. ‡ tn: Heb "adamant." The word "diamond" is an accommodation to modern times. There is no evidence that diamond was known in ancient times. This hard stone (perhaps emery) became metaphorical for hardness; see Ezek 3:9 and Zech 7:12. For discussion see W. E. Staples, "Adamant," IDB 1:45. ‡† tn: This verse has been restructured for the sake of the English poetry: Heb "The sin of Judah is engraved [or written] with an iron pen, inscribed with a point of a diamond [or adamant] upon the tablet of their hearts and on the horns of their altars." sn: There is biting sarcasm involved in the use of the figures here. The law was inscribed on the tablets of stone by the "finger" of God (Exod 31:18; 32:16). Later under the new covenant it would be written on their hearts (Jer 31:33). Blood was to be applied to the horns of the altar in offering the sin offering (cf., e.g., Lev 4:7, 18, 25, 20) and on the bronze altar to cleanse it from sin on the Day of Atonement (Lev 16:18). Here their sins are engraved (permanently written, cf. Job 19:24) on their hearts (i.e., control their thoughts and actions) and on their altars (permanently polluting them). ‡‡ tn: It is difficult to convey in good English style the connection between this verse and the preceding. The text does not have a finite verb but a temporal preposition with an infinitive: Heb "while their children remember their altars..." It is also difficult to translate the verb "literally." (i.e., what does "remember" their altars mean?). Hence it has been rendered "always think about." Another possibility would be "have their altars...on their minds." sn: There is possibly a sarcastic irony involved here as well. The Israelites were to remember the LORD

For the word "deceitful" compare the usage of the verb in Gen 27:36 and a related noun in 2 Kgs 10:19. For the adjective "incurable" compare the usage in Jer 15:18. It is most commonly used with reference to wounds or of pain. In Jer 17:16 it is used metaphorically for a "woeful day" (i.e., day of irreparable devastation). sn: The background for this verse is Deut 29:18-19 ( 29:17-18 HT) and Deut 30:17.

‡ tn: The term rendered "mind" here and in the previous verse is actually the Hebrew word for "heart." However, in combination with the word rendered "heart" in the next line, which is the Hebrew for "kidneys," it is best rendered "mind" because the "heart" was considered the center of intellect, conscience, and will and the "kidneys" the center of emotions. sn: For an earlier reference to this motif see Jer 11:20. For a later reference see Jer 20:12. See also Ps 17:2-3.

§† tc: The translation is based on an emendation suggested in W. L. Holladay, Jeremiah (Hermeneia), 1:500, n. b-b. The emendation involves following the reading preferred by the Masoretes (the Qere) and understanding the preposition with the following word as a corruption of the suffix on it. Thus the present translation reads וְסוּכֵי אֶרֶץ וְסוּכֵי בְּאֶרֶץ

‡‡ tn: The meaning of this line is somewhat uncertain. The word translated "broods over" occurs only here and Isa 34:15. It is often defined on the basis of an Aramaic cognate which means "to gather" with an extended meaning of "to gather together under her to hatch." Many commentators go back to a Rabbinic explanation that only the partridge steals the eggs of other birds and hatches them out only to see the birds depart when they recognize that she is not the mother. Modern studies question the validity of this zoologically. Moreover, W. L. Holladay contests the validity on the basis of the wording "and she does hatch them" ( Heb "bring them to birth"). See W. L. Holladay, Jeremiah (Hermeneia), 1:498, and see also P. C. Craigie, P. H. Kelley, J. F. Drinkard, Jeremiah 1-25 (WBC), 229. The point of the comparison is that the rich gather their wealth but they do not get to see the fruits of it. ‡‡ tn: The Hebrew text merely says "it." But the antecedent might be ambiguous in English so the reference to wealth gained by unjust means is here reiterated for clarity. ‡‡‡ tn: Heb "he will be [= prove to be] a fool."

§†† tn: Or "to the world of the dead." An alternative interpretation is: "will be as though their names were written in the dust"; Heb "will be written in the dust." The translation follows the nuance of "earth" listed in HALOT 88 s.v. אֶרֶץ

The Hebrew text reads "I have not run from being a shepherd after you." The translation follows two Greek versions (Aquila and Symmachus) and the Syriac in reading the word "evil" or "disaster" here in place of the word "shepherd" in the Hebrew text. The issue is mainly one of vocalization. The versions mentioned are reading a form מְרַעֵה מְרַעֵה

He is, however, seeking his own vindication and that of God whose threats they have belittled. § sn: Observance of the Sabbath day (and the Sabbatical year) appears to have been a litmus test of the nation's spirituality since it is mentioned in a number of passages besides this one (cf., e.g., Isa 56:2, 6; 58:13; Neh 13:15-18). Perhaps this is because the Sabbath day was the sign of the Mosaic covenant ( Exod 31:13-17) just as the rainbow was the sign of the Noahic covenant ( Gen 9:12, 13, 17) and circumcision was the sign of the Abrahamic covenant ( Gen 17:11). This was not the only command they failed to obey, nor was their failure to obey this one the sole determining factor in the LORD

tion of the People's Gate is uncertain since it is mentioned nowhere else in the Hebrew Bible. Some identify it with the Benjamin Gate mentioned in Jer 37:13; 38:7 (cf. NAB), but there is no textual support for this in the Hebrew Bible or in any of the ancient versions. §†† map: For location see . §‡ tn: The words "As you stand there" are not in the text but are implicit in the connection. The loads that were carried out of the houses in the next verse were probably goods for barter. §§†† tn: Heb "carry loads on the Sabbath and bring [them] in through." The two verbs "carry" and "bring in" are an example of hendiadys (see the note on "Be careful...by carrying"). This is supported by the next line where only "carry out" of the houses is mentioned. §§‡† tn: Heb "Do not carry any loads out of your houses on the Sabbath day and do not do any work." Translating literally might give the wrong impression that they were not to work at all. The phrase "on the Sabbath day" is, of course, intended to qualify both prohibitions. §§§† tn: Heb "But sanctify [or set apart as sacred] the Sabbath day." The idea of setting it apart as something sacred to the LORD

The antecedent is spelled out to avoid any possible confusion. 20 tn: Heb "They hardened [or made stiff] their neck so as not to." 21 tn: Heb "Oracle of the LORD 22 tn: Heb "If you will carefully obey me by not bringing...and by sanctifying...by not doing..., then kings will...." The structure of prohibitions and commands followed by a brief "if" clause has been used to break up a long condition and consequence relationship which is contrary to contemporary English style. 23 tn: Heb "who sit [or are to sit] on David's throne."

They will come bringing offerings to the temple of the LORD : burnt offerings, sacrifices, grain offerings, and incense along with their thank offerings. †27 But you must obey me and set the Sabbath day apart to me. You must not carry any loads in through†† the gates of Jerusalem on the Sabbath day. If you disobey, I will set the gates of Jerusalem on fire. It will burn down all the fortified dwellings in Jerusalem and no one will be able to put it out.”

18 The LORD said to Jeremiah: ††2 “ Go down at once††† to the potter’s house. I will speak to you further there.” †††3 So I went down to the potter’s house and found him working§ at his wheel. §†4 Now and then§†† there would be something wrong §† with † tn: Heb “There will come through the gates of this city the kings and princes...riding in chariots and on horses, they and their officials...” The structure of the original text is broken up here because of the long compound subject which would make the English sentence too long. The term “princes” is often omitted as a supposed double writing of the word that follows it and looks somewhat like it (the Hebrew reads here וְשָׂרִים וְיָבִים)

†† tn: Heb “will be inhabited forever.” ††
 tn: Heb “There will come from the cities of Judah and from the environs of Jerusalem and from...those bringing...incense and those bringing thank offerings.” This sentence has been restructured from a long complex original to conform to contemporary English style.
 †† tn: Heb “carry loads on the Sabbath and bring [them] in through.” The translation treats the two verbs “carry” and “bring in” as an example of hendiadys (see the note on “through” in 17:21).

 The first verb is not literal but is idiomatic for the initiation of an action. See 13:4, 6 for other occurrences of this idiom. ††† tn: Heb “And I will cause you to hear my word there.” § tn: Heb “And behold he was working.” §† sn: At his wheel ( Heb “at the two stones”). The Hebrew expression is very descriptive of the construction of a potter’s wheel which consisted of two stones joined by a horizontal shaft. The potter rotated the wheel with his feet on the lower wheel and worked the clay with his hands on the upper. For a picture of a potter working at his wheel see I. Ben-Dor, “Potter’s Wheel,” IDB 3:846. See also the discussion regarding the making of pottery in J. L. Kelso, “Pottery,” IDB 3:846-53. §†† tn: The verbs here denote repeated action. They are the Hebrew perfect with the vav ( ו )

§† sn: Something was wrong with the clay – either there was a lump in it, or it was too moist or not moist enough, or it had some other imperfection. In any case the vessel was “ruined” or “spoiled” or defective in the eyes the pot he was molding from the clay§†† with his hands. So he would rework§†† the clay into another kind of pot as he saw fit. §†

5 Then the LORD said to me, §§†6 “ I, the LORD , say:§§† ‘O nation of Israel, can I not deal with you as this potter deals with the clay?§§§ In my hands, you, O nation of Israel, are just like the clay in this potter’s hand.’ 7 There are times, Jeremiah,18 when I threaten to uproot, tear down, and destroy a nation or kingdom. 198 But if that nation I threatened stops doing wrong, 20 I will cancel the destruction21 I intended to do to it. 9 And of the potter. This same verb has been used of the linen shorts that were “ruined” and hence were “good for nothing” in Jer 13:7. The nature of the clay and how it responded to the potter’s hand determined the kind of vessel that he made of it. He did not throw the clay away. This is the basis for the application in vv. 7-10 to any nation and to the nation of Israel in particular vv. 10-17. §†† tn: The usage of the preposition א

Heb “he would turn and work.” This is an example of hendiadys where one of the two verbs joined by “and” becomes the adverbial modifier of the other. The verb “turn” is very common in this construction (see BDB 998 s.v. שׁוּב §† tn: Heb “as it was right in his eyes to do [or work it].” For this idiom see Judg 14:3, 7; 1 Sam 18:20, 26; 2 Sam 17:4. §§† tn: Heb “Then the word of the LORD §§† tn: This phrase (literally “Oracle of the LORD

LORD §§§ tn: The words “deals with the clay” are not in the text. They are part of an elliptical comparison and are supplied in the translation here for clarity. 18 tn: The word “Jeremiah” is not in the text but it is implicit from the introduction in v. 5 that he is being addressed. It is important to see how the rhetoric of this passage is structured. The words of vv. 7-10 lead up to the conclusion “So now” in v. 11 which in turns leads to the conclusion “Therefore” in v. 13. The tense of the verb in v. 12 is very important. It is a vav consecutive perfect indicating the future (cf. GKC 333 §112. p, r); their response is predictable. The words of vv. 7-10 are addressed to Jeremiah (v. 5) in fulfillment of the LORD LORD

19 tn: Heb “One moment I may speak about a nation or kingdom to...” So also in v. 9. The translation is structured this way to avoid an awkward English construction and to reflect the difference in disposition. The constructions are, however, the same. 20 tn: Heb “turns from its wickedness.” 21 tn: There is a good deal of debate about how the word translated here “revoke” should be translated. There is a good deal of reluctance to translate it “change my mind” because some see that as contradicting Num 23:19 and thus prefer “relent.” However, the English word “relent” suggests the softening of an attitude but not necessarily the change of course. It is clear that in many cases (including here) an actual change of course is in view (see, e.g., Amos 7:3, 6; Jonah 3:9; Jer 26:19; Exod 13:17; 32:14). Several of these passages deal with “conditional” prophecies where a change in behavior of the people or the mediation of a prophet involves the change in course of the threatened punishment (or the promised benefit). “Revoke” or “forgo” may be the best way to render this in contemporary English idiom. sn: There is a wordplay here involving the word “evil” ( רָעָה )

there are times when I promise to build up and establish† a nation or kingdom. 10 But if that nation does what displeases me and does not obey me, then I will cancel the good I promised to do to it. 11 So now, tell the people of Judah and the citizens of Jerusalem†† this: The LORD says, 'I am preparing to bring disaster on you! I am making plans to punish you.‡ So, every one of you, stop the evil things you have been doing. †† Correct the way you have been living and do what is right.' †††12 But they just keep saying, 'We do not care what you say !††† We will do whatever we want to do! We will continue to behave wickedly and stubbornly!'" †††

13 Therefore, the LORD says,
 " Ask the people of other nations
 whether they have heard of anything like this.
 Israel should have been like a virgin.
 But she has done something utterly revolting!
 14 Does the snow ever completely vanish from the rocky slopes of Lebanon ?
 Do the cool waters from those distant mountains ever cease to flow? § 15 Yet my people have forgotten me and offered sacrifices to worthless idols!"

† sn: Heb "plant." The terms "uproot," "tear down," "destroy," "build," and "plant" are the two sides of the ministry Jeremiah was called to (cf. Jer 1:10). †† map: For location see . ‡ sn: Heb "I am forming disaster and making plans against you." The word translated "forming" is the same as that for "potter," so there is a wordplay taking the reader back to v. 5. They are in his hands like the clay in the hands of the potter. Since they have not been pliable he forms new plans. He still offers them opportunity to repent; but their response is predictable. †† tn: Heb "Turn, each one from his wicked way." See v. 8. †† tn: Or "Make good your ways and your actions." See the same expression in 7:3, 5. ††† tn: Heb "It is useless!" See the same expression in a similar context in Jer 2:25. †††† tn: Heb "We will follow our own plans and do each one according to the stubbornness of his own wicked heart." sn: This has been the consistent pattern of their behavior. See 7:24; 9:13; 13:10; 16:12. § tn: The precise translation of this verse is somewhat uncertain. Two phrases in this verse are the primary cause of discussion and the source of numerous emendations, none of which has gained consensus. The phrase which is rendered here "rocky slopes" is in Hebrew צור שָׂדֵי

§† sn: Heb "the ancient path." This has already been referred to in Jer 6:16. There is another "old way" but it is the path trod by the wicked (cf. Job 22:15). §†† sn: Heb "ways that are not built up." This refers to the built-up highways. See Isa 40:4 for the figure. The terms "way," "by-paths," "roads" are, of course, being used here in the sense of moral behavior or action. §† tn: There may be a deliberate double meaning involved here. The word translated here "an object of horror" refers both to destruction (cf. 2:15; 4:17) and the horror or dismay that accompanies it (cf. 5:30; 8:21). The fact that there is no conjunction or preposition in front of the noun "hissing" that follows this suggests that the reaction is in view here, not the cause. §†† tn: Heb "an object of lasting hissing. All who pass that way will be appalled and shake their head." sn: The actions of "shaking of the head" and "hissing" were obviously gestures of scorn and derision. See Lam 2:15-16. §† tc: Heb "I will show them [my] back and not [my] face." This reading follows the suggestion of some of the versions and some of the Masoretes. The MT reads "I will look on their back and not on their faces." sn: To "turn the back" is universally recognized as a symbol of rejection. The turning of the face toward one is the subject of the beautiful Aaronic blessing in Num 6:24-26. §† tn: Heb "They." The referent is unidentified; "some people" has been used in the translation. §§† tn: Heb "Let us make plans against Jeremiah." See 18:18 where this has sinister overtones as it does here. §§† tn: Heb "Instruction will not perish from priest, counsel from the wise, word from the prophet." sn: These are the three channels through whom God spoke to his people in the OT. See Jer 8:8-10 and Ezek 7:26. §§§ tn: Heb "Let us smite him with our tongues." It is clear from the context that this involved plots to kill him. 18 tn: The words "Then I said" are not in the text. They are supplied in the translation for clarity to show that Jeremiah turns from description of the peoples' plots to his address to God to deal with the plotters. 19 tn: Heb "the voice of my adversaries." sn: Jeremiah's prayers against the unjust treatment of his enemies here and elsewhere (see 11:18-20; 12:1-4; 15:15-18; 17:14-18) have many of the elements of the prayers of the innocent in the book of Psalms: an invocation of the LORD

For this same expression see Ezek 35:5; Ps 63:10 (63:11 HT). Comparison with those two passages show that it involved death by violent means, perhaps death in battle. ‡‡ tn: Heb "be slain by death." The commentaries are generally agreed that this refers to death by disease or plague as in 15:2. Hence, the reference is to the deadly trio of sword, starvation, and disease which were often connected with war. See the notes on 15:2. ‡‡† tn: Heb "when you bring marauders in against them." For the use of the noun translated here "bands of raiders to plunder them" see 1 Sam 30:3, 15, 23 and BDB 151 s.v. דָּרָב ‡‡‡ sn: Heb "Do not blot out their sins from before you." For this anthropomorphic figure which looks at God's actions as though connected with record books, i.e., a book of wrongdoings to be punished, and a book of life for those who are to live, see e.g., Exod 32:32, 33, Ps 51:1 (51:3 HT); 69:28 (69:29 HT). § tn: Heb "in the time of your anger." §† tn: The word "Jeremiah" is not in the text. In Jer 18 the clay was still soft and pliable, capable of being formed into different kinds of vessels. Here the clay is set, just as Israel is set in its ways. The word for jar refers probably to a water jug or decanter and is onomatopoeic, baqbuq, referring to the gurgling sound made by pouring out the water. §‡ tc: The words "Take with you" follow the reading of the Syriac version and to a certain extent the reading of the Greek version (the latter does not have "with you"). The Hebrew text does not have these words but they are undoubtedly implicit.

§†† tn: Heb "elders" both here and before "of the people." sn: The civil and religious leaders are referred to here. They were to be witnesses of the symbolic act and of the message that Jeremiah proclaimed to the leaders of Jerusalem and its citizens (see v. 3). §† sn: The exact location of the Potsherd Gate is unknown since it is nowhere else mentioned in the Hebrew Bible. It is sometimes identified with the Dung Gate mentioned in Neh 2:13; 3:13-14; 12:31 on the basis of the Jerusalem Targum. It is probably called "Potsherd Gate" because that is where the potter threw out the broken pieces of pottery which were no longer of use to him. The Valley of Ben Hinnom has already been mentioned in 7:31-32 in connection with the illicit religious practices, including child sacrifice, which took place there. The Valley of Ben Hinnom (or sometimes Valley of Hinnom) runs along the west and south sides of Jerusalem. §‡ tn: Heb "the words that I will speak to you." §§† map: For location see . §§‡ tn: Heb "Yahweh of armies, the God of Israel." sn: See the study notes on 2:19 and 7:3 for explanation of this title. §§§ sn: Careful comparison of the use of this term throughout this passage and comparison with 7:31-33 which is parallel to several verses in this passage will show that the reference is to the Valley of Ben Hinnom which will become a Valley of Slaughter (see v. 6 and 7:32). 18 tn: Heb "which everyone who hears it [or about it] his ears will ring." This is proverbial for a tremendous disaster. See 1 Sam 3:11; 2 Kgs 21:12 for similar prophecies. 19 tn: The text merely has "they." But since a reference is made later to "they" and "their ancestors," the referent must be to the people that the leaders of the people and leaders of the priests represent. 20 sn: Heb "have made this city foreign." The verb here is one that is built off of the noun and adjective which relate to foreign nations. Comparison may be made to Jer 2:21 where the adjective refers to the strange, wild vine as opposed to the choice vine the LORD

21 tn: Heb "fathers." 22 tn: Heb "the blood of innocent ones." This must be a reference to child sacrifice as explained in the next verse. Some have seen a reference to the sins of social injustice alluded to in 2 Kgs 21:16 and 24:4 but those are connected with the city itself. Hence the word children is supplied in the translation to make the referent explicit. 23 tn: The word "here" is not in the text. However, it is implicit from the rest of the context. It is supplied in the translation for clarity. 24 tn: The words "such sacrifices" are not in the text. The text merely says "to burn their children in the fire as burnt offerings to Baal which I did not command." The command obviously refers not to the qualification "to Baal" but to burning the children in the fire as burnt offerings. The words are supplied in the translation to avoid a possible confusion that the reference is to sacrifices to Baal. Likewise the words should not be translated so literally that they leave the impression that God never said deed, such a thing never even entered my mind!<sup>6</sup> So I, the LORD, say:† "The time will soon come that people will no longer call this place Topheth or the Hinnom Valley. But they will call this valley†† the Valley of Slaughter!<sup>7</sup> In this place I will thwart‡ the plans of the people of Judah and Jerusalem. I will deliver them over to the power of their enemies who are seeking to kill them. They will die by the sword‡‡ at the hands of their enemies.‡‡ I will make their dead bodies food for the birds and wild beasts to eat.<sup>8</sup> I will make this city an object of horror, a thing to be hissed at. All who pass by it will be filled with horror and will hiss out their scorn‡‡ because of all the disasters that have happened to it.<sup>‡‡‡9</sup> I will reduce the people of this city to desperate straits during the siege imposed on it by their enemies who are seeking to kill them. I will make them so desperate that they will eat the flesh of their own sons and daughters and the flesh of one another."<sup>‡‡‡‡</sup> <sup>5</sup>

anything about sacrificing their children to other gods. The fact is he did. See Lev 18:21; Deut 12:30; 18:10. † tn: This phrase ( Heb "Oracle of the LORD

LORD †† tn: Heb "it will no longer be called to this place Topheth or the Valley of Ben Hinnom but the Valley of Slaughter." sn: See Jer 7:31-32 for an almost word for word repetition of vv. 5-6. ‡ sn: There is perhaps a two-fold wordplay in the use of this word. One involves the sound play with the word for "jar," which has been explained as a water decanter. The word here is יָרֵךְ יָרֵךְ

†† sn: This refers to the fact that they will die in battle. The sword would be only one of the weapons that strikes them down. It is one of the trio of "sword," "starvation," and "disease" which were the concomitants of war referred to so often in the book of Jeremiah. Starvation is referred to in v. 9. ‡† tn: Heb "I will cause them to fall by the sword before their enemies and in the hand of those who seek their soul [= life]." In this context the two are meant as obvious qualifications of one entity, not two. Some rearrangement of the qualifiers had to be made in the English translation to convey this. ‡†† sn: See 18:16 and the study note there. ‡††† tn: Heb "all its smittings." This word has been used several times for the metaphorical "wounds" that Israel has suffered as a result of the blows from its enemies. See, e.g., 14:17. It is used in the Hebrew Bible of scourging, both literally and metaphorically (cf. Deut 25:3; Isa 10:26), and of slaughter and defeat ( 1 Sam 4:10; Josh 10:20). Here it refers to the results of the crushing blows at the hands of her enemies which has made her the object of scorn. ‡ tn: This verse has been restructured to try to bring out the proper thought and subordinations reflected in the verse without making the sentence too long and complex in English: Heb "I will make them eat the flesh of their sons and daughters. And they will eat one another's flesh in the siege and in the straits which their enemies who are seeking their lives reduce them to." This also shows the agency through which God's causation was effected, i.e., the siege. sn: Cannibalism is one of the penalties for disobedience to their covenant with the LORD

‡† tn: The words "And the LORD

the LORD who rules over all says,‡†† 'I will do just as Jeremiah has done.‡‡ I will smash this nation and this city as though it were a potter's vessel which is broken beyond repair.‡†† The dead will be buried here in Topheth until there is no more room to bury them.'<sup>‡††‡</sup> I, the LORD, say:‡‡ "That is how I will deal with this city and its citizens. I will make it like Topheth.<sup>13</sup> The houses in Jerusalem and the houses of the kings of Judah will be defiled by dead bodies‡‡† just like this place, Topheth. For they offered sacrifice to the stars‡‡† and poured out drink offerings to other gods on the roofs of those houses."

<sup>14</sup> Then Jeremiah left Topheth where the LORD had sent him to give that prophecy. He went to the LORD's temple and stood‡‡‡ in its courtyard and called out to all the people.<sup>15</sup> "The LORD God of Israel who rules over all<sup>18</sup> says, 'I will soon bring on this city and all the towns surrounding it<sup>19</sup> all the disaster I threatened to do to it. I will do so because they have stubbornly refused<sup>20</sup> to pay any attention to what I have said!'"

<sup>20</sup> Now Pashhur son of Immer heard Jeremiah prophesy these things. He was the priest who was chief of security<sup>21</sup> in the LORD's temple. <sup>2</sup> When he heard Jeremiah's prophecy, he had the prophet flogged.<sup>22</sup> Then he put him in the stocks<sup>23</sup> which were

It occurs only here, in 29:26 where it is followed by a parallel word that occurs only there and is generally translated "collar," and in 2 Chr 16:10 where it is preceded by the word "house of." It is most often translated "stocks" and explained as an instrument of confinement for keeping prison-

When he did, Jeremiah said to him, "The LORD's name for you is not 'Pashhur' but 'Terror is Everywhere.'" <sup>††4</sup> For the LORD says, 'I will make both you and your friends terrified of what will happen to you. ‡ You will see all of them die by the swords of their enemies. ‡† I will hand all the people of Judah over to the king of Babylon. For a rather complete discussion on the significance of this name and an attempt to explain it as a pun on the name "Pashhur" see J. A. Thompson, Jeremiah (NICOT), 455, n. 35. sn: The name Pashhur is essentially a curse pronounced by Jeremiah invoking the LORD

overpowered me and prevailed." The value one assigns to [ - ] is in every case interpretive based on what one thinks the context is referring to. The word is rendered "deceived" or "tricked" by several English versions (see, e.g., KJV, NASB, TEV, ICV) as though God had misled him. It is rendered "enticed" by some (see, e.g., NRSV, NJPS) as though God had tempted him with false hopes. Some go so far as to accuse Jeremiah of accusing God of metaphorically "raping" him. It is true that the word is used of "seducing" a virgin in Exod 22:15 and that it is used in several places to refer to "deceiving" someone with false words ( Prov 24:28; Ps 78:36). It is also true that it is used of "coaxing" someone to reveal something he does not want to ( Judg 14:15; 16:5) and of "enticing" someone to do something on the basis of false hopes ( 1 Kgs 22:20-22; Prov 1:10). However, it does not always have negative connotations or associations. In Hos 2:14 ( 2:16 HT) God "charms" or "woos" Israel, his estranged 'wife,' into the wilderness where he hopes to win her back to himself. What Jeremiah is alluding to here is crucial for translating and interpreting the word. There is no indication in this passage that Jeremiah is accusing God of misleading him or raising false hopes; God informed him at the outset that he would encounter opposition ( 1:17-19). Rather, he is alluding to his call to be a prophet, a call which he initially resisted but was persuaded to undertake because of God's persistence ( Jer 1:7-10). The best single word to translate '...' with is thus "persuaded" or "coerced." The translation spells out the allusion explicitly so the reader is not left wondering about what is being alluded to when Jeremiah speaks of being "coerced." The translation "I let you do it" is a way of rendering the Niphal of the same verb which must be tolerative rather than passive since the normal passive for the Piel would be the Pual (See IBHS 389-90 §23.4g for discussion and examples.). The translation "you overcame my resistance" is based on allusion to the same context ( 1:7-10) and the parallel use of קָרַע

the bones were associated with fear (e.g., Job 4:14) and with pain (e.g., Job 33:19, Ps 102:3 [102:4 HT]) and joy or sorrow (e.g., Ps 51:8 [51:10 HT]). As has been mentioned several times, the heart was connected with intellectual and volitional concerns. † tn: It would be difficult to render accurately the Hebrew particle <sup>י</sup>

†† tn: The phrase translated "Those who would cause me terror are everywhere" has already occurred in 6:25 in the context of the terror caused by the enemy from the north and in 20:3 in reference to the curse pronounced on Pashhur who would experience it first hand. Some have seen the phrase here not as Jeremiah's ejaculation of terror but of his assailant's taunts of his message or even their taunting nickname for him. But comparison of this passage with the first two lines of Ps 31:13 (31:14 HT) which are word for word the same as these two will show that it refers to the terror inspired by the plots of his enemies to do away with him. It is also clear from the context of that passage and the following context here that the "whispering of many" (the literal translation of "many whispering words of intrigue against me) refers to intrigues to take vengeance on him and do away with him. ‡ tn: Heb "Denounce and let us denounce him." The verb which is translated "denounce" ( <sup>דנ</sup>

‡† tn: Heb "the men of my peace [who are concerned about my welfare]." For this phrase compare Ps 41:9 (41:10 HT); Jer 38:22. It is generally agreed that irony is being invoked here, hence "so-called" is supplied in the translation to bring out the irony. ‡‡ tn: Heb "watching my stumbling [for me to stumble]." Metaphorically they were watching for some slip-up that would lead to his downfall. Compare the use in Pss 35:15 and 38:17 (38:18 HT). ‡‡† tn: All the text says literally is "Perhaps he can be enticed so that we can prevail over him." However the word "enticed" needs some qualification. As W. McKane (Jeremiah [ICC], 1:479) notes it should probably be read in the context of the "stumbling" (= "something that would lead to my downfall"). Hence "slipping up" has been supplied as an object. It is vague enough to avoid specifics as the original text does but suggests some reference to "something that would lead to my downfall." sn: There is an interesting ironical play on words here with the earlier use of these same Hebrew words in v. 7 to refer to the LORD

‡‡‡ sn: This line has some interesting ties with Jer 15:20-21 where Jeremiah is assured by God that he is indeed with him as he promised him when he called him (1:8, 19) and will deliver him from the clutches of wicked and violent people. The word translated here "awe-inspiring" is the same as the word "violent people" there. Jeremiah is confident that his "awe-inspiring" warrior will overcome "violent people." The statement of confidence here is, by the way, a common element in the psalms of petition in the Psalter. The common elements of that type of psalm are all here: invocation (v. 7), lament (vv. 7-10), confession of trust/confidence in being heard (v. 11), petition (v. 12), thanksgiving or praise (v. 13). For some examples of this type of psalm see Pss 3, 7, 26. § tn: Heb "Yahweh of armies." sn: See the study note on 2:19 for explanation of this title for God. §† tn: Heb "LORD

For another example of these same shifts see Ps 22 which is a prayer of David in a time of deep distress. §‡ sn: From the heights of exaltation, Jeremiah returns to the depths of despair. For similar mood swings in the psalms of lament compare Ps 102. Verses 14-18 are similar in tone and mood to Job 3:1-10. They are very forceful rhetorical ways of Job and Jeremiah expressing the wish that they had never been born. §†† tn: Heb "Cursed be the man who brought my father the news saying, 'A son, a male, has been born to you,' making glad his joy." §†† sn: The Babylonians ( Heb "the Chaldeans"). The Chaldeans were a group of people in the country south of Babylon from which Nebuchadnezzar came. The Chaldean dynasty his father established became the name by which the Babylonians are regularly referred to in the book of Jeremiah. Jeremiah's contemporary Ezekiel uses both terms. §† tn: The structure of the Hebrew sentence of this verse is long and complex and has led to a great deal of confusion and misunderstanding. There are two primary points of confusion: 1) the relation of the phrase "outside the walls," and 2) the antecedent of "them" in the last clause of the verse that reads in Hebrew: "I will gather them back into the midst of the city." Most take the phrase "outside the walls" with "the Babylonians...." Some take it with "turn back/bring back" to mean "from outside...." However, the preposition "from" is part of the idiom for "outside...." The phrase goes with "fighting" as J. Bright (Jeremiah [AB], 215) notes and as NJPS suggests. The antecedent of "them" has sometimes been taken mistakenly to refer to the Babylonians. It refers rather to "the forces at your disposal" which is literally "the weapons which are in your hands." This latter phrase is a figure involving substitution (called metonymy) as Bright also correctly notes. The whole sentence reads in Hebrew: "I will bring back the weapons of war which are in your hand with which you are fighting Nebuchadnezzar the King of Babylon and the Chaldeans who are besieging you outside your wall and I will gather them into the midst of the city." The sentence has been restructured to better reflect the proper relationships and to make the sentence conform more to contemporary English style. §† tn: Heb "with outstretched hand and with strong arm." These are, of course, figurative of God's power and might. He does not literally have hands and arms. sn: The phrases in this order are unique but a very similar phrase "by strong hand and outstretched arm" are found several times with reference to God's mighty power unleashed against Egypt at the exodus (cf., Deut 4:34; 5:15; 26:8; Jer 32:21; Ps 136:12). Instead of being directed at Israel's enemies it will now be directed against her. §§† map: For location see . §§†† tn: Heb "And afterward." §§§ tn: Heb "oracle of the LORD <sup>18</sup> tn: Heb "And/But unto this people you shall say..." Those who surrendered to the Babylonians would lose their property, their freedom, and their citizenship but would at least escape with their lives. Jeremiah was branded a traitor for this counsel (cf. 38:4) but it was the

It is clear from 22:1-6 that this involved the King, the royal family, and the court officials. ‡‡ <sup>tn:</sup> Heb "house of David." This is essentially equivalent to the royal court in v. 11. ‡‡† <sup>tn:</sup> Heb "to the morning" = "morning by morning" or "each morning." See Isa 33:2 and Amos 4:4 for parallel usage. ‡‡‡ <sup>sn:</sup> The kings of Israel and Judah were responsible for justice. See Pss 122:5. The king himself was the final court of appeals judging from the incident of David with the wise woman of Tekoa ( 2 Sam 14), Solomon and the two prostitutes ( 1 Kgs 3:16-28), and Absalom's attempts to win the hearts of the people of Israel by interfering with due process ( 2 Sam 15:2-4). §‡ <sup>tn:</sup> Heb "I am against you." §†† <sup>tn:</sup> Heb "oracle of the LORD §† <sup>tn:</sup> Heb "Who can swoop...Who can penetrate...?" The questions are rhetorical and expect a negative answer. They are rendered as negative affirmations for clarity. <sup>sn:</sup> What is being expressed here is the belief in the inviolability of Zion/Jerusalem carried to its extreme. Signal deliverances of Jerusalem such as those experienced under Jehoshaphat ( 2 Chr 20) and Hezekiah ( Isa 37:36-37) in the context of promises to protect it ( Isa 31:4-5; 37:33-35; 38:6) led to a belief that Zion was unconquerable. This belief found expression in several of Israel's psalms ( Pss 46, 48, 76) and led to the mistaken assumption that God would protect it regardless of how the people treated God or one another. Micah and Jeremiah both deny that (cf. Mic 3:8-12; Jer 21:13-14). §‡ <sup>tn:</sup> Heb "oracle of the LORD §§† <sup>tn:</sup> Heb "I will set fire in its forest and it will devour its surroundings." The pronouns are actually third feminine singular going back to the participle "you who sit enthroned above the valley." They have regularly been leveled to the same person throughout in the translation to avoid possible confusion for the English reader. §§‡ <sup>tn:</sup> The word "me" is not in the text. It is, however, implicit and is supplied in the translation for clarity. §§§

§† tn: The word "king" is not in the original text of either the first or the third line. It is implicit in the connection and is supplied in the translation for clarity. sn: As the next verse makes clear, the king who will never return to see his native land is Shallum, also known as Jehoahaz (cf. 1 Chr 3:15; 2 Kgs 23:30, 33-34). He was made king by popular acclaim after the death of his father, Josiah, who was killed at Megiddo trying to stop Pharaoh Necho from going to the aid of the Assyrians. According to 2 Kgs 23:32 he was a wicked king. He was deposed by Necho and carried into exile where he died. The dead king alluded to is his father, Josiah, who was a godly king and was accordingly spared from seeing the destruction of his land ( 2 Kgs 22:20). §‡ tn: Heb "For thus said the LORD

tn: The word translated "red" only occurs here and in Ezek 23:14 where it refers to the pictures of the Babylonians on the wall of the temple. Evidently this was a favorite color for decoration. It is usually identified as vermilion, a mineral product from red ocher (cf. C. L. Wickwire, "Vermilion," IDB 4:748). † tn: For the use of this verb see Jer 12:5 where it is used of Jeremiah "competing" with horses. The form is a rare Tiphel (see GKC 153 §55. h). †† tn: Heb "Your father, did he not eat and drink and do justice and right." The copulative vav in front of the verbs here (all Hebrew perfects) shows that these actions are all coordinate not sequential. The contrast drawn here between the actions of Jehoiakim and Josiah show that the phrase eating and drinking should be read in the light of the same contrasts in Eccl 2 which ends with the note of contentment in Eccl 2:24 (see also Eccl 3:13; 5:18 [ 5:17 HT]; 8:15). The question is, of course, rhetorical setting forth the positive role model against which Jehoiakim's actions are to be condemned. The key terms here are "then things went well with him" which is repeated in the next verse after the reiteration of Josiah's practice of justice. †† sn: The father referred to here is the godly king Josiah. He followed the requirements for kings set forth in 22:3 in contrast to his son who did not ( 22:13). ††† tn: The words "for Judah" are not in the text, but the absence of the preposition plus object as in the preceding verse suggests that this is a more general statement, i.e., "things went well for everyone." ††† tn: Heb "Is that not what it means to know me." The question is rhetorical and expects a positive answer. It is translated in the light of the context. sn: Comparison of the usage of the words "know me" in their context in Jer 2:8; 9:3, 6, 24 and here will show that more than mere intellectual knowledge is involved. It involves also personal commitment to God and obedience to the demands of the agreements with him. The word "know" is used in ancient Near Eastern treaty contexts of submission to the will of the overlord. See further the notes on 9:3. § tn: Heb "Your eyes and your heart do not exist except for dishonest gain and for innocent blood to shed [it] and for fraud and for oppression to do [them]." The sentence has been broken up to conform more to English style and the significance of "eyes" and "heart" explained before they are introduced into the translation. §† sn: This is the regular way of introducing the announcement of judgment after an indictment of crimes. See, e.g., Isa 5:13, 14; Jer 23:2. §†† tn: The translation follows the majority of scholars who think that the address of brother and sister are the address of the mourners to one another, lamenting their loss. Some scholars feel that all four terms are parallel and represent the relation that the king had metaphorically to his subjects; i.e., he was not only Lord and Majesty to them but like a sister or a brother. In that case something like: "How sad it is for the one who was like a brother to us! How sad it is for the one who was like a sister to us." This makes for poor poetry and is not very likely. The lover can call his bride sister in Song of Solomon ( Song 4:9, 10) but there are no documented examples of a subject ever speaking of a king in this way in Israel or the ancient Near East. §† sn: A similar judgment against this ungodly king is pronounced by Jeremiah in 36:30. According to 2 Chr 36:6 he was bound over to be taken captive to Babylon but apparently died before he got there. According to the Jewish historian Josephus, Nebuchadnezzar ordered his body thrown outside the wall in fulfillment of this judgment. The Bible itself, however, does not tell us that. map: For location see . §†† tn: The words "people of Jerusalem" are not in the text. They are supplied in the translation to clarify the referent of the imperative. The imperative is feminine singular and it is generally agreed that personified Zion/Jerusalem is in view. The second feminine singular has commonly been applied to Jerusalem or the people of Judah throughout the book. The reference to allies (v. 20, 22) and to leaders (v. 22) make it very probable that this is the case here too. map: For location see . §† tn: Heb "from Abarim." This was the mountain range in Moab from which Moses viewed the promised land (cf. Deut 32:49). §† tn: Heb "your lovers." For the usage of this term to refer to allies see 30:14 and a semantically similar term in 4:30. sn: If the passages in this section are chronologically ordered, this refers to the help that Jehoiakim relied on when he rebelled against Nebuchadnezzar.

§ tn: Heb "Oracle of the LORD §† tn: Heb "Coniah." This is the spelling of this king's name here and in v. 28 and 37:1. Elsewhere in Jeremiah he is called Jeconiah ( 24:1; 27:20; 28:4; 29:2 [see also 1 Chr 3:16, 17; Esth 2:6]) and Jehoiachin ( 52:31, 33 [see also 2 Kgs 24:6, 8, 12, 15; 25:27, 29; 2 Chr 36:8, 9; Ezek 1:2]). For the sake of consistency the present translation uses the name Jeconiah throughout. sn: According to 2 Kgs 24:8-9 Jeconiah (= Jehoiachin) succeeded his father Jehoiakim and evidently followed in his anti-Babylon, anti-God stance. He surrendered to Nebuchadnezzar shortly after he became king and along with his mother, his family, his officials, and some of the leading men of Jerusalem and Judah was carried into exile in 597 B.C.

Indeed I will tear you off from it [i.e., pull you off of my finger as a signet ring]." The signet ring was the king's seal by which he verified all his legal and political transactions. To have the signet ring was to exercise authority in the king's name. For examples of this see Gen 41:42, 43; 1 Kgs 21:8; Esth 3:10; 8:2. Heb "You who dwell in Lebanon, you who are nested in its cedars, how you...." The metaphor has been interpreted for the sake of clarity. The figure here has often been interpreted of the people of Jerusalem living in paneled houses or living in a city dominated by the temple and palace which were built from the cedars of Lebanon. Some even interpret this as a reference to the king who has been characterized as living in a cedar palace, in a veritable Lebanon (cf. vv. 6-7, 14 and see also the alternate interpretation of 21:13-14). However, the reference to "nesting in the cedars" and the earlier reference to "feeling secure" suggests that the figure is rather like that of Ezek 31:6 and Dan 4:12. See also Hab 2:9 where a related figure is used. The forms for "you who dwell" and "you who are nested" in the literal translation are feminine singular participles referring again to personified Jerusalem. (The written forms of these participles are to be explained as participles with a hireq campaginis according to GKC 253 §90. m. The use of the participle before the preposition is to be explained according to GKC 421 §130. a.) ‡†† tn: The verb here should be identified as a Niphal perfect of the verb הָרָעָה הָרָעָה הָרָעָה

"Enroll this man in the register as though he were childless."‡‡

† tn: Heb "And unto the land to which they lift up their souls to return there, there they will not return." Once again there is a sudden shift in person from the second plural to the third plural. As before the translation levels the pronouns to avoid confusion. For the idiom "to lift up the soul to" = "to long/yearn to/for" see BDB 670 s.v.

ⲕⲱⲛⲁ †† tn: The word translated "clay vessel" occurs only here. Its meaning, however, is assured on the basis of the parallelism and on the basis of the verb root which is used for shaping or fashioning in Job 10:8. The KJV renders it as "idol," but that word, while having the same consonants, never appears in the singular. The word is missing in the Greek version but is translated "vessel" in the Latin version. The word "clay" is supplied in the translation to clarify what sort of vessel is meant; its inclusion is justified based on the context and the use of the same verb root in Job 10:8 to refer to shaping or fashioning, which would imply clay pots or vessels. ‡

†† tn: Heb "Is this man, Coniah, a despised, broken vessel or a vessel that no one wants?" The question is rhetorical expecting a positive answer in agreement with the preceding oracle. sn: For the image of the rejected, broken vessel see Jer 19:1-13 (where, however, the vessel is rejected first and then broken) and compare also the image of the linen shorts which are good for nothing in Jer 13 (see especially vv. 10-11). †† sn: The question "Why?" is a common rhetorical feature in the book of Jeremiah. See Jer 2:14, 31; 8:5, 19, 22; 12:1; 13:22; 14:19. In several cases like this one no answer is given, leaving a sense of exasperation and hopelessness with the sinfulness of the nation that calls forth such punishment from God. ††

†† tn: There is no certain explanation for the triple repetition of the word "land" here. F. B. Huey (Jeremiah, Lamentations [NAC], 209) suggests the idea of exasperation, but exasperation at what? Their continued apostasy which made these exiles necessary? Or exasperation at their pitiful hopes of seeing Jeconiah restored? Perhaps "pitiful, pitiful, pitiful land of Judah" would convey some of the force of the repetition without being any more suggestive of why the land is so addressed. ††† tn: Heb "Write this man childless." For the explanation see the study note. The word translated "childless" has spawned some debate because Jeconiah was in fact not childless.

There is record from both the Bible and ancient Near Eastern texts that he had children (see, e.g., 1 Chr 3:17). G. R. Driver, "Linguistic and Textual Problems: Jeremiah," JQR 28 (1937-38): 115, has suggested that the word both here and in Lev 20:20-21 should be translated "stripped of honor." While that would relieve some of the difficulties here, the word definitely means "childless" in Gen 15:2 and also in Sir 16:3 where it is contrasted with having godless children. The issue is not one of childlessness but of having "one of his sons" succeed to the Davidic throne. The term for "one of his sons" is literally "from his seed a man" and the word "seed" is the same one that is used to refer to his "children" who were forced into exile with him (v. 28). sn: The figure here is of registering a person on an official roll of citizens, etc. (cf. Num 11:26; 1 Chr 4:41; Ps 87:6). Here it probably refers to the "king list" of dynastic succession. While Jeconiah did have children (2 Chr 3:17) none of them ever returned to Judah or ruled over it. What is being denied here is his own succession and that of his immediate sons contrary to the popular hopes expressed in Jer 28:4. His grandson Zerubbabel did return to Judah, became

Though there were periodic kings like Josiah who did fulfill the ideals set forth in Jer 22:3 (see Jer 22:15), by and large they were more like Jehoiaquim who did not (see Jer 22:13). Hence the LORD

הַיְהוָה

§† tn: This passage is the same as 16:14-15 with a few minor variations in Hebrew wording. The notes on that passage should be consulted for the rendering here. This passage has the Niphal of the verb “to say” rather than the impersonal use of the Qal. It adds the idea of “bringing out” to the idea of “bringing up out” and ( Heb “who brought up and who brought out,” probably a case of hendiadys) before “the people [here “seed” rather than “children”] of Israel [here “house of Israel”] from the land of the north.” These are minor variations and do not affect the sense in any way. So the passage is rendered in much the same way. sn: This passage looks forward to a new and greater Exodus, one that so outstrips the earlier one that the earlier will not serve as the model of deliverance any longer. This same ideal was the subject of Isaiah’s earlier prophecies in Isa 11:11-12, 15-16; 43:16-21; 49:8-13; 51: 1-11. §§† sn: Jeremiah has already had a good deal to say about the false prophets and their fate. See 2:8, 26; 5:13, 31; 14:13-15. Here he parallels the condemnation of the wicked prophets and their fate ( 23:9-40) with that of the wicked kings ( 21:11-22:30). §§† tn: The word “false” is not in the text, but it is clear from the context that these are whom the sayings are directed against. †† tn: Heb “he will reign as king and act wisely.” This is another example of the use of two verbs joined by “and” where one becomes the adverbial modifier of the other (hendiadys). For the nuance of the verb “act wisely” rather than “prosper” see Amos 5:13; Ps 2:10 (cf. BDB 968 s.v. יָצַח). †† sn: This has been the constant emphasis in this section. See 22:3 for the demand, 22:15 for its fulfillment, and 22:13 for its abuse. The ideal king would follow in the footsteps of his illustrious ancestor David ( 2 Sam 8:15) who set this forth as an ideal for his dynasty ( 2 Sam 23:3) and prayed for it to be true of his son Solomon ( Ps 72:1-2). ††† tn: Heb “In his days [= during the time he rules].” ††† tn: Parallelism and context (cf. v. 4) suggest this nuance for the word often translated “be saved.” For this nuance elsewhere see Ps 119:117; Prov 28:18 for the verb ( יָצַח). § sn: It should be noted that this brief oracle of deliverance implies the reunification of Israel and Judah under the future Davidic ruler. Jeremiah has already spoken about this reunification earlier in 3:18 and will have more to say about it in 30:3; 31:27, 31. This same ideal was espoused in the prophecies of Hosea ( 1:10-11 [ 2:1-2 HT]), Isaiah ( 11:1-4, 10-12), and Ezekiel (37:15-28) all of which have messianic and eschatological significance. §† tn: Heb “his name will be called ‘The LORD

What was illegitimate was to use the dream to lead people away from the LORD

LORD ††† sn: See the parallel passage in Jer 14:13-15. ††† tn: The relation of the words to one another in v. 26 and the beginning of v. 27 has created difficulties for translators and commentators. The proper solution is reflected in the NJPS. Verses 26-27 read somewhat literally, "How long is there in the hearts of the prophets who are prophesying the lie and [in the hearts of] the prophets of the delusions of their [own] heart the plotting to cause my people to forget my name..." Most commentators complain that the text is corrupt, that there is no subject for "is there." However, the long construct qualification "in the hearts of" has led to the lack of observation that the proper subject is "the plotting to make my people forget." There are no exact parallels but Jer 14:22; Neh 5:5 follow the same structure. The "How long" precedes the other means of asking a question for the purpose of emphasis (cf. BDB 210 s.v. ִךְ

§ tn: Heb "my name." sn: In the OT, the "name" reflected the person's character (cf. Gen 27:36; 1 Sam 25:25) or his reputation ( Gen 11:4; 2 Sam 8:13). To speak in someone's name was to act as his representative or carry his authority ( 1 Sam 25:9; 1 Kgs 21:8). To call someone's name over something was to claim it for one's own ( 2 Sam 12:28). Hence, here to forget the name is equivalent to forgetting who he was in his essential character (cf. Exod 3:13-15; 6:3; 34:5-7). By preaching lies they had obliterated part of his essential character and caused people to forget who he really was. †† tn: Heb "fathers" (also in v. 39). ††† tn: Heb "through Baal." This is an elliptical expression for the worship of Baal. See 11:17; 12:16; 19:5 for other references to their relation to Baal. There is a deliberate paralleling in the syntax here between "through their dreams" and "through Baal."

The term "work of your own hands" is often interpreted as a reference to idolatry as is clearly the case in Isa 2:8; 37:19. tn: The word used here was used in the early years of Israel's conquest for the action of killing all the men, women, and children in the cities of Canaan, destroying all their livestock, and burning their cities down. This policy was intended to prevent Israel from being corrupted by paganism ( Deut 7:2; 20:17-18; Josh 6:18, 21). It was to be extended to any city that led Israel away from worshiping God ( Deut 13:15) and any Israelite who brought an idol into his house ( Deut 7:26). Here the policy is being directed against Judah as well as against her neighbors because of her persistent failure to heed God's warnings through the prophets. For further usage of this term in application to foreign nations in the book of Jeremiah see 50:21, 26; 51:3. ‡† tn: Heb "will utterly destroy them." The referent (this land, its inhabitants, and the nations surrounding it) has been specified in the translation for clarity, since the previous "them" referred to Nebuchadnezzar and his armies. sn: This is essentially the introduction to the "judgment on the nations" in vv. 15-29 which begins with Jerusalem and Judah (v. 18) and ultimately ends with Babylon itself ("Sheshach" in v. 26; see note there for explanation of the term). ‡‡† sn: The Hebrew word translated "everlasting" is the word often translated "eternal." However, it sometimes has a more limited time reference. For example it refers to the lifetime of a person who became a "lasting slave" to another person (see Exod 21:6; Deut 15:17). It is also used to refer to the long life wished for a king ( 1 Kgs 1:31; Neh 2:3). The time frame here is to be qualified at least with reference to Judah and Jerusalem as seventy years (see 29:10-14 and compare v. 12). ‡‡† tn: Heb "I will make them an object of horror and a hissing and everlasting ruins." The sentence has been broken up to separate the last object from the first two which are of slightly different connotation, i.e., they denote the reaction to the latter. sn: Compare Jer 18:16 and 19:8 and the study note at 18:16. ‡‡‡ sn: Compare Jer 7:24 and 16:9 for this same dire prediction limited to Judah and Jerusalem. <sup>18</sup> sn: The sound of people grinding meal and the presence of lamps shining in their houses were signs of everyday life. This most likely refers to the period beginning with Nebuchadnezzar's defeat of Pharaoh Necho at Carchemish in 605 B.C.

cup of wrath” is a common figure to represent being punished by God. Isaiah had used it earlier to refer to the punishment which Judah was to suffer and from which God would deliver her (Isa 51:17, 22) and Jeremiah's contemporary Habakkuk uses it of Babylon “pouring out its wrath” on the nations and in turn being forced to drink the bitter cup herself ( Hab 2:15-16). The causal particle here is found in verbal locutions where it is the cause of emotional states or action. Hence there are really two “agents” which produce the effects of “staggering” and “acting insane,” the cup filled with God's wrath and the sword. The sword is the “more literal” and the actual agent by which the first agent's action is carried out. § tn: The words “the wine of his wrath” are not in the text but are implicit in the metaphor (see vv. 15-16). The Greek version gives evidence of having read the term only once; it refers to the "people of mixed origin" without reference to the kings of Arabia. While the term translated "people of mixed origin" seems appropriate in the context of a group of foreigners within a larger entity (e.g. Israel in Exod 12:38; Neh 13:3; Egypt in Jer 50:37), it seems odd to speak of them as a separate entity under their own kings. The presence of the phrase in the Hebrew text and the other versions dependent upon it can be explained as a case of dittography. sn: See further Jer 49:28-33 for judgment against some of these Arabian peoples. §† sn: The kingdom of Zimri is mentioned nowhere else, so its location is unknown. §†† sn: See further Jer 49:34-39 for judgment against Elam. §† sn: Elam and Media were east of Babylon; Elam in the south and Media in the north. However, when Israel is taken to task by God, it often relates to their failure to live up to the standards of the ten commandments ( Heb "the ten words"; see Hos 4:1-3; Jer 7:9). §†† tn: See the translator's note on 7:13 for the idiom here. §†‡ tn: 26:4-6 are all one long sentence containing a long condition with subordinate clauses (vv. 4-5) and a compound consequence in v. 6: Heb "If you will not obey me by walking in my law...by paying attention to the words of the prophets which...and you did not pay heed, then I will make...and I will make..." The sentence has been broken down in conformity to contemporary English style but an attempt has been made to reflect all the subordinations in the English translation. §†† sn: See the study note on Jer 7:13. §† tn: The translation again represents an attempt to break up a long complex Hebrew sentence into equivalent English ones that conform more to contemporary English style: Heb "And as soon as Jeremiah finished saying all that...the priests...grabbed him and said..." The word "some" has been supplied in the translation, because obviously it was not all the priests, the prophets, and all the people, but only some of them. There is, of course, rhetorical intent here to show that all were implicated, although all may not have actually participated. (This is a common figure called synecdoche where all is put for a part - all for all kinds or representatives of all kinds. See E. W. The word "disaster" (or "harm") is the same one that has been translated "destroying" in the preceding line and in vv. 3 and 13. ‡ sn: This is a brief parenthetical narrative about an otherwise unknown prophet who was executed for saying the same things Jeremiah did. It is put here to show the real danger that Jeremiah faced for saying what he did. There is nothing in the narrative here to show any involvement by Jehoiakim. This was a "lynch mob" instigated by the priests and false prophets which was stymied by the royal officials supported by some of the elders of Judah. Since it is disjunctive or parenthetical it is unclear whether this incident happened before or after that in the main narrative being reported. †† tn: Heb "in the name of the LORD

He may have been Jehoiakim's father-in-law (2 Kgs 24:6, 8). §†† tn: Heb "from Egypt." sn: A standard part of international treaties at this time was a stipulation of mutual extradition of political prisoners. Jehoiakim was a vassal of Pharaoh Necho (see 2 Kgs 23:34-35) and undoubtedly had such a treaty with him. §‡ sn: The burial place of the common people was the public burial grounds, distinct from the family tombs, where poor people without any distinction were buried. It was in the Kidron Valley east of Jerusalem (2 Kgs 23:6). The intent of reporting this is to show the ruthlessness of Jehoiakim. §†† sn: Ahikam son of Shaphan was an official during the reign of Jehoiakim's father, Josiah (2 Kgs 22:12, 14). He was also the father of Gedaliah who became governor of Judah after the fall of Jerusalem (Jer 40:5). The particle at the beginning of the verse is meant to contrast the actions of this man with the actions of Jehoiakim. The impression created by this verse is that it took more than just the royal officials' opinion and the elders' warnings to keep the priests and prophets from swaying popular opinion to put Jeremiah to death. §† tn: Heb "Nevertheless, the hand of Ahikam son of Shaphan was with Jeremiah so that he would §§§ sn: The yoke is a common biblical symbol of political servitude (see, e.g., Deut 28:48; 1 Kgs 12:4, 9, 10). From the context of 1 Kgs 12 it is clear that it applied to taxation and the provision of conscript labor. In international political contexts it involved the payment of heavy tribute which was often conscripted from the citizens (see, e.g., 2 Kgs 15:19-20; 23:34-35) and the furnishing of military contingents for the sovereign's armies (see, e.g., 2 Kgs 24:2). Jeremiah's message here combines both a symbolic action (the wearing of a yoke) and words of explanation as in Jer 19:1-13. (See Isa 20:1-6 for an example outside of Jeremiah.) The casting off of the yoke has been used earlier in Jer 2:20, 5:5 to refer to Israel's failure to remain spiritually "subject" or faithful to God. <sup>18</sup> map: For location see .

<sup>21</sup> tn: This verb is a little difficult to render here. The word is used in the sense of taking note of something and acting according to what is noticed. It is the word that has been translated several times throughout Jeremiah as "punish [someone]." It is also used in the opposite of sense of taking note and "show consideration for" (or "care for;" see, e.g., Ruth 1:6). Here the nuance is positive and is further clarified by the actions that follow, bringing them back and restoring them. <sup>22</sup> tn: Heb "oracle of the LORD <sup>23</sup> tc: The original text is unusually full here and deemed by many scholars to be corrupt: Heb "And it happened in that year in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the fourth year, in the fifth month Hananiah...said to..." Many scholars see a contradiction between "in the fourth year" and "in the beginning of the reign." These scholars point to the fact that the Greek version does not have "in that year" and "in the beginning of the reign of"; it merely reads "in the fourth year of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the fifth month." These scholars generally also regard the heading at 27:1 to be unoriginal and interpret the heading in the MT here as a faulty harmonization of the original (that in the Greek version) with the erroneous one in the Hebrew of 27:1. However, it is just as possible that the Greek version in both places is an attempt to harmonize the data of 27:1 and 28:1. I.e., it left out both the heading at 27:1, and "in that year" and "at the beginning of the reign of" in the heading here because it thought the data was contradictory. However, it is just as likely that there is really no contradiction here. I.e., the term "beginning of the reign" can include the fourth year. E. H. Merrill has argued that the term here refers not to the accession year (see the translator's note on 26:1) but to the early years in general ("The 'Accession Year' and Davidic Chronology," JANESCU 19 [1989]: 105-6, and cf. note 18 for bibliography on Akkadian parallels). Hence the phrase has been translated both here and in 27:1 "early in the reign of..." For other attempts at harmonization see the discussion in G. L. Keown, P. J. Scalise, T. G. Smothers, Jeremiah 26-52 (WBC), 41, n. 1a. sn: The dating here is very full and precise. "In that same year" ties the events here in with the messages that Jeremiah delivered to the envoys, the king and his court, and the priests and people while wearing the yoke symbolizing servitude to Nebuchadnezzar. The text wants to show that the events here transpired shortly after those in Jer 27 and that Jeremiah is still wearing the yoke. The supplying of the precise month is important because the end of the chapter will show that Jeremiah's prophecy regarding Hananiah was fulfilled two months later. Hence Jeremiah is the true prophet and Hananiah and the others (27:16) are false. The supplying of the year is perhaps significant because the author states in 51:59 that Zedekiah went to Babylon that same year, probably to pledge his loyalty. The suggestion lies ready to hand that the events of this chapter and the preceding one lead to his dismissal of the false prophet Hananiah's advice and the acceptance of Jeremiah's. † tn: Heb "to me." The rest of the chapter is all in third person narrative (see vv. 5, 6, 10, 11, 12, 15). Hence, many explain the first person here as a misunderstanding of the abbreviation "to Jeremiah" (אֶל יְרֵמְיָהוּ אֵלַי

†† tn: Heb "And it happened in that year in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the fourth year, in the fifth month, Hananiah son of Azzur the prophet who was from Gibeon said to me in..." The sentence has been broken up in conformity with contemporary English style and the flavor given in modern equivalent terms. ‡ tn: Heb "Yahweh of armies, the God of Israel." See the study notes on 2:19 and 7:3 for the explanation of this title. ‡† sn: See the study note on 27:2 for this figure. Hananiah is given the same title "the prophet" as Jeremiah throughout the chapter and claims to speak with the same authority (compare v. 2a with 27:21a). He even speaks like the true prophet; the verb form "I will break" is in the "prophetic perfect" emphasizing certitude. His message here is a contradiction of Jeremiah's message recorded in the preceding chapter (compare especially v. 3 with 27:16, 19-22 and v. 4 with 22:24-28). The people and the priests are thus confronted with a choice of whom to believe. Who is the "true" prophet and who is the "false" one? Only fulfillment of their prophecies will prove which is which (see Deut 18:21-22).

<sup>5</sup> Then the prophet Jeremiah responded to the prophet Hananiah in the presence of the priests and all the people who were standing in the LORD's temple. <sup>6</sup> The prophet Jeremiah said, "Amen! May the LORD do all this! May the LORD make your prophecy come true! May he bring back to this place from Babylon all the valuable articles taken from the LORD's temple and the people who were carried into exile. <sup>7</sup> But listen to what I say to you and to all these people. ‡†† From earliest times, the prophets who preceded you and me invariably‡‡ prophesied war, disaster, § and plagues against many countries and great kingdoms. <sup>9</sup> So if a prophet prophesied‡† peace and prosperity, it was only known that the LORD truly sent him when what he prophesied came true."

<sup>10</sup> The prophet Hananiah then took the yoke off the prophet Jeremiah's neck and broke it. <sup>11</sup> Then he spoke up in the presence of all the people. "The LORD says, 'In the same way I will break the yoke of servitude of all the nations to King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon‡†† before two years are over.'" He may, however, have been a son or grandson of the High Priest who discovered the book of the law during the reign of Josiah (cf., e.g., 2 Kgs 22:8, 10) which was so instrumental in Josiah's reforms. §§† sn: It is unclear whether this incident preceded or followed those in the preceding chapter. It is known from 52:59 that Zedekiah himself had made a trip to Babylon in the same year mentioned in 28:1 and that Jeremiah had used that occasion to address a prophecy of disaster to Babylon. It is not impossible that Jeremiah sent two such disparate messages at the same time (see Jer 25:8-11, 12-14, 17-18, 26). §§‡ tn: Heb "Yahweh of armies, the God of Israel." sn: See study notes on 2:19 and 7:3 for the explanation of this title. §§§ tn: Heb "I sent." This sentence exhibits a rapid switch in person, here from the third person to the first. Such switches are common to Hebrew poetry and prophecy (cf. GKC 462 §144. p). Contemporary English, however, does not exhibit such rapid switches and it creates confusion for the careful reader. Such switches have regularly been avoided in the translation. sn: Elsewhere Nebuchadnezzar is seen as the one who carried them into exile (cf. 27:20; 29:1). Here and in v. 14 the LORD

‡† tn: Or "the future you hope for"; Heb "a future and a hope." This is a good example of hendiadys where two formally coordinated nouns (adjectives, verbs) convey a single idea where one of the terms functions as a qualifier of the other. For this figure see E. W. Bullinger, Figures of Speech, 658-72. This example is discussed on p. 661. ‡† tn: Heb "come and pray to me." This is an example of verbal hendiadys where two verb formally joined by "and" convey a main concept with the second verb functioning as an adverbial qualifier. ‡†† tn: Or "You will call out to me and come to me in prayer and I will hear your prayers." The verbs are vav consecutive perfects and can be taken either as unconditional futures or as contingent futures. See GKC 337 §112. kk and 494 §159. g and compare the usage in Gen 44:22 for the use of the vav consecutive perfects in contingent futures. The conditional clause in the middle of 29:13 and the deuteronomical theology reflected in both Deut 30:1-5 and 1 Kgs 8:46-48 suggest that the verbs are contingent futures here. For the same demand for wholehearted seeking in these contexts which presuppose exile see especially Deut 30:2, 1 Kgs 8:48. ‡††† tn: Or "If you wholeheartedly seek me"; Heb "You will seek me and find [me] because you will seek me with all your heart." The translation attempts to reflect the theological nuances of "seeking" and "finding" and the psychological significance of "heart" which refers more to intellectual and volitional concerns in the OT than to emotional ones. § tn: Heb "I will let myself be found by you." For this nuance of the verb see BDB 594 s.v. נָצַח

§† tn: Heb "Oracle of the LORD §†† tn: Heb "restore your fortune." Alternately, "I will bring you back from exile." This idiom occurs twenty-six times in the OT and in several cases it is clearly not referring to return from exile but restoration of fortunes (e.g., Job 42:10; Hos 6:11-7:1; Jer 33:11). It is often followed as here by "regather" or "bring back" (e.g., Jer 30:3; Ezek 29:14) so it is often misunderstood as "bringing back the exiles." The versions (LXX, Vulg., Tg., Pesh.) often translate the idiom as "to go away into captivity," deriving the noun from נָבִי

The indirect quotation is used in the translation to avoid the complexity of embedding a quotation within a quotation. §† sn: Jer 29:24-32 are concerned with Jeremiah's interaction with a false prophet named Shemaiah. The narrative in this section is not in strict chronological order and is somewhat elliptical. It begins with a report of a message that Jeremiah appears to have delivered directly to Shemaiah and refers to a letter that Shemaiah sent to the priest Zephaniah encouraging him to reprimand Jeremiah for what Shemaiah considered treasonous words in his letter to the exiles (vv. 24-28; compare v. 28 with v. 5). However, Jeremiah is in Jerusalem and Shemaiah is in Babylon. The address must then be part of a second letter Jeremiah sent to Babylon. Following this the narrative refers to Zephaniah reading Shemaiah's letter to Jeremiah and Jeremiah sending a further letter to the captives in Babylon (vv. 29-32).

own initiative §†† you sent a letter‡† to the priest Zephaniah son of Maaseiah‡†† and to all the other priests and to all the people in Jerusalem. §† In your letter you said to Zephaniah, §†26 "The LORD has made you priest in place of Jehoiada. §†† He has put you in charge in the LORD's temple of controlling‡† any lunatic‡†† who pretends to be a prophet. 18 And it is your duty to put any such person in the stocks19 with an iron collar around his neck. 2027 You should have reprimanded Jeremiah from Anathoth who is pretending to be a prophet among you! 2128 For he has even sent a message to us

This is probably not a third letter but part of the same letter in which Jeremiah reprimands Shemaiah for sending his letter to Zephaniah (vv. 25-28; the same letter referred to in v. 29). The order of events thus is: Jeremiah sent a letter to the captives counseling them to settle down in Babylon (vv. 1-23). Shemaiah sent a letter to Zephaniah asking him to reprimand Jeremiah (vv. 26-28). After Zephaniah read that letter to Jeremiah (v. 29), Jeremiah wrote a further letter to Babylon reprimanding him (vv. 25-28, 31) and pronouncing judgment on him (v. 32). The elliptical nature of the narrative is reflected in the fact that vv. 25-27 are part of a long causal sentence which sets forth an accusation but has no corresponding main clause or announcement of judgment. This kind of construction involves a rhetorical figure (called aposiopesis) where what is begun is not finished for various rhetorical reasons. Here the sentence that is broken off is part of an announcement of judgment which is not picked up until v. 32 after a further (though related) accusation (v. 31b). §†† tn: Heb "In your [own] name." See the study note on 23:27 for the significance of this idiom. §† tn: Heb "letters." Though GKC 397 §124. b, n. 1 denies it, this is probably a case of the plural of extension. For a similar usage see Isa 37:14 where the plural "letters" is referred to later as an "it." Even if there were other "letters," the focus is on the letter to Zephaniah. §†† sn: According to Jer 52:24 and 2 Kgs 25:18 Zephaniah son of Maaseiah was second in command to the high priest. 10-11). 22 tn: Heb “Oracle of Yahweh of armies.” See the study note on 2:19 for explanation of the title for God. 23 tn: Heb “I will break his yoke from upon your neck.” For the explanation of the figure see the study note on 27:2. The shift from third person at the end of v. 7 to second person in v. 8c, d and back to third person in v. 8e is typical of Hebrew poetry in the book of Psalms and in the prophetic books (cf., GKC 351 §114. p and compare usage in Deut 32:15; Isa 5:8 listed there). The present translation, like several other modern ones, has typically leveled them to the same person to avoid confusion for modern readers who are not accustomed to this poetic tradition. sn: In the immediate context the reference to the yoke of their servitude to foreign domination (Heb “his yoke”) should be understood as a reference to the yoke of servitude to Nebuchadnezzar which has been referred to often in Jer 27-28 (see, e.g., 27:8, 12; 28:2, 4, 11). The end of that servitude has already been referred to in 25:11-14; 29:11-14. Like many other passages in the OT it has been given a later eschatological reinterpretation in the light of subsequent bondages and lack of complete fulfillment, i.e., of restoration to the land and restoration of the Davidic monarchy. † tn: Heb “I will tear off their bands.” The “bands” are the leather straps which held the yoke bars in place (cf. 27:2). The metaphor of the “yoke on the neck” is continued. The translation reflects the sense of the metaphor but not the specific referent. †† tn: The word “subject” in this verse and “subjugate” are from the same root word in Hebrew. A deliberate contrast is drawn between the two powers that they will serve. ‡ tn: Heb “and to David their king whom I will raise up for them.” sn: The Davidic ruler which I will raise up as king over them refers to a descendant of David who would be raised up over a regathered and reunited Israel and Judah. He is called “David” in Hos 3:5, Ezek 34:23-24; 37:24-25 and referred to as a shoot or sprig of Jesse in Isa 11:1, 10 and a “righteous branch” springing from David (the Davidic line). He is called “David” because he is from the Davidic line and because David is the type of the ideal king whom the prophets looked forward to. See further the study notes on 23:5 for this ideal king and for his relation to the NT fulfillment in the person of Jesus the Christ. †† tn: Heb “So do not be afraid, my servant Jacob, oracle of the LORD

§†† tn: The pronouns in vv. 10-17 are second feminine singular referring to a personified entity. That entity is identified in v. 17 as Zion, which here stands for the people of Zion. §† sn: The wounds to the body politic are those of the incursions from the enemy from the north referred to in Jer 4:6; 6:1 over which Jeremiah and even God himself have lamented (Jer 8:21; 10:19; 14:17). The enemy from the north has been identified as Babylon and has been identified as the agent of God’s punishment of his disobedient people (Jer 1:15; 4:6; 25:9). §†† tc: The translation of these first two lines follows the redivision of the lines suggested in NIV and NRSV rather than that of the Masoretes who read, “There is no one who pleads your cause with reference to [your] wound.” sn: This verse exhibits a mixed metaphor of an advocate pleading someone’s case (cf., Jer 5:28; 22:18) and of a physician applying medicine to wounds and sores resulting from them (see, e.g., Jer 8:18 for the latter metaphor). Zion’s sins are beyond defense and the wounds inflicted upon her beyond healing. However, God, himself, in his own time will forgive her sins (Jer 31:34; 33:8) and heal her wounds (Jer 30:17). §† tn: Heb “forgotten you.” §†† tn: Heb “attacked you like...with the chastening of a cruel one because of the greatness of your iniquity [and because] your sins are many.” The sentence has been broken down to conform to contemporary English style and better poetic scansion. §†† tn: For the translation of this particle, which is normally translated “therefore” and often introduces an announcement of judgment, compare the usage at Jer 16:14 and the translator’s note there. Here as there it introduces a contrast, a rather unexpected announcement of salvation. For a similar use see also Hos 2:14 (2:16 HT). Recognition of this usage makes the proposed emendation of BHS of לַךְ לְךָ לְךָ לְךָ §§§ sn: With the exception of the second line there is a definite attempt at wordplay in each line to underline the principle of lex talionis on a national and political level. This principle has already been appealed to in the case of the end of Babylonian sovereignty in 25:14; 27:7. §§§ tn: Again the particle וַ

‡ sn: Heb "on its tel." A tel is a site where successive layers of occupation are built upon one another after the destruction or decay of the former city. The original site was not abandoned because it had been chosen for strategic purposes, such as proximity to water or ease of defense. Many modern archaeological sites have the designation "Tel" as a component of their name because of this practice. †† tn: Heb "according to its custom [or plan]." Cf. "His children" refers to "Jacob" who has been referred to in v. 18 in the phrase "I will restore the fortunes of the tents of Jacob." "His children" are thus the restored exiles. Some commentaries see the reference here to the restoration of numbers in accordance with the previous verse. However, the last line of this verse and the reference to the ruler in the following verse suggests rather restoration of the religious and political institutions to their former state. this prerogative was confined to the priests and the Levites and even then under strict regulations (cf., e.g., Num 8:19; 16:10; Lev 16:10; 21:17; 22:3). Uzziah king of Judah violated this and suffered leprosy for having done so ( 2 Chr 26:16-20). It is clear, however, that both David and Solomon on occasion exercised priestly functions in the presence of the ark or the altar which it was normally lawful for only the priests to approach (cf., e.g., 2 Sam 6:13-14; 1 Kgs 8:22, 54-55). Here reference is probably not to the normal prerogatives of offering sacrifice or burning incense but access to God's special presence at special times for the purpose of consultation. §†† tn: Heb "For who is he who would pledge his heart to draw near to me." strongest tribe in northern Israel and Samaria lay in its territory. It is often used as a poetic parallel for Israel as here. The poetry is not speaking of two separate entities here; it is a way of repeating an idea for emphasis. Moreover, there is no intent to show special preference for northern Israel over Judah. All Israel is metaphorically God's son and the object of his special care and concern ( Exod 4:22; Deut 32:6). † sn: Two rather theologically significant metaphors are used in this verse. The Hebrew word translated "will set...free" is a word used in the legal sphere for paying a redemption price to secure the freedom of a person or thing (see, e.g., Exod 13:13, 15). It is used metaphorically and theologically to refer to Israel's deliverance from Egyptian bondage ( Deut 15:15; Mic 6:4) and its deliverance from Babylonian exile ( Isa 35:10). The word translated "secure their release" is a word used in the sphere of family responsibility where a person paid the price to free an indentured relative ( Lev 25:48, 49) or paid the price to restore a relative's property seized to pay a debt ( Lev 25:25, 33). This word, too, was used to refer metaphorically and theologically to Israel's deliverance from Egyptian bondage ( Exod 6:6) or release from Babylonian exile ( Isa 43:1-4; 44:22). These words are traditionally translated "ransom" and "redeem" and are a part of traditional Jewish and Christian vocabulary for physical and spiritual deliverance. †† tn: Heb "from the hand/power of the one too strong for him." ‡ tn: Reading a Qal perfect from the root II נָהַר

town in Benjamin approximately five miles (8 km) north of Jerusalem. It was on the road between Bethel and Bethlehem. Traditionally, Rachel's tomb was located near there at a place called Zelzah ( 1 Sam 10:2). Rachel was the mother of Joseph and Benjamin and was very concerned about having children because she was barren ( Gen 30:1-2) and went to great lengths to have them ( Gen 30:3, 14-15, 22-24). She was the grandmother of Ephraim and Manasseh which were two of the major tribes in northern Israel. Here Rachel is viewed metaphorically as weeping for her "children," the descendants of Ephraim and Manasseh, who had been carried away into captivity in 722 B.C. § tn: Or "gone into exile" (cf. v. 16), though some English versions take this as meaning "dead" (e.g., NCV, CEV, NLT), presumably in light of Matt 2:18. §† tn: The words "to her" are not in the text but are implicit from the context. They are supplied in the translation for clarity. §†† tn: Heb "Refrain your voice from crying and your eyes from tears." §‡ tn: Heb "your work." The metaphor is that of a calf who has never been broken to bear the yoke (cf. Hos 4:16; 10:11). sn: Jer 2:20; 5:5 already referred to Israel's refusal to bear the yoke of loyalty and obedience to the LORD

<sup>18</sup> tn: The verb here is from the same root as the preceding and is probably an example of the "tolerative Niphal," i.e., "I let myself be disciplined/I responded to it." See IBHS 389-90 §23.4g and note the translation of some of the examples there, especially Isa 19:22; 65:1.

<sup>19</sup> tn: Heb "Bring me back in order that I may come back." For the use of the plural pronouns see the marginal note at the beginning of the verse. The verb "bring back" and "come back" are from the same root in two different verbal stems and in the context ex-

Isa 1:21; Jer 4:14; 5:1; 13:27). The blessing here presupposes the rebuilding of the city of Jerusalem and the temple which gave the city its sanctity. † tn: The translation "those who move about with their flocks" is based on an emendation of the Hebrew text which reads a third plural Qal perfect (  $\text{יִבְרְךְ}$   $\text{וְיִשְׂכְּנוּ}$  )

tn: The verbs here again emphasize that the actions are as good as done (i.e., they are prophetic perfects; cf. GKC 312-13 §106. n). sn: For the concept here compare Jer 31:12 where the promise was applied to northern Israel. This represents the reversal of the conditions that would characterize the exiles according to the covenant curse of Deut 28:65-67. ‡ tn: Or "When I, Jeremiah, heard this, I woke up and looked around. My sleep had been very pleasant." The text is somewhat enigmatic. It has often been explained as an indication that Jeremiah had received this communication ( 30:3-31:26) while in a prophetic trance (compare Dan 10:9). However, there is no other indication that this is a vision or a vision report. G. L. Keown, P. J. Scalise, and T. G. Smothers (Jeremiah 26-52 [WBC], 124, 128-29) suggest that this is a speech of the restored (and refreshed) exiles like that which is formally introduced in v. 23. This speech, however, is not formally introduced. This interpretation is also reflected in TEV, CEV and is accepted here as fitting the context better and demanding less presuppositions. The Hebrew text reads literally, "Upon this I awoke and looked and my sleep was sweet to me." Keown, Scalise, and Smothers have the best discussion of these two options as well as several other options. †† tn: Heb "Behold days are coming!" The particle "Behold" is probably used here to emphasize the reality of a fact. See the translator's note on 1:6. sn: This same expression is found in the introduction to the Book of Consolation ( Jer 30:1-3) and in the introduction to the promise of a new covenant (or covenant; 31:31). In all three passages it is emphasized that the conditions apply to both Israel and Judah. The LORD drawn in Hos 2:23 ( 2:25 HT) which is in turn based on the word-play with Jezreel (meaning "God sows") in Hos 2:22. The figure is that of plant seed in the ground which produces a crop; here what are sown are the "seeds of people and animals." For a similar picture of the repopulating of Israel and Judah see Ezek 36:10-11. The promise here reverses the scene of devastation that Jeremiah had depicted apocalyptically and hyperbolically in Jer 4:23-29 as judgment for Judah's sins. ††† tn: Heb "Just as I watched over them to uproot and to tear down, to destroy and demolish, so I will watch over them to build and to plant." The words here repeat those of 1:10 and 1:12. † tn: Heb "Oracle of the LORD †† tn: This word only occurs here and in the parallel passage in Ezek 18:2 in the Qal stem and in Eccl 10:10 in the Piel stem. In the latter passage it refers to the bluntness of an ax that has not been sharpened. Here the idea is of the "bluntness" of the teeth, not from having ground them down due to the bitter taste of sour grapes but to the fact that they have lost their "edge," "bite," or "sharpness" because they are numb from the sour taste. For this meaning for the word see W. L. Holladay, Jeremiah (Hermeneia), 2:197. sn: This is a proverbial statement that is also found in Ezek 18:2. It served to articulate the complaint that the present generation was suffering for the accrued sins of their ancestors (cf. Lam 5:7) and that the LORD

It is supplied in the translation for greater clarity. ††† tn: Heb "fathers." sn: This refers to the Mosaic covenant which the nation entered into with God at Sinai and renewed on the plains of Moab. The primary biblical passages explicating this covenant are Exod 19-24 and the book of Deuteronomy; see as well the study note on Jer 11:2 for the form this covenant took and its relation to the warnings of the prophets. The renewed document of Deuteronomy was written down and provisions made for periodic public reading and renewal of commitment to it ( Deut 31:9-13). Josiah had done this after the discovery of the book of the law (which was either Deuteronomy or a synopsis of

The best commentary on the faithfulness of God to his "husband-like" relation is seen in the book of Hosea, especially in Hos 1-3. ‡ tn: Heb "Oracle of the LORD" ‡† tn: Heb "with the house of Israel." All commentators agree that the term here refers to both the whole nation which was divided into the house of Israel and the house of Judah in v. 30. ‡‡ tn: Heb "after those days." Commentators are generally agreed that this refers to the return from exile and the repopulation of the land referred to in vv. 27-28 and not to something subsequent to the time mentioned in v. 30. This is the sequencing that is also presupposed in other new covenant passages such as Deut 30:1-6; Ezek 11:17-20; 36:24-28. ‡‡† tn: Heb "Oracle of the LORD" ‡‡‡ tn: Heb "But this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after these days:" says the LORD

§ tn: Heb "in their inward parts." The Hebrew word here refers to the seat of the thoughts, emotions, and decisions (Jer 9:8 [9:7 HT]). It is essentially synonymous with "heart" in Hebrew psychological terms. §† tn: The words "and minds" is not in the text but is supplied in the translation to bring the English psychology more into line with the Hebrew where the "heart" is the center both of knowing/thinking/reflecting and deciding/willing. sn: Two contexts are relevant for understanding this statement. First is the context of the first or old covenant which was characterized by a law written on stone tablets (e.g., Exod 32:15-16; 34:1, 28; Deut 4:13; 5:22; 9:10) or in a "book" or "scroll" (Deut 31:9-13) which could be lost (cf. 2 Kgs 22:8), forgotten (Hos 4:6), ignored (Jer 6:19; Amos 4:2), or altered (Jer 8:8). Second is the context of the repeated fault that Jeremiah has found with their stubborn (3:17; 7:24; 9:14; 11:8; 13:10; 16:12; 18:12; 23:17), uncircumcised (4:4; 9:26), and desperately wicked hearts (4:4; 17:9). Radical changes were necessary to get the people to obey the law from the heart and not just pay superficial or lip service to it (3:10; 12:2). Deut 30:1-6; Ezek 11:17-20; 36:24-28 speak of these radical changes. The LORD

The land, however, would not actually belong to Jeremiah because in the year of Jubilee it reverted to its original owner. All Jeremiah was actually buying was the right to use it ( Lev 25:13-17). Buying the field, thus, did not make any sense (thus Jeremiah’s complaint in v. 25) other than the fact that the LORD

This is a case of apposition of species in place of the genitive construction (cf. It is awkward to begin a sentence with "I took..." without finishing the thought, and the long qualifiers in v. 12 make that sentence too long. The sentence is broken up in accordance with contemporary English style. The reference to the "deed of purchase" in v. 12 should be viewed as a plural consisting of both written and sealed copies as is clear from v. 11 and also v. 14. Part of the confusion is due to the nature of this document which consisted of a single papyrus scroll, half of which was rolled up and sealed and the other half which was left "opened" or unsealed. J. Bright (Jeremiah [AB], 237-38) is probably incorrect in assuming that the copies were duplicate since the qualification "containing the order of transfer and the regulations" is only applied to the appositional participle, "the sealed one [or copy]." sn: Aramaic documents from a slightly later period help us understand the nature of such deeds. The document consisted of a single papyrus sheet divided in half. One half contained all the particulars and was tightly rolled up, bound with strips of cloth or thread, sealed with wax upon which the parties affixed their seal, and signed by witnesses. The other copy consisted of an abstract and was left loosely rolled and unsealed (i.e., open to be consulted at will). If questions were raised about legality of the contract then the sealed copy could be unsealed and consulted. †† tc: The translation follows a number of Hebrew mss

Jer 32:18-22 is a long series of relative clauses introduced by participles or relative pronouns in vv. 18-20a followed by second person vav consecutive imperatives carrying on the last of these relative clauses in vv. 20b-22. This is typical of hymnic introductions to hymns of praise (cf., e.g., Ps 136) but it is hard to sustain the relative subordination which all goes back to the suffix on "hard for you." The sentences have been broken up but the connection with the end of v. 17 has been sacrificed for conformity to contemporary English style. §† tn: Heb "[you are] great in counsel and mighty in deed." §‡ tn: Heb "your eyes are open to the ways of the sons of men." §‡† tn: Heb "giving to each according to his way [= behavior/conduct] and according to the fruit of his deeds." §‡‡ tn: Or "You did miracles and amazing deeds in the land of Egypt. And you continue to do them until this day both in Israel and among mankind. By this mean you have gained a renown..." The translation here follows the syntactical understanding reflected also in NJPS. The Hebrew text reads: "you did miracles and marvelous acts in the land of Egypt until this day and in Israel and in mankind and you made for yourself a name as this day." The majority of English versions and commentaries understand the phrases "until this day and in Israel and in mankind" to be an elliptical sentence with the preceding verb and objects supplied as reflected in the alternate translation. However, the emphasis on the miraculous deeds in Egypt in this section both before and after this elliptical phrase and the dominant usage of the terms "signs and wonders" to refer to the plagues and other miraculous signs in Egypt calls this interpretation into question. The key here is understanding "both in Israel and in mankind" as an example of a casus pendens construction (a dangling subject, object, or other modifier) before a conjunction introducing the main clause (cf. GKC 327 §111. h and 458 §143. d and compare the usage in Jer 6:19; 33:24; 1 Kgs 15:13). This verse is the topic sentence which is developed further in v. 21 and initiates a narrative history of the distant past that continues until v. 22b where reference is made to the long history of disobedience which has led to the present crisis.

Moreover, the pronoun "they" accomplishes the same purpose. 25 tn: Heb "by the work of their hands." The verb that introduces this clause is a Piel infinitive absolute which is functioning in place of the finite verb (see, e.g., GKC 346 §113. ff and compare usage in Jer 8:15; 14:19. This grammatical point means that the versions cited in BHS fn a may not be reading a different text after all, but may merely be interpreting the form as syntactically equivalent to a finite verb as the present translation has done.). sn: This refers to God teaching them through the prophets whom he has sent as indicated by the repeated use of this idiom elsewhere in 7:13, 25; 11:7; 25:3, 4; 26:5, 19.

The god Molech is especially associated with the practice of child sacrifice ( Lev 18:21; 20:2-5; 2 Kgs 23:10). In 1 Kgs 11:7 this god is identified as the god of the Ammonites who is also called Milcom in 1 Kgs 11:5; 2 Kgs 23:13. Child sacrifice, however, was not confined to this god; it was also made to the god Baal ( Jer 19:5) and to other idols that the Israelites had set up ( Ezek 16:20-21). This practice was, however, strictly prohibited in Israel ( Lev 18:21; 20:2-5; Deut 12:31; 18:10). It was this practice as well as other pagan rites that Manasseh had instituted in Judah that ultimately led to Judah's demise ( 2 Kgs 24:3-4). Though Josiah tried to root these pagan practices ( 2 Kgs 23:4-14) out of Judah he could not do so. The people had only made a pretense of following his reforms; their hearts were still far from God ( Jer 3:10; 12:2). ††† tn: Heb "They built high places to Baal which are in the Valley of Ben Hinnom to cause their sons and daughters to pass through [the fire] to Molech [a thing] which I did not command them and [which] did not go up into my heart [= "mind" in modern psychology] to do this abomination so as to make Judah liable for punishment." See the study note on 21:4 for further explanation. ‡ sn: This refers to the tearing down of buildings within the city to strengthen the wall or to fill gaps in it which had been broken down by the Babylonian battering rams. For a parallel to this during the siege of Sennacherib in the time of Hezekiah see Isa 22:10; 2 Chr 32:5. These torn-down buildings were also used as burial mounds for those who died in the fighting or through starvation and disease during the siege. The siege prohibited them from taking the bodies outside the city for burial and leaving them in their houses or in the streets would have defiled them. †† tn: Heb "Because I have hidden my face from." The modern equivalent for this gesture of rejection is "to turn the back on." See Ps 13:1 for comparable usage. The perfect is to be interpreted as a perfect of resolve (cf. ## The Lord Threatens to Destroy Those Who Wronged Their Slaves

See the study note on 11:2 for the rationale for the translation here. sn: There are no details regarding the nature of this covenant, but it was probably a parity covenant in which the people agreed to free their slaves in exchange for some concessions from the king (see the study note on 11:2 for more details on the nature of ancient Near Eastern covenants). More details about this covenant are given in vv. 15, 18-19 where it is said to have been made before the LORD

The complex Hebrew syntax has been broken down into shorter English sentences but an attempt has been made to retain the proper subordinations. sn: Through economic necessity some of the poorer people of the land had on occasion to sell themselves or their children to wealthier Hebrew landowners. The terms of their servitude were strictly regulated under Hebrew law (cf. Exod 21:2-11; Lev 25:39-55; Deut 15:12-18). In brief, no Hebrew was to serve a fellow Hebrew for any longer than six years. In the seventh year he or she was to go free. The period could even be shortened if the year of jubilee intervened since all debts were to be canceled, freedom restored, and indentured property returned in that year. Some see the covenant here coming in conjunction with such a jubilee year since it involved the freedom of all slaves regardless of how long they had served. Others see this covenant as paralleling an old Babylonian practice of a king declaring liberty for slaves and canceling all debts generally at the beginning of his reign (but also at other significant times within it) in order to ingratiate himself with his subjects. §‡ tn: Heb "And they complied, [that is] all the leaders and all the people who entered into the covenant that they would each let his male slave and his female slave go free so as not to hold them in bondage any longer; they complied and they let [them] go." The verb "they complied" (Heb "they hearkened") is repeated at the end after the lengthy description of the subject. This is characteristic of Hebrew style. The translation has resolved the complex sentence by making the relative clauses modifying the subject independent sentences describing the situational background before mentioning the main focus, "they had complied and let them go." §§† sn: Most commentators are agreed that the incident referred to here occurred during the period of relief from the siege provided by the Babylonians going off to fight against the Egyptians who were apparently coming to Zedekiah's aid (compare vv. 21-22 with 37:5, 7). The freeing of the minds. They had taken back their male and female slaves that they had freed and forced them to be slaves again. <sup>112</sup> That was when the LORD spoke to Jeremiah, <sup>113</sup> "The LORD God of Israel has a message for you. † I made a covenant with your ancestors ‡ when I brought them out of Egypt where they had been slaves. ‡ It stipulated, <sup>‡‡14</sup> "Every seven years each of you must free any fellow Hebrews who have sold themselves to you. After they have served you for six years, you shall set them free." ‡‡‡ But your ancestors did not obey me or pay any attention to me. <sup>15</sup> Recently, however, you yourselves § showed a change of heart and did what is pleasing to me. You granted your fellow countrymen their freedom and you made a covenant to that effect in my presence in the house that I have claimed for my own. <sup>§‡16</sup> But then you turned right around §‡‡ and showed that you did not honor me. § Each of you took back your male and female slaves whom you had freed as they desired, and you forced them to be your slaves again. <sup>§‡‡17</sup> So I, the LORD, say: "You have not really obeyed me and grant-

‡‡† tn: Heb "made a covenant, saying." This was only one of several stipulations of the covenant. The form used here has been chosen as an indirect way of relating the specific stipulation that is being focused upon to the general covenant that is referred to in v. 13. ‡‡‡ sn: Compare Deut 15:12-18 for the complete statement of this law. Here only the first part of it is cited. § tn: The presence of the independent pronoun in the Hebrew text is intended to contrast their actions with those of their ancestors. §† sn: This refers to the temple. See Jer 7:10, 11, 14, 30 and see the translator's note on 7:10 and the study note on 10:25 for the explanation of the idiom involved here. §‡† sn: The verb at the beginning of v. 15 and v. 16 are the same in the Hebrew. They had two changes of heart (Heb "you turned"), one that was pleasing to him (Heb "right in his eyes") and one that showed they did not honor him (Heb "profaned [or belittled] his name"). §‡ sn: Heb "you profaned my name." His name had been invoked in the oath confirming the covenant. Breaking the covenant involved taking his name in vain (cf. Exod 20:7; Deut 5:11; Jer 5:2). Hence the one who bore the name was not treated with the special honor and reverence due him (see the study note on 23:27 for the significance of "name" in the OT). §‡† tn: Heb "and you brought them into subjection to be to you for male and female slaves." I, the LORD, affirm it! §‡† I will make all the kingdoms of the earth horrified at what happens to you. <sup>§§‡18</sup> I will punish those people who have violated their covenant with me. I will make them like the calf they cut in two and passed between its pieces. §§§ I will do so because they did not keep the terms of the covenant they made in my presence. <sup>1819</sup> I will punish the leaders of Judah and Jerusalem, the court officials, <sup>19</sup> the priests, and all the other people of the land who passed between the pieces of the calf. <sup>2020</sup> I will hand them over to their enemies who want to kill them. Their dead bodies will become food for the birds and the wild animals. <sup>2121</sup> I will also hand King Zedekiah of Judah and his officials over to their enemies who want to kill them. I will hand them over to the army of the king of Babylon, even though they have temporarily withdrawn from attacking you. <sup>2222</sup> For I, the LORD, affirm that <sup>23</sup> I will

the same redundant repetition which is not carried over into the contemporary English sentence. §† tn: The Hebrew text has a compound object, the two terms of which have been synonyms in vv. 14, 15. G. L. Keown, P. J. Scalise, and T. G. Smothers (Jeremiah 26-52 [WBC], 189) make the interesting observation that these two terms (Heb "brother" and "neighbor") emphasize the relationships that should have taken precedence over their being viewed as mere slaves. §‡ sn: This is, of course, a metaphorical and ironical use of the term "to grant freedom to." It is, however, a typical statement of the concept of talionic justice which is quite often operative in God's judgments in the OT (cf., e.g., Obad 15). §§† tn: Heb "Oracle of the LORD" §§‡ sn: Compare Jer 15:4; 24:9; 29:18. §§§ sn: See the study note on v. 8 for explanation and parallels. <sup>18</sup> tn: There is a little confusion in the syntax of this section because the noun "the calf" does not have any formal conjunction or preposition with it showing how it relates to the rest of the sentence. KJV treats it and the following words as though they were a temporal clause modifying "covenant which they made." The majority of modern English versions and commentaries, however, understand it as a second accusative after the verb + object "I will make the men." This fits under the category of what GKC 375 §118. r calls an accusative of comparison (compare usage in Isa 21:8; Zech 2:8). Stated baldly, "I will make the people...the calf," it is, however, more forceful than the formal use of the noun + preposition ‡

<sup>19</sup> tn: For the rendering of this term see the translator's note on 29:2. <sup>20</sup> tn: This verse is not actually a sentence in the Hebrew original but is a prepositioned object to the verb in v. 20, "I will hand them over." This construction is called casus pendens in the older grammars and is used to call attention to a subject or object (cf. GKC 458 §143. d and compare the usage in 33:24). The same nondescript "I will punish" which was used to resolve the complex sentence in the previous verse has been chosen to introduce the objects here before the more specific "I will hand them over" in the next verse. <sup>21</sup> sn: See this same phrase in Jer 7:33; 16:4; 19:7. <sup>22</sup> tn: Heb "And Zedekiah king of Judah and his officials I will give into the hand of their enemies and into the hand of those who seek their lives and into the hands of the army of the king of Baby-

I took them into the room where the disciples of the prophet Hanan son of Igdaliah stayed.‡‡ That room was next to the one where the temple officers stayed and above the room where Maaseiah son of Shallum, one of the doorkeepers‡‡† of the temple, stayed. <sup>5</sup> Then I set cups

In the ancient Near East such people were dependent on the laws of hospitality rather than the laws of state for protection and provision of legal rights. Perhaps the best illustration of this is Abraham who “sojourned” among the Philistines and the Hittites in Canaan and was dependent upon them for grazing and water rights and for a place to bury his wife (cf. Gen 20-24). The scroll varied in length depending on the contents. This scroll was probably not all that long since it was read three times in a single day (vv. 10-11, 15-16, 21-23). §‡ sn: The intent is hardly that of giving a verbatim report of everything that the LORD

The exact content of this scroll is unknown since many of the messages in the present book are undated. It is also not known what relation this scroll had to the present form of the book of Jeremiah, since this scroll was destroyed and another one written that contained more than this one did (cf. v. 32). 4 So Jeremiah summoned Baruch son of Neriah. Then Jeremiah dictated to Baruch everything the LORD had told him to say and Baruch wrote it all down in a scroll. †5 Then Jeremiah told Baruch, "I am no longer allowed to go†† into the LORD's temple. 6 So you go there the next time all the people of Judah come in from their towns to fast‡ in the LORD's temple. A fast day was likely chosen for the reading of the scroll because the people would be more mindful of the crisis they were in and be in more of a repentant mood. The events referred to in the study note on v. 1 would have provided the basis for Jeremiah's anticipation of a fast day when the scroll could be read. †† tn: Heb "So you go and read from the scroll which you have written from my mouth the words of the LORD

As the sentence is structured in Hebrew it looks like these words are the subject of "proclaim a fast." However, most commentaries point out that the people themselves would hardly proclaim a fast; they would be summoned to fast (cf. 1 Kgs 21:9, 12; Jonah 3:7). Hence many see these words as the object of the verb which has an impersonal subject "they." This is most likely unless with J. Bright ( Jeremiah [AB], 180) the word "proclaim" is used in a looser sense as "observed." The translation has chosen to follow this latter tack rather than use the impersonal (or an equivalent passive) construction in English. For a similar problem see Jonah 3:5 which precedes the official proclamation in 3:7. The Hebrew text reads: "In the fifth year of Jehoiakim son of Josiah king of Judah, in the ninth month they proclaimed a fast before the LORD

§†† sn: Shaphan had been the royal secretary under Jehoiakim's father's rule. (See 2 Kgs 22 and note especially vv. 3, 8, 10.) If the Shaphan mentioned in 26:14 is the same person as this, Gemariah would have been the brother of the man who spoke up on Jeremiah's behalf when the priests and prophets sought to have him killed. §‡ sn: It is generally agreed that this is the same as the inner court mentioned in 1 Kgs 6:36; 7:12. Though he was instrumental in the death of that prophet, he appears to have been favorably disposed to Jeremiah or at least impressed by the seriousness of his messages, because he is one of the officials that urged Baruch and Jeremiah to hide (v. 19), and he counseled Jehoiakim not to burn the scroll (v. 25). †† tn: Heb "Micaiah reported to them all the words which he heard when Baruch read from the scroll in the ears of the people." ‡† tn: Heb "in your hand." ‡†† tn: The original has another example of a prepositional object (called casus pendens in the grammars; cf. GKC 458 §143. b) which is intended to focus attention on "the scroll." The Hebrew sentence reads: "The scroll which you read from it in the ears of the people take it and come." Any attempt to carry over this emphasis into the English translation would be awkward. Likewise, the order of the two imperatives has been reversed as more natural in English. ‡‡† tn: Heb "So Baruch son of Neriah took the scroll in his hand and went to them." The clause order has been rearranged in the translation for stylistic reasons. § tn: Or "to us personally"...to them personally"; Heb "in our ears'...in their ears." Elsewhere this has been rendered "in the hearing of" or "where they could hear." All three of those idioms sound unnatural in this context. §† tn: The verbal forms emphasize that each word came from his mouth. The first verb is an imperfect which emphasizes repeated action in past time and the second verb is a participle which emphasizes ongoing action. However, it is a little awkward to try to express this nuance in contemporary English. Even though it is not reflected in the translation, it is noted here for future reference. §† tn: The verbs here are both direct imperatives but it sounds awkward to say "You and Jeremiah, go and hide" in contemporary English. The same force is accomplished by phrasing the statement as strong advice. §§† tn: Heb "they deposited." For the usage of the verb here see BDB 824 s.v. דָּרַךְ

§§† tn: Heb "all the matters." Compare the translator's note on v. 16. §§§ tn: Both here and in the next verse the Hebrew has "in the ears of" before "the king" (and also before "all the officials"). As in v. 15 these words are not represented in the translation due to the awkwardness of the idiom in contemporary English (see the translator's note on v. 15). 18 tn: Heb "and Jehudi read it." However, Jehudi has been the subject of the preceding; so it would be awkward in English to use the personal subject. The translation has chosen to bring out the idea that Jehudi himself read it by using the reflexive. 19 tn: Heb "in the autumn house." Commentators are agreed that this was not a separate building or palace but the winter quarters in the palace. sn: Larger houses, including the palace, were two-storied buildings with a lower quarters better suited for the cold of winter and an upper quarters which was better ventilated to provide cool in the summer. Since this was the ninth month (December) the king had taken up residence in the lower, warmer quarters which were equipped with a portable fire pot or brazier to keep him warm. 20 tc: Heb "the fire in the firepot was burning before him." The translation assumes that the word "fire" ( וַיִּפְּרֹק

† tn: Heb "doors." This is the only time the word "door" is used in this way but all the commentaries and lexicons agree that it means "columns." The meaning is figurative based on the similarity of shape. †† tn: Heb "he." The majority of commentaries and English versions are agreed that "he" is the king. However, since a penknife ( Heb "a scribe's razor") is used to cut the columns off, it is possible that Jehudi himself did it. However, even if Jehudi himself did it, he was acting on the king's orders. ‡ sn: Heb "a scribe's razor." There is some irony involved here since a scribe's razor was used to trim the sheets to be sewn together, scrape them in preparation for writing, and to erase errors. What was normally used to prepare the scroll was used to destroy it. ‡† tn: Heb "until the whole scroll was consumed upon the fire which was in the fire pot." ‡‡ tn: Heb "Neither the king nor any of his servants who heard all these words were afraid or tore their clothes." The sentence has been broken up into two shorter sentences to better conform to English style and some of the terms explained (e.g., tore their clothes) for the sake of clarity. sn: There are some interesting wordplays and contrasts involved here. The action of the king and his attendants should be contrasted with that of the officials who heard the same things read (v. 16). The king and his officials did not tear their garments in grief and sorrow; instead the king cut up the scroll (the words "tear" and "cut off" are the same in Hebrew [ עָרַךְ

‡‡† tn: Heb "And also Elnathan, Delaiah, and Gemariah urged [or had urged] the king not to burn the scroll, but he did not listen to them." The translation attempts to lessen the clash in chronological sequencing with the preceding. This sentence is essentially a flash back to a time before the scroll was totally burned (v. 23). ‡‡† tn: Heb "the son of the king." Many of the commentaries express doubt that this actually refers to Jehoiakim's own son since Jehoiakim was only about thirty at this time and one of his sons would not have been old enough to have been in such a position of authority. The same doubt is expressed about the use of this term in 38:6 and in 1 Kgs 22:26. The term need not refer to the ruling king's own son but one of the royal princes. § tn: Heb "Then the word of the LORD

As Jeremiah dictated, Baruch wrote on this scroll everything that had been on the scroll that King Jehoiakim of Judah burned in the fire. They also added on this scroll several other messages of the same kind. <sup>19</sup>

§†† tn: Heb "all the former words/ things." §‡ tn: Heb "first [or former] scroll." §‡† tn: Or "In essence you asked." For explanation see the translator's note on the end of the verse. §† tn: Heb "You burned this scroll, saying, 'Why did you write on it, saying, "The king of Babylon will certainly come [the infinitive absolute before the finite verb expresses certainty here as several places elsewhere in Jeremiah] and destroy this land and exterminate from it both man and beast.'" The sentence raises several difficulties for translating literally. I.e., the "you" in "why did you write" is undefined, though it obviously refers to Jeremiah. The gerund "saying" that introduces 'Why did you write' does not fit very well with "you burned the scroll." Gerunds of this sort are normally explanatory. Lastly, there is no indication in the narrative that Jehoiakim ever directly asked Jeremiah this question. In fact, he had been hidden out of sight so Jehoiakim couldn't confront him. The question is presented rhetorically, expressing Jehoiakim's thoughts or intents and giving the rationale for burning the scroll, i.e., he questioned Jeremiah's right to say such things. The translation has attempted to be as literal as possible without resolving some of these difficulties. One level of embedded quotes has been eliminated for greater simplicity. For the rendering of "How dare you" for the interrogative "why do you" see the translator's note on 26:9. §‡ sn: This prophesy was not "totally" fulfilled because his son Jehoiachin (Jeconiah) did occupy the throne for three months ( 2 Kgs 23:8). However, his rule was negligible and after his capitulation and exile to Babylon, he himself was promised that neither he nor his successors would occupy the throne of David (cf. Jer 22:30; and see the study notes on 22:24, 30). §§† sn: Compare the more poetic prophecy in Jer 22:18-19 and see the study note on 22:19. §§‡ tn: Heb "for their iniquity." §§§ map: For location see . 18 tn: Heb "all the disaster which I spoke against them and they did not listen [or obey]." <sup>19</sup> tn: Heb "And he wrote upon it from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of the scroll which Jehoiakim king of Judah burned in the fire. And many words like these were added to them besides [or further]." The translation uses the more active form in the last line because of the tendency in contemporary English style to avoid the passive. It also uses the words "everything" for "all the words" and "messages" for "words" because those are legitimate us-

The word "temporarily" is not in the text but is implicit from the rest of the context. It is supplied in the translation here to better show that the information in vv. 4-5 is all parenthetical, providing a background for the oracle that will follow. †† sn: This is the second of two delegations that Zedekiah sent to Jeremiah to ask him to pray for a miraculous deliverance. Both of them are against the background of the siege of Jerusalem which was instigated by Zedekiah's rebelling against Nebuchadnezzar and sending to Egypt for help (cf. Ezek 17:15). The earlier delegation ( 21:1-2) was sent before Nebuchadnezzar had clamped down on Jerusalem because the Judean forces at that time were still fighting against the Babylonian forces in the open field (see 21:4 and the translator's note there). Here the siege has been lifted because the Babylonian troops had heard a report that the Egyptian army was on the way into Palestine to give the Judeans the promised aid (vv. 5, 7). The request is briefer here than in 21:2 but the intent is no doubt the same (see also the study note on 21:2). ‡‡ sn: Jehucal was one of the officials who later sought to have Jeremiah put to death for what they considered treason ( 38:1-4). ††† sn: The priest Zephaniah son of Maaseiah was a member of the earlier delegation ( 21:2) and the chief of security in the temple to whom the Babylonian false prophet wrote a letter complaining that Jeremiah should be locked up for his treasonous prophecies ( 29:25-26). See the study notes on 21:2 and 29:25 for further details. ††† sn: This statement anticipates v. 15. Verses 3-4 are parenthetical to the narrative thread which is picked up in v. 5. They provide background information necessary for understanding the situation at the time the delegation comes to Jeremiah. § tn: The words "as he pleased" are not in the text but are implicit in the idiom both in Hebrew and in English. However, there does not seem to be any alternative that would enable a simpler style and still retain the causal and conditional connections that give this sentence the rhetorical force that it has in the original. The condition is, of course, purely hypothetical and the consequence a poetic exaggeration. The intent is to assure Zedekiah that there is absolutely no hope of the city being spared. † tn: The words "The following events also occurred" are not in the text. They are a way to introduce the incidents recorded in 37:11-21 without creating a long complex sentence in English like the Hebrew does. The Hebrew of vv. 11-12a reads "And it was/happened while the army of the Chaldeans had taken themselves up from against Jerusalem, Jeremiah set out from Jerusalem to go to the land of Benjamin to take part..." For the rendering "temporarily withdrawn from Jerusalem" see the translator's note on v. 5. All those officials had been taken into exile with Jeconiah in 597 B.C. §‡ tn: Heb "for they had made it into the house of confinement." The causal particle does not fit the English sentence very well and "house of confinement" needs some explanation. For the relative sequence of these two delegations see the study note on 21:1. §† tn: J. Bright (Jeremiah [AB], 226, 30) is probably correct in translating the verbs here as pluperfects and in explaining that these words are prophecies that Jeremiah uttered before his arrest not prophecies that were being delivered to the people through intermediaries sent by Jeremiah who was confined in the courtyard of the guardhouse. For the use of the vav consecutive + imperfect to denote the pluperfect see the discussion and examples in IBHS 552-53 §33.2.3a and see the usage in Exod 4:19. Later he will be promised deliverance from destruction when the city falls because he had shown trust in God (see Jer 39:16-18). <sup>26</sup> tn: Heb “Ebed Melech, the Cushite, a man, an eunuch/official, and he was [= who was; a circumstantial clause] in the house of the king, heard that they had put Jeremiah...” The passive construction “Jeremiah had been put” has been used to avoid the indefinite subject “they” or the addition of “the officials.” For the trans-

Most commentators agree that the reference to sitting in the gate here likely refers to the same kind of judicial context that has been posited for 26:10 (see the translator's note there for further references). Hence the translation uses "sitting" with the more technical "holding court" to better reflect the probable situation. †† tn: Heb "Those men have made evil all they have done to the prophet Jeremiah in that they have thrown him into the cistern and he will die of starvation in the place where he is because there is no more food in the city." Jeremiah Responds to Zedekiah's Request for Secret Advice

<sup>14</sup> Some time later§†† Zedekiah sent and had Jeremiah brought to him at the third entrance§† of the LORD's temple. The king said to Jeremiah, "I would like to ask you a question. Do not hide anything from me when you answer."<sup>§††15</sup> Jeremiah said to Zedekiah, "If I answer you, you will certainly kill me.§† If I give you advice, you will not listen to me."<sup>16</sup> So King Zedekiah made a secret promise to Jeremiah and sealed it with an oath. He promised,§‡ "As surely as the LORD lives who has given us life and breath,§§† I promise you this : I will not kill you or hand you over to those men who want to kill you."§§‡

<sup>17</sup> Then Jeremiah said to Zedekiah, "The LORD, the God who rules over all, the God of Israel,§§§ says, 'You must surrender to the officers of the king of Babylon. The alternate translation is what the text reads literally. §† tn: Heb "Jeremiah remained/stayed in the courtyard of the guardhouse." The translation is meant to better reflect the situation; i.e., Jeremiah was released from the cistern but still had to stay in the courtyard of the guardhouse. §†† tn: The words "Some time later" are not in the text but are a way of translating the conjunction "And" or "Then" that introduces this narrative. §‡ sn: The precise location of this entrance is unknown since it is mentioned nowhere else in the OT. Many commentators equate this with the "king's outer entry" (mentioned in 2 Kgs 16:18) which appears to have been a private entryway between the temple and the palace. §‡† tn: The words "when you answer" are not in the text but are implicit in the connection. They are supplied in the translation for the sake of clarity and smoothness of style. §† tn: Or "you will most certainly kill me, won't you?" Heb "Will you not certainly kill me?" The question is rhetorical and expects a positive answer. In situations like this BDB s.v. לָלַךְ בֵּן אֲבִיךָ

Do not hide from us and we will not kill you [so that we will not kill you] and [tell us] what the king said to you,’ then tell them.” The sentence has been broken up to better conform with contemporary English style. ‡†† tn: Heb “I was causing to fall [= presenting] my petition before the king not to send me back to Jonathan’s house to die there.” The word “dungeon of” is supplied in the translation to help the reader connect this petition with Jeremiah’s earlier place of imprisonment where the officials had put him with every intention of letting him die there ( 37:15-16, 20). sn: See Jer 37:15-16, 20. <sup>18</sup> tn: Heb “All the officials came to Jeremiah and questioned him.” <sup>19</sup> tn: Heb “And he reported to them according to all these words which the king had commanded.” <sup>20</sup> tn: Heb “And they were silent from him because the word/matter [i.e., the conversation between Jeremiah and the king] had not been heard.” According to BDB 578 s.v. שָׁמַעַ

The Fall of Jerusalem and Its Aftermath

39 King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon came against Jerusalem with his whole army and laid siege to it. The siege began in the tenth month of the ninth year that Zedekiah ruled over Judah. ‡‡ It lasted until the ninth day of the fourth month of Zedekiah's eleventh year. ‡‡ On that day they broke through the city walls. <sup>3</sup> Then Nergal-Sharezer of Samgar, Nebo-Sarsekim, who was a chief officer, Nergal-Sharezer, who was a high official, ‡‡‡ and all the other officers of

† tn: Heb "And Jeremiah stayed/remained in the courtyard of the guardhouse..." The translation once again intends to reflect the situation. Jeremiah had a secret meeting with the king at the third entrance to the temple (v. 14). He was returned to the courtyard of the guardhouse (cf. v. 13) after the conversation with the king where the officials came to question him (v. 27). He was not sent back to the dungeon in Jonathan's house as he feared, but was left confined in the courtyard of the guardhouse. †† map: For location see . ‡ map: For location see . ‡† tc: The precise meaning of this line and its relation to the context are somewhat uncertain. the king of Babylon came and set up quarters§ in the Middle Gate. <sup>§†4</sup> When King Zedekiah of Judah and all his soldiers saw them, they tried to escape. They departed from the city during the night. They took a path through the king's garden and passed out through the gate between the two walls. §†† Then they headed for the Jordan Valley. <sup>§‡5</sup> But the Babylonian<sup>§‡††</sup> army chased after them. They caught up with Zedekiah in the plains of Jericho§† and captured him.§‡ They took him to King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon at Riblah§‡† in the territory of Hamath and Nebuchadnezzar passed sentence on him there. <sup>6</sup> There at Riblah the king of Babylon had Zedekiah's sons put to death while Zedekiah was forced to watch. The king of Babylon also had all the nobles of Judah put to death. <sup>7</sup> Then he had Zedekiah's eyes put out and had him bound in chains§‡‡ to be led off to Babylon. <sup>8</sup> The Babylonians<sup>§‡‡‡</sup> burned down the royal palace, the temple of the LORD , and the people's homes,<sup>18</sup> and they tore down the wall

Bright (Jeremiah [AB], 243) is undoubtedly correct in assuming that it had to do with setting up a provisional military government over the city. §† tn: The Hebrew style here is typically full or redundant, giving a general subject first and then listing the specifics. The Hebrew text reads: "Then all the officers of the king of Babylon came and sat in the Middle Gate, Nergal-Sharezer...and all the rest of the officers of the king of Babylon." In the translation the general subject has been eliminated and the list of the "real" subjects used instead; this eliminates the dashes or commas typical of some modern English versions. sn: The identification of the location of the Middle Gate is uncertain since it is mentioned nowhere else in the OT. §†† sn: The king's garden is mentioned again in Neh 3:15 in conjunction with the pool of Siloam and the stairs that go down from the city of David. This would have been in the southern part of the city near the Tyropean Valley which agrees with the reference to the "two walls" which were probably the walls on the eastern and western hills. §‡ sn: Heb "toward the Arabah." The Arabah was the rift valley north and south of the Dead Sea. Here the intention was undoubtedly to escape across the Jordan to Moab or Ammon. It appears from 40:14; 41:15 that the Ammonites were known to harbor fugitives from the Babylonians. §‡† tn: Heb "The Chaldeans." See the study note on 21:4 for explanation. §† map: For location see . §‡ sn: 2 Kgs 25:5 and Jer 52:8 mention that the soldiers all scattered from him. That is why the text focuses on Zedekiah here. §‡† sn: Riblah was a strategic town on the Orontes River in Syria. It was at a crossing of the major roads between Egypt and Mesopotamia. Pharaoh Necho had earlier received Jehoahaz there and put him in chains ( 2 Kgs 23:33) prior to taking him captive to Egypt. Nebuchadnezzar had set up his base camp for conducting his campaigns against the Palestinian states there and was now sitting in judgment on prisoners brought to him. §‡‡ tn: Heb "fetters of bronze." The more generic "chains" is used in the translation because "fetters" is a word unfamiliar to most modern readers. §‡‡‡ tn: Heb "Chaldean." See the study note on 21:4 for explanation. 18 tc: The reading here is based on an emendation following the parallels in Jer 52:13 and 2 Kgs 25:9. The Hebrew text here does not have "the temple of the LORD

For a good discussion of the options see F. B. Huey, Jeremiah, Lamentations (NAC), 341, n. 71. Most commentaries follow the general lead of J. Bright (Jeremiah [AB], 243) as the present translation has done here. However, the second name is not emended on the basis of v. 13 as Bright does, nor is the second Nergal-Sharezer regarded as the same man as the first and the information on the two combined as he does. The first Nergal-Sharezer is generally identified on the basis of Babylonian records as the man who usurped the throne from Nebuchadnezzar's son, Awel-Marduk or Evil-Merodach as he is known in the OT ( Jer 52:31; 2 Kgs 25:27). The present translation renders the two technical Babylonian terms "Rab-Saris" (only in Jer 39:3, 13; 2 Kgs 18:17) and "Rab-Mag" (only in Jer 39:3, 13) as "chief officer" and "high official" without knowing precisely what offices they held. This has been done to give the modern reader some feeling of their high position without specifying exactly what their pre-

An alternate translation is "to take him home with him." The text reads literally "to bring him into the house." However, it is unclear whether "the house" refers to Jeremiah's house or to Gedaliah's. The fact that Nebuzaradan later offers Jeremiah the option of going back to Gedaliah ( 40:5) suggests that the house is here Gedaliah's where Jeremiah would be looked out for in accord with Nebuchadnezzar's command (v. 12). §†† tn: Many translate this last clause as a conclusion or summary remark, "So Jeremiah stayed..." However, it is better to translate it as an adversative because it probably refers to the fact that rather than staying with Gedaliah in the governor's residence Jeremiah stayed among the people. That is how he wound up being led off as a prisoner to Ramah. See further the study note on 40:1. According to IBHS 550 §33.2.1d the vav ( ו )

It is placed here either due to a desire not to interrupt the sequential ordering of events centering on Jeremiah's imprisonment and his release ( 38:14– 39:14) or to contrast God's care and concern for the faithful (Ebed-Melech who, though a foreigner, trusted in God) with his harsh treatment of the faithless (Zedekiah who, though informed of God's will, was too weak-willed in the face of opposition by his courtiers to carry it out). §† tn: Heb "Now the word of the LORD

‡‡ sn: Some commentators see the account of Jeremiah's release here in 40:1-6 as an alternate and contradictory account to that of Jeremiah's release in 39:11-14. However, most commentators see them as complementary and sequential. Jeremiah had been released from the courtyard of the guardhouse on orders of the military tribunal there shortly after Nebuzaradan got to Jerusalem and passed on Nebuchadnezzar's orders to them. He had been released to the custody of Gedaliah who was to take him back to the governor's residence and look after him there. However, Jeremiah remained in Jerusalem among the people there. He was mistakenly rounded up with them and led off as a prisoner to be deported with the rest of the exiles. However, when he got to Ramah which was a staging area for deportees, Nebuzaradan recognized him among the prisoners and released him a second time. ‡†† tn: Heb "when he took him and he was in chains." <sup>7</sup> Now some of the officers of the Judean army and their troops had been hiding in the countryside. They heard that the king of Babylon had appointed Gedaliah son of Ahikam to govern†† the country. They also heard that he had been put in charge over the men, women, and children from the poorer classes of the land who had not been carried off into exile in Babylon. ‡ So†† all these officers and their troops came to Gedaliah at Mizpah. The officers who came were Ishmael son of Nethaniah, Johanan and Jonathan the sons of Kareah, Seraiah son of Tanhumeth, the sons of Ephai the Netophathite, and Jezaniah son of the Maacathite. ‡‡ Gedaliah, the son of Ahikam and grandson of Shaphan, took an oath so as to give them and their troops some assurance of safety. ‡‡ "Do not be afraid to submit to the Babylonians. ‡‡ Settle down in the land and submit to the king of Babylon. Then things will go well for you. ‡‡ I for my part will stay at Mizpah to represent you before the Babylonians§ whenever they come to us. It was not far from Ramah which was approximately four miles north of Jerusalem. † tn: Heb "So Jeremiah went to Gedaliah...and lived with him among the people who had been left in the land." The long Hebrew sentence has been divided in two to better conform with contemporary English style. †† tn: Heb "set him over/ made him overseer over." See BDB 823-24 s.v. טִיָּבָה ‡ sn: Compare Jer 39:10. ‡† tn: Verse 6 consists of a very long conditional clause whose main clause is found in v. 7. The text reads literally "When all the officers of the forces who were in the countryside heard, they and their men, that the king of Babylon had appointed Gedaliah...over the land and that he had committed to him men, women, and children, even from the poorest of the land from those who had not been carried off into exile to Babylon, they came." The sentence has been broken up to better conform with contemporary English style. The phrase "the forces who were in the countryside" has been translated to reflect the probable situation, i.e., they had escaped and were hiding in the hills surrounding Jerusalem waiting for the Babylonians to leave (cf. Judg 6:2). ‡‡ sn: The name of these officers is given here because some of them become important to the plot of the subsequent narrative, in particular, Ishmael and Johanan. Ishmael was a member of the royal family (41:1). He formed an alliance with the king of Ammon, assassinated Gedaliah, killed the soldiers stationed at Mizpah and many of Gedaliah's followers, and attempted to carry off the rest of the people left at Mizpah to Ammon (40:13; 41:1-3, 10). Johanan was the leading officer who sought to stop Ishmael from killing Gedaliah (40:13-16) and who rescued the Jews that Ishmael was trying to carry off to Ammon (41:11-15). He along with another man named Jezaniah and these other officers were the leaders of the Jews who asked for Jeremiah's advice about what they should do after Ishmael had killed Gedaliah (43:1-7). ‡‡† tn: The words "so as to give them some assurance of safety" are not in the text but are generally understood by all commentators. This would be a case of substitution of cause for effect, the oath, put for the effect, the assurance of safety (NJPS translates directly "reassured them"). ‡‡‡ tn: Heb "Chaldeans." But Gedaliah son of Ahikam would not believe them. <sup>15</sup> Then Johanan son of Kareah spoke privately to Gedaliah there at Mizpah, "Let me go and kill Ishmael the son of Nethaniah before anyone knows about it. Otherwise he will kill you§† and all the Judeans who have rallied around you will be scattered. Then what remains of Judah will disappear." <sup>16</sup> But Gedaliah son of Ahikam said to Johanan son of Kareah, "Do not do that§† because what you are saying about Ishmael is not true." §§†

§§† tn: Heb "is false" or "is a lie." §§† sn: It is not altogether clear whether this is in the same year that Jerusalem fell or not. The wall was breached in the fourth month (= early July; 39:2) and Nebuzaradan came and burned the palace, the temple, and many of the houses and tore down the wall in the fifth month (= early August; 52:12). That would have left time between the fifth month and the seventh month (October) to gather in the harvest of grapes, dates and figs, and olives (40:12). However, many commentators feel that too much activity takes place in too short a time for this to have been in the same year and posit that it happened the following year or even five years later when a further deportation took place, possibly in retaliation for the murder of Gedaliah and the Babylonian garrison at Mizpah (52:30). The assassination of Gedaliah had mo-

Zedekiah's chief officers, came with ten of his men to Gedaliah son of Ahikam at Mizpah. While they were eating a meal together with him there at Mizpah, 2 Ishmael son of Nethaniah and the ten men who were with him stood up, pulled out their swords, and killed Gedaliah, the son of Ahikam and grandson of Shaphan. Thus Ishmael killed the man that the king of Babylon had appointed to govern the country. 3 Ishmael also killed all the Judeans† who were with Gedaliah at Mizpah and the Babylonian†† soldiers who happened to be there. ‡

4 On the day after Gedaliah had been murdered, before anyone even knew about it, 5 eighty men arrived from Shechem, Shiloh, and Samaria. †16 Ishmael son of Nethaniah went out from Mizpah to meet them. He was pretending to cry‡‡ as he walked along. When he met them, he said to them, "Come with me to meet Gedaliah son of Ahikam." †17 But as soon as they were inside the city, Ishmael son of Nethaniah and the men who were with him slaughtered them and threw their bodies‡‡‡ in a cistern. 8 But there were ten men among them who said§ to Ishmael, "Do not kill us. mentous consequences and was commemorated in one of the post exilic fast days lamenting the fall of Jerusalem ( Zech 8:19). † sn: All the Judeans. This can scarcely refer to all the Judeans who had rallied around Gedaliah at Mizpah because v. 10 later speaks of Ishmael carrying off "the rest of the people who were at Mizpah." Probably what is meant is "all the Judeans and Babylonian soldiers" that were also at the meal. It is possible that this meal was intended to seal a covenant between Gedaliah and Ishmael of Ishmael's allegiance to Gedaliah and his Babylonian overlords (cf. Gen 26:30-31; 31:53-54; Exod 24:11). In any case, this act of treachery and deceit was an extreme violation of the customs of hospitality practiced in the ancient Near East. †† tn: Heb "Chaldean." See the study note on 21:4 for explanation. There are two cases of apposition with the repetition of the preposition or of the sign of the accusative in this verse, e.g., "who were with him, [namely] with Gedaliah" and "all the Chaldeans who happened to be there, [namely] the soldiers." ‡ tn: Heb "were found there." Many think he is also the same man who is named "Azariah" in Jer 43:2 (the Greek version has Azariah both here and in 43:2). ### Jeremiah Predicts that Nebuchadnezzar Will Plunder Egypt and Its Gods

<sup>8</sup> At Tahpanhes the LORD spoke to Jeremiah. §<sup>9</sup> "Take some large stones§†† and bury them in the mortar of the clay pavement§† at the entrance of Pharaoh's residence§† here in Tahpanhes. Do it while the people of Judah present there are watching. §<sup>†10</sup> Then tell them, §†† 'The LORD God of Israel who rules over all§§§ says, "I will bring<sup>18</sup> my servant<sup>19</sup> King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon. I will set his throne over these stones which I<sup>20</sup> have buried. He will pitch his royal tent<sup>21</sup> over them. <sup>11</sup> He will come and attack Egypt. Those who are destined to die of disease will die of disease. Those who are destined to be carried off into exile will be carried off into exile. Those who are destined to die in war will die in war. <sup>22</sup>12 He will set fire<sup>23</sup> to the temples of the gods of Egypt. He will burn their gods or carry them off as captives. <sup>24</sup> He will pick Egypt clean like a shep-

The term emphasizes God's sovereignty over history. 20 tn: The Greek version reads the verbs in this sentence as third person, "he will set," and second person, "you have buried." This fits the context better but it is difficult to explain how the Hebrew could have arisen from this smoother reading. The figure of substitution (metonymy of cause for effect) is probably involved: "I will have him set" and "I have had you bury." The effect of these substitutions is to emphasize the sovereignty of God. 21 tn: The meaning of this word is uncertain. The word here (שְׁפָרְרוּ שְׁפָרְרוּ

22 tn: As in 15:2 the Hebrew is very brief and staccato-like: "those to death to death, and those to captivity to captivity, and those to the sword to the sword." As in 15:2 most commentaries and English versions assume that the word "death" refers to death by disease. See the translator's note on 15:2 and compare also 18:21 where the sword is distinctly connected with "war" or "battle" and is distinct from "killed by death [i.e., disease]." 23 tc: The translation follows the Greek, Syriac, and Latin versions. The Hebrew text reads: "I will set fire to." While it would be possible to explain the first person subject here in the same way as in the two verbs in v. 12b, the corruption of the Hebrew text is easy to explain here as a metathesis of two letters, י ת הַצִּיִּת 24 tn: Heb "burn them or carry them off as captives." taries and English versions make a distinction between the objects of the verbs, i.e., burn the temples and carry off the gods. However, the burning down of the temples is referred to later in v. 13. sn: It was typical in the ancient Near East for the images of the gods of vanquished nations to be carried off and displayed in triumphal procession on the return from battle to show the superiority of the victor’s gods over those of the vanquished (cf., e.g., Isa 46:1-2). † tn: Or “he will take over Egypt as easily as a shepherd wraps his cloak around him.” The translation follows the interpretation of HALOT 769 s.v. sn: The first three cities, Migdol, Tahpanhes, and Memphis, are located in Northern or Lower Egypt. Memphis (Heb “Noph”) was located south of Heliopolis (which was referred to earlier as “the temple of the sun”) and was about fourteen miles (23 km) south of Cairo. For the identification and location of Tahpanhes see the study note on Jer 43:7. The location of Migdol has been debated but is tentatively identified with a border fortress about twenty-five miles (42 km) east-northeast of Tahpanhes. The “region of southern Egypt” is literally “the land of Pathros,” the long Nile valley extending north and south between Cairo and Aswan (biblical Syene). For further information see the discussion in G. L. Keown, P. J. Scalise, T. G. Smothers, Jeremiah 26-52 (WBC), 262-63. Reference here is to Judean exiles who had fled earlier as well as to those from Mizpah who were led into Egypt by Johanan and the other arrogant men ( 43:3, 5). ††† tn: Heb “Yahweh of armies, the God of Israel.” Compare 7:3 and see the study note on 2:19 for explanation and translation of this title. ††† map: For location see . † tn: Heb “Behold, they are in ruins this day and there is no one living in them.” †† tn: Heb “they.” The referent must be supplied from the preceding, i.e., Jerusalem and all the towns of Judah. “They” are those who have experienced the disaster and are distinct from those being addressed and their ancestors ( 44:3b). ††† tn: Heb “thus making me angry.” However, this is a good place to break the sentence to create a shorter sentence that is more in keeping with contemporary English style.

<sup>15</sup> Then all the men who were aware that their wives were sacrificing to other gods, as well as all their wives, answered Jeremiah. Freedman (Jeremiah [SoBB], 284) notes the third person is used here to include the people just referred to as well as the current addressees. Hence "your people" or "the people of Judah." It is possible that the third person again reflects the rhetorical distancing that was referred to earlier in 35:16 (see the translator's note there for explanation) in which case one might translate "you have shown," and "you have not revered." ‡ tn: Heb "to set before." According to BDB 817 s.v. נָשָׂא

‡† tn: Heb "Behold I am setting my face against you for evil/disaster." For the meaning of the idiom "to set the face to/against" see the translator's note on 42:15 and compare the references listed there. ‡‡ tn: Heb "and to destroy all Judah." However, this statement must be understood within the rhetoric of the passage (see vv. 7-8 and the study note on v. 8) and within the broader context of the LORD

‡‡† tn: Heb "they set their face to go." Compare 44:11 and 42:14 and see the translator's note at 42:15. ‡‡‡ tn: Heb "fall by the sword." § tn: Or "All of them without distinction," or "All of them from the least important to the most important"; Heb "From the least to the greatest." See the translator's note on 42:1 for the meaning of this idiom.

§‡ tn: The translation is very interpretive at several key points: Heb "Then all the men who were aware that their wives were sacrificing to other gods and all their wives who were standing by, a great crowd/congregation, and all the people who were living in the land of Egypt in Pathros answered, saying." It is proper to assume that the phrase "a great crowd" is appositional to "all the men...and their wives...." It is also probably proper to assume that the phrase "who were standing by" is unnecessary to the English translation. What is interpretive is the assumption that the "and all the people who were living in Egypt in Pathros" is explicative of "the great crowd" and that the phrase "in Pathros" is conjunctive and not appositional. Several commentaries and English versions (e.g., J. A. Thompson, Jeremiah [NICOT], 678-79, n. 2; NJPS) assume that the phrase is descriptive of a second group, i.e., all the Jews from Pathros in Egypt (i.e., southern Egypt [see the study note on 44:1]). Those who follow this interpretation generally see this as a gloss (see Thompson, 678, n. 2, and also W. L. Holladay, Jeremiah [Hermeneia], 2:279, n. 15b). It is probably better to assume that the phrase is explicative and that "all" is used in the same rhetorical way that it has been used within the chapter, i.e., "all" = representatives of all. Likewise the phrase "in Pathros" should be assumed to be conjunctive as in the Syriac translation and as suggested by BHS fn c since Jeremiah's answer in vv. 24, 26 is directed to all the Judeans living in Egypt. §‡† tn: Heb "the word [or message] you have spoken to us in the name of the LORD

† tn: Heb “sacrifice to the Queen of Heaven and pour out drink offerings to her.” The expressions have been combined to simplify and shorten the sentence. The same combination also occurs in vv. 18, 19. sn: See the translator’s note and the study note on 7:18 for the problem of translation and identification of the term translated here “the goddess called the Queen of Heaven.” †† tn: Heb “saw [or experienced] no disaster/trouble/harm.” †† tn: Heb “we have been consumed/destroyed by sword or by starvation.” The “we” cannot be taken literally here since they are still alive. sn: What is being contrasted here is the relative peace and prosperity under the reign of Manasseh, who promoted all kinds of pagan cults including the worship of astral deities ( 2 Kgs 21:2-9), and the disasters that befell Judah after the reforms of Josiah, which included the removal of all the cult images and altars from Jerusalem and Judah ( 2 Kgs 23:4-15). The disasters included the death of Josiah himself at the battle of Megiddo, the deportation of his son Jehoahaz to Egypt, the death of Jehoiakim, the deportation of Jehoiachin (Jeconiah) and many other Judeans in 597 B.C.

§†† sn: It is unclear whether this refers to the first scroll ( 36:4) or the second ( 36:32). Perhaps from the reactions of Baruch this refers to the second scroll which was written after he had seen how the leaders had responded to the first ( 36:19). Baruch was from a well-placed family; his grandfather, Mahseiah ( 32:12) had been governor of Jerusalem under Josiah ( 2 Chr 34:8) and his brother was a high-ranking official in Zedekiah's court ( Jer 51:59). He himself appears to have had some personal aspirations that he could see were being or going to be jeopardized (v. 5). The passage is both a rebuke to Baruch and an encouragement that his life will be spared wherever he goes. This latter promise is perhaps the reason that the passage is placed where it is, i.e., after the seemingly universal threat of destruction of all who have gone to Egypt in Jer 44. §† tn: Heb "[This is] the word/message which Jeremiah the prophet spoke to Baruch son of Neriah when he wrote these words on a scroll from the mouth of Jeremiah in the fourth year of Jehoiakim son of Josiah king of Judah, saying." §‡ tn: Heb "Woe to me!" The subject is put at the front to avoid an unidentified "they." †† tn: Heb "terror is all around."

Exod 7:19; 8:1) for parallel usage. sn: The hubris of the Egyptian Pharaoh is referred to in vv. 7-8 as he compares his might to that of the Nile River whose annual flooding was responsible for the fertility of Egypt. A very similar picture of the armies of Assyria overcoming everything in its path is presented in Isa 8:7-8. ‡ tn: The words "Go ahead and" are not in the text but are intended to suggest the ironical nature of the commands here. The place names in Hebrew are actually Cush, Put, and Lud. "Cush" has already been identified in Jer 13:23 as the region along the Nile south of Egypt most commonly referred to as Ethiopia. The identification of "Put" and "Lud" are both debated though it is generally felt that Put was a part of Libya and Lud is to be identified with Lydia in Asia Minor. For further discussion see M. J. isolation allowed her safety and protection that a virgin living at home would enjoy under her father's protection (so F. B. Huey, Jeremiah, Lamentations [NAC], 379). By her involvement in the politics of Palestine she had forfeited that safety and protection and was now suffering for it. §†† tn: Heb "In vain you multiply [= make use of many] medicines." §† tn: Heb "of your shame." The "shame," however, applies to the devastating defeat they will suffer. §‡ tn: The words "In the panic of their flight" and "defeated" are not in the text but are supplied in the translation to give clarity to the metaphor for the average reader. The verbs in this verse are all in the tense that emphasizes that the action is viewed as already having been accomplished (i.e., the Hebrew prophetic perfect). This is consistent with the vav consecutive perfects in v. 10 which look to the future. §§† tn: Heb "The word which the LORD

The sentence has been restructured to reflect the fact that the first command is a general one, followed by announcements in specific (representative?) cities. sn: For the location of the cities of Migdol, Memphis, and Tahpanhes see the note on Jer 44:1. These were all cities in Lower or northern Egypt that would have been the first affected by an invasion. §§§ tn: Heb "For the sword devours those who surround you." The "sword" is again figurative of destructive forces. Here it is a reference to the forces of Nebuchadnezzar which have already destroyed the Egyptian forces at Carchemish and have made victorious forays into the Philistine plain. <sup>18</sup> tn: The word translated "soldiers" (אַבְיָרִים)

Reference here appears to be to the mercenary soldiers who in their hurried flight to escape stumble over one another and fall. This is fairly clear from the literal translation "he multiplies the stumbling one. Also [= and] a man falls against a man and they say [probably = "saying"; an exegetical use of the vav ( ו

It is unclear what is meant by the reference to "appointed time" other than the fact that Pharaoh has missed his opportunity to do what he claimed to be able to do. The indirect quote has been chosen to create a smoother English sentence and avoid embedding a quote within a quote. ††† tn: Heb "Like Tabor among the mountains and like Carmel by the sea he will come." The addition of "conqueror" and "imposing" are implicit from the context and from the metaphor. They have been supplied in the translation to give the reader some idea of the meaning of the verse. sn: Most of the commentaries point out that neither Tabor nor Carmel are all that tall in terms of sheer height. Mount Tabor, on the east end of the Jezreel Valley, is only about 1800 feet (540 m) tall. Mount Carmel, on the Mediterranean Coast, is only about 1700 feet (510 m) at its highest. However, all the commentators point out that the idea of imposing height and majesty are due to the fact that they are rugged mountains that stand out dominantly over their surroundings. The point of the simile is that Nebuchadnezzar and his army will stand out in power and might over all the surrounding kings and their armies. ††† tn: Heb "inhabitants of daughter Egypt." Like the phrase "daughter Zion," "daughter Egypt" is a poetic personification of the land, here perhaps to stress the idea of defenselessness. ††† tn: For the verb here see HALOT 675 s.v. II נָצַח

The exact meaning of the word translated "stinging fly" is uncertain due to the fact that it occurs nowhere else in Hebrew literature. For a discussion of the meaning of the word which probably refers to the "gadfly," which bites and annoys livestock, see W. L. Holladay, Jeremiah (Hermeneia), 2:331, who also suggests, probably correctly, that the word is a collective referring to swarms of such insects (cf. the singular אַרְבֵּה

‡†† tn: Heb "her hirelings in her midst." ††† tn: The word "pampered" is not in the text. It is supplied in the translation to explain the probable meaning of the simile. Some see a reference to the impotent hiss of a fleeing serpent (F. B. Huey, Jeremiah, Lamentations [NAC], 382), others the sound of a serpent stealthily crawling away when it is disturbed (H. Freedman, Jeremiah [SoBB], 297-98). The translation follows the former interpretation because of the irony involved. sn: Several commentators point out the irony of the snake slithering away (or hissing away) in retreat. The coiled serpent was a part of the royal insignia, signifying its readiness to strike. Pharaoh had boasted of great things (v. 8) but was just a big noise (v. 17); now all he could do was hiss as he beat his retreat (v. 22). ‡ tn: Heb "Oracle of the LORD

The constant use of this word to refer to a fortress, the presence of the article on the front of it, and the lack of any reference to a place of this name anywhere else argues against it being a place name. However, the fact that the verbs that accompany it are feminine while the noun for "fortress" is masculine causes some pause. †† tn: For the meaning of the verb here see BDB 369 s.v. קָתַח

‡ sn: Heshbon was originally a Moabite city but was captured by Sihon king of Og and made his capital ( Num 21:26-30). It was captured from Sihon and originally assigned to the tribe of Reuben ( Num 32:37; Josh 13:17). Later it was made a Levitical city and was assigned to the tribe of Gad ( Josh 21:39). It formed the northern limits of Moab. It was located about eighteen miles east of the northern tip of the Dead Sea. ‡† sn: There is a wordplay in Hebrew on the word "Heshbon" and the word "plot" ( חָשַׁבּוּ )
‡†† tn: Heb "In Heshbon they plot evil against her [i.e., Moab]." The "they" is undefined, but it would scarcely be Moabites living in Heshbon. Hence TEV and CEV are probably correct in seeing a reference to the enemy which would imply the conquest of this city which lay on the northern border of Moab. <sup>‡†††</sup> tn: The meaning of this line is somewhat uncertain. The translation here follows all the modern English versions and commentaries in reading the place name "Madmen" even though the place is otherwise unknown and the Greek, Syriac, and Latin version all read this word as an emphasizing infinitive absolute of the following verb "will be destroyed," i.e. יָדְמוּ יָדְמוּ ceding verse where Moab/the people of Moab are like wine left undisturbed in a jar, i.e., in their native land. In this verse the picture is that of the decanter emptying the wine from the vessels and then breaking the jars. The wine represents the people and the vessels the cities and towns where the people lived. The verse speaks of the exile of the people and the devastation of the land. The metaphor of the syntax and the apparent elliptical nature of this text makes the meaning of this verse uncertain. The Hebrew text reads: "From the cry of Heshbon unto Elealeh unto Jahaz they utter their voice from Zoar unto Horonaim Eglath Shelishiyah." The translation and interpretation here are based on interpreting the elliptical syntax here by the parallel passage in Isaiah 15:4-6 where cries of anguish rise from Heshbon and Elealeh which are heard all the way to Jahaz. The people flee southward arriving at Zoar and Eglath Shelishiyah where they voice the news of the destruction in the north. Hence, the present translation interprets the phrase "from the cry of Heshbon unto Elealeh" to be parallel to "Heshbon and Elealeh cry out" and take the preposition "from" with the verb "they utter their voice," i.e., with the cry of Heshbon and Elealeh. The impersonal "they raise their voice" is then treated as a passive and made the subject of the whole verse. There is some debate about the identification of the waters of Nimrim. They may refer to the waters of the Wadi Nimrim which enters the Jordan about eight miles north of the Dead Sea or those of the Wadi en-Numeirah which flows into the southern tip of the Dead Sea from about ten miles south. Most commentators take the reference to be the latter because of association with Zoar. However, if the passage is talking about the destruction in the north which is reported in the south by the fleeing refugees, the reference is probably to the Wadi Nimrim in the north. sn: Elealeh was about two miles (3.3 km) north of Heshbon. Jahaz was about twenty miles (33 km) south of it. These three cities were in the north and Zoar, Horonaim, and Eglath Shelishiyah were apparently in the south. The verse is speaking about the news of destruction in the north spreading to the south. Comparison should be made with the parallel passage in Isa 15:4-6. §† tn: Heb "high place[s]." † tn: Heb “Behold! Like an eagle he will swoop and will spread his wings against Moab.” The sentence has been reordered in English to give a better logical flow and the unidentified “he” has been identified as “a nation.” The nation is, of course, Babylon, but it is nowhere identified so the referent has been left ambiguous. sn: Conquering nations are often identified with a swiftly flying eagle swooping down on its victims (cf. Deut 28:49). In this case the eagle is to be identified with the nation (or king) of Babylon (cf. Ezek 17:3, 12 where reference is to the removal of Jehoiachin (Jeconiah) and his replacement with Zedekiah). †† tn: Parallelism argues that the word קריות

translated somewhat literally here. The Hebrew text reads: “In the shadow of Heshbon those fleeing stand without strength. For a fire goes forth from Heshbon, a flame from the midst of Sihon. And it devours the forehead of Moab and the skull of the sons of noise.” The meaning of the first part is fairly clear because v. 2 has already spoken of the conquest of Heshbon and a plot formed there to conquer the rest of the nation. The fire going forth from Heshbon would hence refer here to the conflagrations of war spreading from Heshbon to the rest of the country. The reference to the “midst of Sihon” is to be understood metonymically as a reference for the ruler to what he once ruled (cf. E. W. Bullinger, Figures of Speech, 583). The last two lines must refer to more than the fugitives who stopped at Heshbon for protection because it refers to the forehead of Moab (a personification of the whole land or nation). It is unclear, however, why reference is made to the foreheads and skulls of the Moabites, other than the fact that this verse seems to be a readaptation or reuse of Num 24:17 where the verb used with them is “smite” which fits nicely in the sense of martial destruction. Translated rather literally, it appears here to refer to the destruction by the fires of war of the Moabites, the part (forehead and skulls) put for the whole. TEV sees a reference here to the “frontiers” and “mountain heights” of Moab and this would work nicely for “foreheads” which is elsewhere used of the corner or border of a land in Neh 9:22. The word “crown” or “skull” might be a picturesque metaphor for the mountain heights of a land, but the word is never used elsewhere in such a figurative way. TEV (and CEV) which follows it might be correct here but there is no way to validate it. The meaning “war-loving people” for the phrase “sons of noise” is based on the suggestion of BDB 981 s.v. שׂאון

Heb "make deep to dwell." The meaning of this phrase is debated. Some take it as a reference for the Dedanites who were not native to Edom to go down from the heights of Edom and go back home (so G. L. Keown, P. J. Scalise, T. G. Smothers, Jeremiah 26-52 [WBC], 330). The majority of commentaries, however, take it as a reference to the Dedanites disassociating themselves from the Edomites and finding remote hiding places to live in (so J. A. Thompson, Jeremiah [NICOT], 718). For the options see W. L. Holladay, Jeremiah (Hermeneia), 2:375. †† sn: Dedan. The Dedanites were an Arabian tribe who lived to the southeast of Edom. They are warned here to disassociate themselves from Edom because Edom is about to suffer disaster. ††† tn: Heb "For I will bring the disaster of Esau upon him, the time when I will punish him." Esau was the progenitor of the tribes and nation of Edom (cf. Gen 36:1, 8, 9, 19).

This latter interpretation is based on a reading in a couple of the Greek versions (Symmachus and Lucian) and is accepted by a number of the modern commentaries, (J. Bright, J. A. Thompson, W. L. Holladay, and G. L. Keown, P. J. Scalise, T. G. Smothers). However, the majority of modern English versions do not follow it and lacking any other Hebrew or versional evidence it is probable that this is an interpretation to explain the mitigation of what appears as a prophecy of utter annihilation. There have been other cases in Jeremiah where a universal affirmation (either positive or negative) has been modified in the verses that follow. The verb in the second line טכח tn: The words "of my wrath" after "cup" in the first line and "from the cup of my wrath" in the last line are not in the text but are implicit in the metaphor. They have been supplied in the translation for clarity. sn: The reference here is to the cup of God's wrath which is connected with the punishment of war at the hands of the Babylonians referred to already in Jer 25:15-29. Those who do not deserve to drink are the innocent victims of war who get swept away with the guilty. Edom was certainly not one of the innocent victims as is clear from this judgment speech and those referred to in the study note on 49:7. ††† tn: Heb "I swear by myself." See 22:5 and the study note there. 18 sn: Bozrah appears to have been the chief city in Edom, its capital city (see its parallelism with Edom in Isa 34:6; 63:1; Jer 49:22). The reference to "its towns" (translated here "all the towns around it") could then be a reference to all the towns in Edom. It was located about twenty-five

It is hard, however, to carry the figure over here into the translation, so the figures have been interpreted instead. “Hamath and Arpad.” There is no word for people in the text. The cities are being personified. However, since it is really the people who are involved and it is clearer for the modern reader, the present translation supplies the words “people of” both here and in v. 24. The verbs in vv. 23-25 are all to be interpreted as prophetic perfects, the tense of the Hebrew verb that views an action as though it were as good as done. The verbs are clearly future in vv. 26-27 which begin with a “therefore.” sn: Hamath was a city on the Orontes River about 110 miles (183 km) north of Damascus. Arpad was a city that was 95 miles (158 km) farther north from there. These two cities were in the path of the northern descent of the kings of Assyria and Babylonia and had been conquered earlier under the Assyrian kings ( Isa 10:9; 36:19; 37:13). The apparent reference here is to their terror and loss of courage when they hear the news that Nebuchadnezzar’s armies are on the move toward them and Damascus. They would have been in the path of Nebuchadnezzar as he chased Necho south after the battle of Carchemish. ††† tc: The meaning of this verse is very uncertain. The Hebrew text apparently reads “Hamath and Arpad are dismayed. They melt away because they have heard bad news. Anxiety is in the sea; it [the sea] cannot be quiet.” Many commentaries and English versions divide the verse and read “like the sea” for “in the sea” ( כַּיָּם וְכַיָּם

They appear to also be nomadic tent dwellers who had a loose association with the Kedarites. †† tn: The words “Army of Babylon” are not in the Hebrew text but are implicit from the context. They are supplied in the translation for clarity. ††† sn: Heb “the children of the east.” Nothing much is known about them other than their association with the Midianites and Amalekites in their attack on Israel in the time of Gideon ( Judg 6:3, 33) and the fact that God would let tribes from the eastern desert capture Moab and Ammon in the future ( Ezek 25:4, 10). Midian and Amalek were consider to be located in the region in north Arabia east of Ezion Geber. That would put them in the same general locality as the region of Kedar. The parallelism here suggests that they are the same as the people of Kedar.

Judgment Against Elam

LORD spoke to the prophet Jeremiah about Elam. §§†

uchadnezzar. † tn: Or "Let their tents...be taken....Let their tent...be carried.... Let people shout...." †† sn: This expression is a favorite theme in the book of Jeremiah. It describes the terrors of war awaiting the people of Judah and Jerusalem ( 6:25), the Egyp-

of Elam, the chief source of their might." The phrase does not mean that God will break literal bows or that he will destroy their weapons (synecdoche of species for genus) or their military power (so Hos 1:5). Because of the parallelism, the "bow" here stands for the archers who wield the bow, and were the strongest force (or chief contingent) in their military. §§§ tn: Or more simply, "I will bring enemies against Elam from every direction. / And I will scatter the people of Elam to the four winds. There won't be any nation / where the refugees of Elam will not go." Or more literally, "I will bring the four winds against Elam / from the four quarters of heaven. / I will scatter...." However, the winds are not to be understood literally here. God isn't going to "blow the Elamites" out of Elam with natural forces. The winds must figuratively represent enemy forces that God will use to drive them out. Translating literally would be misleading at this point. <sup>18</sup> tn: Heb "I will bring disaster upon them, even my fierce anger." <sup>19</sup> tn: Heb "Oracle of the LORD <sup>20</sup> tn: Heb
"I will send the sword after them." <sup>21</sup> tn: Or "I will sit in judg-tors are divided over whether this refers to a king sitting in judgment over his captured enemies or whether it refers to formally establishing his rule over the country. Those who argue for the former idea point to the supposed parallels in 1:15 (which the present translation understands not to refer to this but to setting up siege) and 43:8-13. The parallelism in the verse here, however, argues that it refers to the LORD

Compare a similar expression in 46:16 where the reference was to the flight of the mercenaries. Here it refers most likely to foreigners who are counseled to leave Babylon before they are caught up in the destruction. Many of the commentaries and English versions render the verbs as futures but they are more likely third person commands (jussives). Compare the clear commands in v. 8 followed by essentially the same motivation. The "sword of the oppressor," of course, refers to death at the hands of soldiers wielding all kinds of weapons, chief of which has been a reference to the bow (v. 14).

 the word would mean "double rebellion" and would stand as an epi-

 The "hammer" is a metaphor for Babylon who was God's war club to might not pick up on the metaphor or identify the referent, so the

I will start a fire in his towns and it will consume all that surround him.” The personification continues but now the stance is indirect (third person) rather than direct (second person). It is easier for the modern reader who is not accustomed to such sudden shifts if the second person is maintained. The personification of the city (or nation) as masculine is a little unusual; normally cities and nations are personified as feminine, as daughters or mothers. ‡ tn: Heb “Yahweh of armies.” For an explanation of this title see the study note on 2:19. †† tn: Heb “Oppressed are the people of Israel and the people of Judah together,” i.e., both the people of Israel and Judah are oppressed. However, neither of these renderings is very poetic. The translation seeks to achieve the same meaning with better poetic expression. ††† sn: Heb “their redeemer.” The Hebrew term “redeemer” referred in Israelite family law to the nearest male relative who was responsible for securing the freedom of a relative who had been sold into slavery. For further discussion of this term as well as its metaphorical use to refer to God as the one who frees Israel from bondage in Egypt and from exile in Assyria and Babylonia see the study note on 31:11. †††† tn: Heb “Yahweh of armies is his name.” For the rendering of this title see the study note on 2:19. ††††† tn: Or “he will certainly champion.” The infinitive absolute before the finite verb here is probably functioning to intensify the verb rather than to express the certainty of the action (cf. GKC 464 §145. l). This is probably the case here, but to refer to “their horses and their chariots” in the midst of all the “her...” might create more confusion than what it is worth to be that pedantic. ‡††††††† tn: Or “in the country,” or “in her armies”; Heb “in her midst.” 18 ‡††††††† tn: Heb “A sword against his horses and his chariots and against all the mixed company [or mixed multitude] in her midst and they will become like women.” The sentence had to be split up because it is too long and the continuation of the second half with its consequential statement would not fit together with the first half very well. Hence the subject and verb have been repeated. The Hebrew word translated “foreign troops” ( עַרְבֵי )

 Heb "The king of Babylon hears report of them and his hands hang prophetic and the verbs may be interpreted as prophetic perfects

 (the action viewed as if it were as good as done). In the parallel passage in 6:24 the verbs could be understood as present perfects because the passage could be viewed as in the present. Here it is future. §† sn: Compare Jer 6:22-24 where almost the same exact words as 50:41-43 are applied to the people of Judah. The repetition of prophecies here and in the following verses emphasizes the talionic nature of God's punishment of Babylon; as they have done to others, so it will be done to them (cf. 25:14; 50:15). §§† tn: The completed. The poetry of this section makes it difficult, however, to render the verbs as future as the present translation has regularly done. † tn: Heb "among the nations." With the exception of this phrase, the different verb in v. 46a, the absence of a suffix on the word for "land" in v. 45d, the third plural suffix instead of the third singular suffix on the verb for "chase...off of," this passage is identical with 49:19-21 with the replacement of Babylon or the land of the Chaldeans for Edom. For the translation notes explaining the details of the translation here see the translator's notes on 49:19-21. sn: This passage is virtually identical with Jer 49:19-21 with the replacement of Babylon, land of Babylonia for Edom. As God used Nebuchadnezzar and the Babylonians to destroy Edom, so he would use Cyrus and the Medes and Persians and their allies to destroy Babylon (cf. 25:13, 14). As Nebuchadnezzar was God's servant to whom all would be subject ( 25:9; 27:6), so Cyrus is called in Isaiah "his anointed one," i.e., his chosen king whom he will use to shatter other nations and set Israel free ( Isa 45:1-4). †† sn: The destructive wind is a figurative reference to the "foreign people" who will "winnow" Babylon and drive out all the people (v. 2). This figure has already been used in 4:11-12 and in 49:36. See the study note on 4:11-12 and the translator's notes on 22:22 and 49:36. ‡ tn: Or "I will arouse the spirit of hostility of a destroying nation"; Heb "I will stir up against Babylon...a destroying wind [or the spirit of a destroyer]." The word רוּחַ

†† sn: Heb "the people who live in Leb-qamai." "Leb-qamai" is a code name for "Chaldeans" formed on the principle of substituting the last letter of the alphabet for the first, the next to the last for the second, and so on. This same principle is used in referring to Babylon in 25:26 and 51:41 as "Sheshach." See the study note on 25:26 where further details are given. There is no consensus on why the code name is used because the terms Babylon and Chaldeans (= Babylonians) have appeared regularly in this prophecy or collection of prophecies. †† tn: Or "I will send foreign people against Babylonia." The translation follows the reading of the Greek recensions of Aquila and Symmachus and the Latin version (the Vulgate). That reading is accepted by the majority of modern commentaries and several of the modern versions (e.g., NRSV, REB, NAB, and God's Word). It fits better with the verb that follows it than the reading of the Hebrew text and the rest of the versions. The difference in the two readings is again only the difference in vocalization, the Hebrew text reading זְרִים

††† tn: Or "They will strip her land bare like a wind blowing away chaff." The alternate translation would be necessary if one were to adopt the alternate reading of the first line (the reading of the Hebrew text). The explanation of "winnow" would then be necessary in the second line. The verb translated "strip...bare" means literally "to empty out" (see BDB 132 s.v. קָרַד)

However, as the translator's notes have indicated, the prophets use this tense to view the actions as if they were as good as done (the Hebrew prophetic perfect). The stance here is ideal, viewed as already accomplished.

§§§ sn: The imperatives here and in v. 12 are directed to the soldiers in the armies of the kings from the north (here identified as the kings of Media [see also 50:3, 9; 51:27-28]). They have often been addressed in this prophecy as though they were a present force (see 50:14-16; 50:21 [and the study note there]; 50:26, 29; 51:3) though the passage as a whole is prophetic of the future. This gives some idea of the ideal stance that the prophets adopted when they spoke of the future as though already past (the use of the Hebrew prophetic perfect which has been referred to often in the translator's notes). 18 tn: The meaning of this word is debat-

The meaning of the last phrase is debated. For a discussion of the two options see W. L. Holaday, Jeremiah (Hermeneia), 2:423. Most modern commentaries and English versions see an allusion to the figure in Isa 38:12 where the reference is to the end of life compared to a tapestry which is suddenly cut off from the loom. Hence, NRSV renders the last line as “the thread of your life is cut” and TEV renders “its thread of life is cut.” That idea is accepted also in HALOT 141 s.v. בַּצַּע ‡†† tn: Heb “Yahweh of armies.” For an explanation of this rendering see the study note on 2:19. ‡††† tn: Heb “has sworn by himself.” See the study note on 22:5 for background. ‡†††† tn: Heb “I will fill you with men like locusts.” The “you” refers to Babylon (Babylon is both the city and the land it ruled, Babylonia) which has been alluded to in the preceding verses under descriptive titles. The words “your land” have been used because of the way the preceding verse has been rendered, alluding to people rather than to the land or city. The allusion of “men” is, of course, to enemy soldiers and they are here compared to locusts both for their quantity and their destructiveness (see Joel 1:4). For the use of the particles וְ וְ

LORD †† tn: Or "Media." The referent is not identified in the text; the text merely says "you are my war club." Commentators in general identify the referent as Babylon because Babylon has been referred to as a hammer in 50:23 and Babylon is referred to in v. 25 as a "destroying mountain" (compare v. 20d). However, S. R. Driver, Jeremiah, 317, n. c maintains that v. 24 speaks against this. It does seem a little inconsistent to render the vav consecutive perfect at the beginning of v. 24 as future while rendering those in vv. 20b-23 as customary past. However, change in person from second masculine singular (vv. 20b-23) to the second masculine plural in "before your very eyes" and its position at the end of the verse after "which they did in Zion" argue that a change in address occurs there. Driver has to ignore the change in person and take "before your eyes" with the verb "repay" at the beginning to maintain the kind of consistency he seeks. The vav ( ו )

However, the terms are meant as generic or collective singulars (cf. GKC 395 §123. b) and are thus translated by the plural. The same thing is true of all the terms in vv. 21-23b. The terms in vv. 20c-d, 23c are plural. ††† tn: These two words are Akkadian loan words into Hebrew which often occur in this pairing (cf. Ezek 23:6, 12, 23; Jer 51:23, 28, 57). BDB 688 s.v. חָפֵץ

††† tn: Or "Media, you are my war club...I will use you to smash...leaders. So before your very eyes I will repay...for all the wicked things they did in Zion." For explanation see the translator's note on v. 20. The position of the phrase "before your eyes" at the end of the verse after "which they did in Zion" and the change in person from second masculine singular in vv. 20b-23 ("I used you to smite") to second masculine plural in "before your eyes" argue that a change in referent/addressee occurs in this verse. To maintain that the referent in vv. 20-23 is Media/Cyrus requires that this position and change in person be ignored; "before your eyes" then is attached to "I will repay." The present translation follows J. A. Thompson (Jeremiah [NICOT], 757) and F. B. Huey (Jeremiah, Lamentations [NAC], 423) in seeing the referent as the Judeans who had witnessed the destruction of Zion/Jerusalem. The word "Judean" has been supplied for the sake of identifying the referent for the modern reader. § tn: Heb "Oracle of the LORD" †† tn: Heb "Oracle of the LORD" ††† tn: The word "Babylon" is not in the text but is universally understood as the referent. The latter is the interpretation adopted here (see, e.g., F. B. Huey, Jeremiah, Lamentations [NAC], 423; W. L. LXX (the Greek version) renders the word "kings" as singular and levels all the pronouns to "his," paraphrasing the final clause and combining it with "king of the Medes" to read "and of all the earth." The Latin Vulgate levels them all to the third masculine plural, and this is followed by the present translation as well as a number of other modern English versions (NASB, NIV, NRSV, TEV, NCV). The ASV and NJPS understand the feminine to refer to Media, i.e., "her governors and all her prefects" and understand the masculine in the last line to be a distributive singular referring back to the lands each of the governors and prefects ruled over. This is probably correct but since governors and prefects refer to officials appointed over provinces and vassal states it amounts to much the same interpretation that the Latin Vulgate, the present translation, and other modern English versions have given. §†† sn: The figure here is common in the poetic tradition of the LORD

The verb in v. 31a, however, is imperfect, viewing the action as future; the perfects that follow are all dependent on that future. Verse 33 looks forward to a time when Babylon will be harvested and trampled like grain on the threshing floor and the imperatives imply a time in the future. Hence the present translation has rendered all the verbs in vv. 29-30 as future. §† tn: Heb "Their strength is dry." This is a figurative nuance of the word "dry" which BDB 677 s.v. נָשַׁךְ

The present translation has substituted the word "gates" for "bars" because the intent of the figure is to show that the bars of the gates have been broken giving access to the city. "Gates" makes it easier for the modern reader to understand the figure. §§† tn: Heb "Runner will run to meet runner and..." ing on the king of Babylon from every direction bringing news the sum total of which is reported in the lines that follow. For the meaning of the last phrase see BDB 892 s.v. נָחַץ

† tn: The words "They will report that" have been supplied in the translation to show the linkage between this verse and the previous one. This is still a part of the report of the messengers. The meaning of the word translated "reed marshes" has seemed inappropriate to some commentators because it elsewhere refers to "pools." However, all the commentaries consulted agree that the word here refers to the reedy marshes that surrounded Babylon. (For a fuller discussion regarding the meaning of this word and attempts to connect it with a word meaning "fortress" see W. L. Holladay, Jeremiah [Hermeneia], 2:427.) sn: Babylon was a city covering over a thousand acres. The city itself was surrounded by two walls, the inner one 21 feet (6.3 m) thick and the outer 11 feet (3.3 m) thick. To provide further security, walls were built to the south and east of the city and irrigation ditches and canals north and east of the city were flooded to prevent direct access to the city. The reference to "fords" here is to the river crossings of the Euphrates River which ran right through the city and the crossings at the ditches and canals. The reference to the "reed marshes" refers to the low lying areas around the city where reeds grew. The burning of the reed marshes would deprive any fugitives of places to hide and flush out any who had already escaped. †† sn: Heb "Daughter Babylon." See the study note at 50:42 for explanation. ‡ tn: Heb "Daughter Babylon will be [or is; there is no verb and the tense has to be supplied from the context] like a threshing floor at the time one tramples it. Yet a little while and the time of the harvest will come for her." It is generally agreed that there are two figures here: one of leveling the threshing floor and stamping it into a smooth, hard surface and the other of the harvest where the grain is cut, taken to the threshing floor, and threshed by trampling the sheaves of grain to loosen the grain from the straw, and finally winnowed by throwing the mixture into the air (cf., e.g., J. A. Thompson, Jeremiah [NICOT], 760). The translation has sought to convey those ideas as clearly as possible without digressing too far from the literal. sn: There are two figures involved here: one of the threshing floor being leveled and stamped down hard and smooth and the other of the harvest. At harvest time the stalks of grain were cut down, gathered in sheaves, taken to the harvest floor where the grain was loosened from the husk by driving oxen and threshing sleds over them. The grain was then separated from the mixture of grain, straw and husks by repeatedly throwing it in the air and letting the wind blow away the lighter husks and ground-up straw. The figure of harvest is often used of judgment in the OT. See, e.g., Joel 3:13 ( 4:13 Hebrew text) and Hos 6:11 and compare also Mic 4:12-13 and Jer 51:2 where different steps in this process are also used figuratively in connection with judgment. Babylon will be leveled to the ground and its people cut down in judgment. †† tn: This verse is extremely difficult to translate because of the shifting imagery, the confusion over the meaning of one of the verbs, and the apparent inconsistency of the pronomi-

lowed here for consistency with the next verse which identifies the speaker as the person living in Zion and the personified city of Jerusalem. The Hebrew text reads: "Nebuchadnezzar king of Baby-

‡†† tn: Heb "Oracle of the LORD ††† tn: Heb "I will bring them down like lambs to be slaughtered, like rams and he goats." sn: This statement is highly ironic in light of the fact that the Babylonians were compared to lions and lion cubs (v. 38). Here they are like lambs, rams, and male goats which are to be lead off to be slaughtered. § sn: Heb "Sheshach." For an explanation of the usage of this name for Babylon see the study note on Jer 25:26 and that on 51:1 for a similar phenomenon. Babylon is here called "the pride of the whole earth" because it was renowned for its size, its fortifications, and its beautiful buildings. §† tn: Heb "How Sheshach has been captured, the pride of the whole earth has been seized! How Babylon has become an object of horror among the nations!" For the usage of "How" here see the translator's note on 50:23. sn: This is part of a taunt song (see Isa 14:4) and assumes prophetically that the city has already been captured. The verbs in vv. 41-43a are all in the Hebrew tense that the prophets often use to look at the future as "a done deal" (the so-called prophetic perfect). In v. 44 which is still a part of this picture the verbs are in the future. The Hebrew tense has been retained here and in vv. 42-43 but it should be remembered that the standpoint is prophetic and future. §†† tn: For the meaning "multitude" here rather than "tumult" see BDB 242 s.v. יָמוּךְ

 §† tn: Heb "The sea has risen up over Babylon. She has been covered by the multitude of its waves." sn: This is a poetic and figurative reference to the enemies of Babylon, the foe from the north (see 50:3, 9, 51:27-28), which has attacked Babylon in wave after wave. This same figure is used in Isa 17:12. In Isa 8:7-8 the king of Assyria (and his troops) are compared to the Euphrates which rises up and floods over the whole land of Israel and Judah. This same figure, but with application to Babylon, is assumed in Jer 47:2-3. In Jer 46:7-8 the same figure is employed in a taunt of Egypt which had boasted that it would cover the earth like the flooding of the Nile. §†† tn: Heb "Its towns have become a desolation, [it has become] a dry land and a desert, a land which no man passes through them [referring to "her towns"] and no son of man [= human being] passes through them." Here the present translation has followed the suggestion of BHS and a number of the modern commentaries in deleting the second occurrence of the word "land," in which case the words that follow are not a relative clause but independent statements. A number of modern English versions appear to ignore the third feminine plural suffixes which refer back to the cities and refer the statements that follow to the land. §† tn: Heb "And I will punish Bel in Babylon...And the nations will not come streaming to him anymore. Yea, the walls of Babylon have fallen." The verbs in the first two lines are vav consecutive perfects and the verb in the third line is an imperfect all looking at the future. That indicates that the perfect that follows and the perfects that precede are all prophetic perfects. The translation adopted seemed to be the best way to make the transition from the pasts which were adopted in conjunction with the taunting use of יָרִיךְ

<sup>3</sup> What follows is a record of what happened to Jerusalem and Judah because of the LORD's anger when he drove them out of his sight. <sup>5</sup> Zedekiah rebelled against the king of Babylon. <sup>4</sup> King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon came against Jerusalem with his whole army and set up camp outside it.<sup>5†</sup> They built siege ramps all around it. He arrived on the tenth day of the tenth month in the ninth year that Zedekiah ruled over Judah. <sup>5††5</sup> The city remained under siege until Zedekiah's eleventh year. <sup>6</sup> By the ninth day of the fourth month<sup>5†</sup> the famine in the city was so severe the residents<sup>5††</sup> had no food. <sup>7</sup> They broke through the city walls, and all the soldiers tried to escape. They left the city during the night. They went through the gate between the two walls that is near the king's garden. <sup>5†</sup> (The Babylonians had the city surrounded.) Then they headed for the Jordan Valley. <sup>5†8</sup> But the Babylonian army chased after the king. Apart from the four sets of bicola here in 1:7 and again in 2:19, every stanza in chapters 1-4 consists of three sets of bicola. Commentators usually suggest dropping line b or line c. Depending on the meaning of "days" in line a (see note on "when" earlier in the verse) either line makes sense. The four lines would make sense as two bicola if "days of" in line 7a is understood adverbially and 7b as the direct object completing the sentence. Lines 7c-d would begin with a temporal modifier and the rest of the couplet describe conditions that were true at that time. §† tn: Heb "into the hand of." Ancient Near Eastern fortified cities typically featured double and sometimes triple city gates – the bulwark of the defense of the city. Because fortified cities were enclosed with protective walls, the Achilles tendon of every city was the city gates – the weak point in the defense and the perennial point of attack by enemies (e.g., Judg 5:8, 11; 1 Sam 17:52; Isa 29:6; Jer 17:27; 51:54; Ezek 21:20, 27; Mic 1:9, 12; Neh 1:3; 2:3, 13, 17). §†† map: For location see . §† tn: These words do not appear in the Hebrew, but are supplied to make sense of the line. The phrase "shown no respect" is an example of tapeinosis, a figurative expression of understatement: to show no respect to elders = to terribly mistreat elders. <sup>29</sup> tn: The text is difficult. Word by word the MT has "young men hand mill(?) they take up" Perhaps it means "they take [our] young men for mill grinding," or perhaps it means "the young men take up [the labor of] mill grinding." This expression is an example of synecdoche where the mill stands for the labor at the mill and then that labor stands for performing menial physical labor as servants. The surface reading, "young men carry hand mills," does not portray any great adversity for them. The Vulgate translates as an abusive sexual metaphor (see D. R. Hilliers, Lamentations [AB], 99), but this gives no known parallel to the second part of the verse.

The collocation "darkened eyes" is too rare to clarify the nuance. ‡‡ tn: The phrase "through our tears" is added in the translation for the sake of clarification. ‡‡† tn: Heb "jackals." The term "jackals" is a synecdoche of species (= jackals) for general (= wild animals). ‡‡‡ tn: The Hebrew verb "forget" often means "to not pay attention to, ignore," just as the Hebrew "remember" often means "to consider, attend to." sn: The verbs "to forget" and "to remember" are often used figuratively in scripture when God is the subject, particularly in contexts of judgment (God forgets his people) and restoration of blessing (God remembers his people). In this case, the verb "to forget" functions as a hypocatastasis (implied comparison), drawing a comparison between God's judgment and rejection of Jerusalem to a person forgetting that Jerusalem even exists. God's judgment of Jerusalem was

A Vision of God's Glory

1 In the thirtieth year, † on the fifth day of the fourth month, while I was among the exiles†† at the Kebar River, ‡ the heavens opened‡† and I saw a divine vision. ‡‡ (On the fifth day of the month – it was the fifth year of King Jehoiachin's exile – 3 the word of the LORD came to the priest Ezekiel‡‡‡ the son of Buzi, ‡‡‡ at the Kebar River in the land of the Babylonians. § The hand§† of the LORD came on him there).

4 As I watched, I noticed§†† a windstorm§† coming from the north – an enormous cloud, with lightning flashing, §†† such that bright light§† rimmed it and came

† sn: The meaning of the thirtieth year is problematic. Some take it to mean the age of Ezekiel when he prophesied (e.g., Origen). The Aramaic Targum explains the thirtieth year as the thirtieth year dated from the recovery of the book of the Torah in the temple in Jerusalem ( 2 Kgs 22:3-9). The number seems somehow to be equated with the fifth year of Jehoiachin's exile in 1:2, i.e., 593 B.C †† sn: The Assyrians started the tactic of deportation, the large-scale forced displacement of conquered populations, in order to stifle rebellions. The task of uniting groups of deportees, gaining freedom from one's overlords and returning to retake one's own country would be considerably more complicated than living in one's homeland and waiting for an opportune moment to drive out the enemy's soldiers. The Babylonians adopted this practice also, after defeating the Assyrians. The Babylonians deported Judeans on three occasions. The practice of deportation was reversed by the Persian conquerors of Babylon, who gained favor from their subjects for allowing them to return to their homeland and, as polytheists, sought the favor of the gods of the various countries which had come under their control. ‡ sn: The Kebar River is mentioned in Babylonian texts from the city of Nippur in the fifth century B.C

‡† sn: For the concept of the heavens opened in later literature, see 3 Macc 6:18; 2 Bar. 22:1; T. Levi 5:1; Matt 3:16; Acts 7:56; Rev 19:11. ‡‡ tn: Or "saw visions from God." References to divine visions occur also in Ezek 8:3; 40:2 ‡‡† sn: The prophet's name, Ezekiel, means in Hebrew "May God strengthen." ‡‡‡ tn: Or "to Ezekiel son of Buzi the priest." § tn: Heb "Chaldeans." The name of the tribal group ruling Babylon, "Chaldeans" is used as metonymy for the whole empire of Babylon. The Babylonians worked with the Medes to destroy the Assyrian Empire near the end of the 7th century B.C

§† tn: Or "power." sn: Hand in the OT can refer metaphorically to power, authority, or influence. In Ezekiel God's "hand" being on the prophet is regularly associated with communication or a vision from God ( 3:14, 22; 8:1; 37:1; 40:1). §†† tn: The word הַנְּחָה

They gleamed<sup>20</sup> like polished bronze. 8 They had human hands<sup>21</sup> under their wings on their four sides. As for the faces and wings of the four of them, 9 their wings touched each other; they did not turn as they moved, but went straight ahead. 22

10 Their faces had this appearance : Each of the four had the face of a man, with the face of a lion on the right, the face of an ox on the left and also the face of an eagle. 2311 Their wings were spread out above them; each had two wings touching the wings of one happens repeatedly. The phrase occurs elsewhere only in Exod 9:24 in association with a hailstorm. The LXX interprets the phrase as fire flashing like lightning, but it is possibly a self-sustaining blaze of divine origin. The LXX also reverses the order of the descriptors, i.e., "light went around it and fire flashed like lightning within it." §† tn: Or "radiance." The term also occurs in 1:27b. §† tc: Or "was in it"; cf. LXX ἐν τῷ μέσῳ αὐτοῦ en tw mesw autou §§† tn: The LXX translates הַנְּחָה ἤλεκτρον hlektron

§§§ tn: Heb "form, figure, appearance." 18 tn: The Hebrew term is feminine plural yet thirty-three of the forty-five pronominal suffixes and verbal references which refer to the living beings in the chapter are masculine plural. The grammatical vacillation between masculine and feminine plurals suggests the difficulty Ezekiel had in penning these words as he was overcome by the vision of God. In ancient Near Eastern sculpture very similar images of part-human, part-animal creatures serve as throne and sky bearers. For a discussion of ancient Near Eastern parallels, see L. C. Allen, Ezekiel (WBC), 1:26-31. Ezekiel's vision is an example of contextualization, where God accommodates his self-revelation to cultural expectations and norms. 19 sn: They had human form may mean they stood erect. 20 sn: The Hebrew verb translated gleamed occurs only here in the OT. 21 tc: The MT reads "his hand" while many Hebrew MSS

<sup>22</sup> Over the heads of the living beings was something like a platform,<sup>18</sup> glittering awesomely like ice,<sup>19</sup> stretched out over their heads.<sup>23</sup> Under the platform their wings were stretched out, each toward the other. Each of the beings also had two wings covering<sup>20</sup> its body.<sup>24</sup> When they moved, I heard the sound of their wings – it was like the sound of rushing waters, or the voice of the Almighty,<sup>21</sup> or the tumult<sup>22</sup> of an army. † tn: See the note on “straight ahead” in v. 9. †† tn: Or “wind.” ‡ tc: The MT reads “and the form of the creatures” (וְדַמּוֹת הַחַיּוֹת)

וּמַתּוֹךְ הַחַיּוֹת

‡†† tc: The MT reads “and the form of the creatures – their appearance was like burning coals of fire.” The LXX reads “in the midst of the creatures was a sight like burning coals of fire.” The MT may have adjusted “appearance” to “their appearance” to fit their reading of the beginning of the verse (see the tc

‡‡ sn: Burning coals of fire are also a part of David’s poetic description of God’s appearance (see 2 Sam 22:9, 13; Ps 18:8).

‡††† tc: The LXX omits v. 14 and may well be correct. The verse may be a later explanatory gloss of the end of v. 13 which was copied into the main text. See M. Greenberg, Ezekiel (AB), 1:46. tn: Lit., “like the appearance of lightning.” The Hebrew term translated “lightning” occurs only here in the OT. In postbiblical Hebrew the term refers to a lightning flash. ‡‡‡† tc: The MT adds “at the living beings” which is absent from the LXX. § sn: Another vision which includes wheels on thrones occurs in Dan 7:9. Ezek 10 contains a vision similar to this one. §† tn: The Hebrew word may be translated either “earth” or “ground” in this context. §†† tc: This word is omitted from the LXX. §‡† tn: Heb “Tarshish stone.” The meaning of this term is uncertain. The term has also been translated “topaz” (NEB); “beryl” (KJV, NASB, NRSV); or “chrysolite” (RSV, NIV). §‡††† tn: Or “like a wheel at right angles to another wheel.” Some envision concentric wheels here, while others propose “a globe-like structure in which two wheels stand at right angles” (L. C. Allen, Ezekiel [WBC], 1:33-34). The description given in v. 17 favors the latter idea. §††† tc: The MT reads וַיֵּרָא לָהֶם

§‡††† tn: Or “wind”; the same Hebrew word can be translated as either “wind” or “spirit” depending on the context. §§††† tc: The MT adds the additional phrase “the spirit would go,” which seems unduly redundant here and may be dittographic. §§‡††† tn: Or “wind.” The Hebrew is difficult since the text presents four creatures and then talks about “the spirit” (singular) of “the living being” (singular). According to M. Greenberg (Ezekiel [AB], 1:45) the Targum interprets this as “will.” Greenberg views this as the spirit of the one enthroned above the creatures, but one would not expect the article when the one enthroned has not yet been introduced. §§§††† tc: The LXX reads “when it went, they went; when it stood, they stood.” tn: Heb “when they went, they went; when they stood, they stood.” 18 tn: Or “like a dome” (NCV, NRSV, TEV). 19 tn: Or “like crystal” (NRSV, NLT). 20 tc: Heb “each had two wings covering and each had two wings covering,” a case of dittography. On the analogy of v. 11 and the support of the LXX, which reads the same for v. 11 and this verse, one should perhaps read “each had two wings touching another being and each had two wings covering.” 21 tn: Heb “Shaddai” (probably meaning “one of the mountain”), a title that depicts God as the sovereign ruler of the world who dispenses justice. The Old Greek translation omitted the phrase “voice of the Almighty.” 22 tn: The only other occurrence of the Hebrew word translated “tumult” is in Jer 11:16. It indicates a noise like that of the turmoil of a military camp or the sound of an army on the march. 23 tc: The MT continues “when they stood still they lowered their wings,” an apparent dittography from the end of v. 24. The LXX commits haplography by homoioteleuton, leaving out vv. 25b and 26a by skipping from ראשם ר 24 tn: See Ezek 1:4. 25 tc: The LXX lacks this phrase. Its absence from the LXX may be explained as a case of haplography resulting from homoioteleuton, skipping from מְרָאָה מְרָאָה

ing brilliant light; it looked like the glory of the LORD . When I saw† it, I threw myself face down, and I heard a voice speaking.

2 He said to me, "Son of man, †† stand on your feet and I will speak with you." 2 As he spoke to me, ‡ a wind†† came into me and stood me on my feet, and I heard the one speaking to me.

3 He said to me, "Son of man, I am sending you to the house‡‡ of Israel, to rebellious nations‡‡‡ who have rebelled against me; both they and their fathers have revolted‡‡‡ against me to this very day. 4 The people§ to whom I am sending you are obstinate and hard-hearted, §† and you must say to them, 'This is what the sovereign LORD says: §†† And as for them, §† whether they listen§†† or not – for they are a rebellious§† house§† – they will know that a prophet has been among them.

† tn: The vision closes with the repetition of the verb "I saw" from the beginning of the vision in 1:4. †† sn: The phrase son of man occurs ninety-three times in the book of Ezekiel. It simply means "human one," and distinguishes the prophet from the non-human beings that are present in the world of his vision. ‡ tc: The phrase "as he spoke to me" is absent from the LXX. ‡† tn: Or "spirit." NIV has "the Spirit," but the absence of the article in the Hebrew text makes this unlikely. Elsewhere in Ezekiel the Lord's Spirit is referred to as "the Spirit of the Lord" ( 11:5; 37:1), "the Spirit of God" ( 11:24), or "my (that is, the Lord's) Spirit" ( 36:27; 37:14; 39:29). Some identify the "spirit" of 2:2 as the spirit that energized the living beings, however, that "spirit" is called "the spirit" ( 1:12, 20) or "the spirit of the living beings" ( 1:20-21; 10:17). Still others see the term as referring to an impersonal "spirit" of strength or courage, that is, the term may also be understood as a disposition or attitude. The Hebrew word often refers to a wind in Ezekiel ( 1:4; 5:10, 12; 12:4; 13:11, 13; 17:10, 21; 19:12; 27:26; 37:9). In 37:5-10 a "breath" originates in the "four winds" and is associated with the Lord's life-giving breath (see v. 14). This breath enters into the dry bones and gives them life. In a similar fashion the breath of 2:2 (see also 3:24) energizes paralyzed Ezekiel. Breath and wind are related. On the one hand it is a more normal picture to think of breath rather than wind entering someone, but since wind represents an external force it seems more likely for wind rather than breath to stand someone up (unless we should understand it as a disposition). It may be that one should envision the breath of the speaker moving like a wind to revive Ezekiel, helping him to regain his breath and invigorating him to stand. A wind also transports the prophet from one place to another ( 3:12, 14; 8:3; 11:1, 24; 43:5). ‡† tc: The Hebrew reads "sons of," while the LXX reads "house," implying the more common phrase in Ezekiel. Either could be abbreviated with the first letter ☿

‡†† tc: Heb "to the rebellious nations." The phrase "to the rebellious nations" is omitted in the LXX. Elsewhere in Ezekiel the singular word "nation" is used for Israel ( 36:13-15; 37:22). Here "nations" may have the meaning of "tribes" or refer to the two nations of Israel and Judah. ‡†† tc: This word is omitted from the LXX. tn: The Hebrew term used here is the strongest word available for expressing a covenant violation. The word is used in the diplomatic arena to express a treaty violation ( 2 Kgs 1:1; 3:5, 7). § tn: Heb "sons." The word choice may reflect treaty idiom, where the relationship between an overlord and his subjects can be described as that of father and son. §† tc: Heb "stern of face and hard of heart." The phrases "stern of face" and "hard of heart" are lacking in the LXX. §†† tn: The phrase "thus says [the LORD

Ezekiel Before the Exiles

<sup>12</sup> Then a wind lifted me up‡‡ and I heard a great rumbling sound behind me as the glory of the LORD rose from its place,<sup>‡‡‡13</sup> and the sound of the living beings' wings brushing against each other, and the sound of the wheels alongside them, a great rumbling sound. <sup>14</sup> A wind lifted me up and carried me away. I went bitterly,‡‡‡ my spirit full of fury, and the hand of the LORD rested powerfully§ on me. <sup>15</sup> I came to the exiles at Tel Abib,§† who lived by the Kebar River. §†† I sat dumbfounded among them there, where they were living, for seven days. §†

<sup>16</sup> At the end of seven days the word of the LORD came to me:<sup>§††17</sup> "Son of man, I have appointed you a watchman§† for the house of Israel. Whenever you hear a word from my mouth, you must give them a warning from me. <sup>18</sup> When I say to the wicked, "You will certainly die,"§‡ and you do not warn him – you do not speak out to warn the wicked to turn from his

† tn: Heb "strong, resolute." †† tn: The Hebrew term translated "diamond" is parallel to "iron" in Jer 17:1. The Hebrew uses two terms which are both translated at times as "flint," but here one is clearly harder than the other. The translation "diamond" attempts to reflect this distinction in English. ‡ tn: Heb "of their faces." †† tn: Heb "to the sons of your people." ‡‡ sn: See note on "wind" in 2:2. ‡‡† tc: This translation accepts the emendation suggested in BHS of כָּרוֹם כָּרוֹן מ כָּרוֹן

‡‡† tn: The traditional interpretation is that Ezekiel embarked on his mission with bitterness and anger, either reflecting God's attitude toward the sinful people or his own feelings about having to carry out such an unpleasant task. L. C. Allen (Ezekiel [WBC], 1:13) takes "bitterly" as a misplaced marginal note and understands the following word, normally translated "anger," in the sense of fervor or passion. He translates, "I was passionately moved" (p. 4). Another option is to take the word translated "bitterly" as a verb meaning "strengthened" (attested in Ugaritic). See G. R. Driver, Canaanite Myths and Legends, 152. § tn: Heb "the hand of the Lord was on me heavily." The "hand of the Lord" is a metaphor for his power or influence; the modifier conveys intensity. sn: In Ezekiel God's "hand" being on the prophet is regularly associated with communication or a vision from God (1:3; 3:14, 22; 8:1; 37:1; 40:1). §† sn: The name "Tel Abib" is a transliteration of an Akkadian term meaning "mound of the flood," i.e., an ancient mound. It is not to be confused with the modern city of Tel Aviv in Israel. §†† tn: Or "canal." §‡ sn: A similar response to a divine encounter is found in Acts 9:8-9. §†† sn: This phrase occurs about fifty times in the book of Ezekiel. §† tn: The literal role of a watchman is described in 2 Sam 18:24; 2 Kgs 9:17. §‡ sn: Even though the infinitive absolute is used to emphasize the warning, the wicked deed and wicked lifestyle so that he may live – that wicked person will die for his iniquity,§§† but I will hold you accountable for his death. <sup>§§†19</sup> But as for you, if you warn the wicked and he does not turn from his wicked deed and from his wicked lifestyle, he will die for his iniquity but you will have saved your own life. §§§

<sup>20</sup> "When a righteous person turns from his righteousness and commits iniquity, and I set an obstacle<sup>18</sup> before him, he will die. If you have not warned him, he will die for his sin. The righteous deeds he performed will not be considered, but I will hold you accountable for his death. <sup>21</sup> However, if you warn the righteous person not to sin, and he<sup>19</sup> does not sin, he will certainly live because he was warned, and you will have saved your own life."

Isolated and Silenced

<sup>22</sup> The hand<sup>20</sup> of the LORD rested on me there, and he said to me, "Get up, go out to the valley, <sup>21</sup> and I will speak with you there." <sup>23</sup> So I got up and went out to the valley, and the glory of the LORD was standing there, just like the glory I had seen by the Kebar River, <sup>22</sup> and I threw myself face down.

<sup>24</sup> Then a wind<sup>23</sup> came into me and stood me on my feet. The LORD <sup>24</sup> spoke to me and said, "Go shut yourself in your house. <sup>25</sup> As for you, son of man, they will put ropes on you and tie you up with them, so you cannot go out among them. <sup>26</sup> I will make your tongue stick to the roof of your mouth so that you will be silent and unable to reprove<sup>25</sup> them, for they are a rebellious house. <sup>27</sup> But when I speak with you, I will loosen your tongue<sup>26</sup> and you must say to them, 'This is what the sovereign LORD says.' Those who listen will listen, but the indifferent will refuse,<sup>27</sup> for they are a rebellious house."

warning is still implicitly conditional, as the following context makes clear. §§† tn: Or "in his punishment." The phrase "in/for [a person's] iniquity" occurs fourteen times in Ezekiel: here and v. 19; 4:17; 7:13, 16; 18: 17, 18, 19, 20; 24:23; 33:6, 8, 9; 39:23. The Hebrew word for "iniquity" may also mean the "punishment for iniquity." §§‡ tn: Heb "his blood I will seek from your hand." The expression "seek blood from the hand" is equivalent to requiring the death penalty (2 Sam 4:11-12). §§§ tn: Verses 17-19 are repeated in Ezek 33:7-9. 18 tn: Or "stumbling block." The Hebrew term refers to an obstacle in the road in Lev 19:14. 19 tn: Heb "the righteous man." 20 tn: Or "power." sn: Hand in the OT can refer metaphorically to power, authority, or influence. In Ezekiel God's hand being on the prophet is regularly associated with communication or a vision from God (1:3; 3:14, 22; 8:1; 37:1; 40:1). 21 sn: Ezekiel had another vision at this location, recounted in Ezek 37. 22 tn: Or "canal." 23 tn: See the note on "wind" in 2:2. 24 tn: Heb "he." 25 tn: Heb "you will not be to them a reprover." In Isa 29:21 and Amos 5:10 "a reprover" issued rebuke at the city gate. 26 tn: Heb "open your mouth." 27 tn: Heb "the listener will listen, the refuser will refuse." Because the word for listening can also mean obeying, the nuance may be that the obedient will listen, or that the one who listens will obey. Also, although the verbs are not jussive as pointed in the MT, some translate them with a volitive sense: "the one who listens – let that one listen, the one who refuses – let that one refuse."

4 "And you, son of man, take a brick† and set it in front of you. Inscribe†† a city on it – Jerusalem. <sup>2</sup> Lay siege to it! Build siege works against it. Post soldiers outside it‡‡ and station battering rams around it. <sup>3</sup> Then for your part take an iron frying pan‡‡ and set it up as an iron wall between you and the city. Set your face toward it. It is to be under siege; you are to besiege it. This is a sign‡‡‡ for the house of Israel.

Num 14:33-34 is an example of the reverse, where the days were converted into years, the number of days spying out the land becoming the number of years of the wilderness wanderings. §† tc: The LXX reads "190 days." sn: The significance of the number 390 is not clear. The best explanation is that "days" are used figuratively for years and the number refers to the years of the sinfulness of Israel during the period of the First Temple. Some understand the number to refer to the length of the division of the northern and southern kingdoms down to the fall of Jerusalem (931-586 B.C. §††† tn: Or "When you have carried the iniquity of the house of Israel," and continuing on to the next verse. §‡ sn: The number 40 may refer in general to the period of Judah's exile using the number of years Israel was punished in the wilderness. † sn: One might conclude that the subject of the plural verbs is the nations/countries, but the context (vv. 5-6a) indicates that the people of Jerusalem are in view. Humbert, "Die Herausforderungsformel 'h!nn#n' ?!K&gt;,'" ZAW 45 (1933): 101-8. The Hebrew text switches to a second feminine singular form here, indicating that personified Jerusalem is addressed (see vv. 5-6a). The address to Jerusalem continues through v. 15. In vv. 16-17 the second masculine plural is used, as the people are addressed. ‡‡† tn: The Hebrew text uses wordplay here to bring out the appropriate nature of God's judgment. "Execute" translates the same Hebrew verb translated "carried out" (literally meaning "do") in v. 7, while "judgment" in v. 8 and "regulations" in v. 7 translate the same Hebrew noun (meaning "regulations" or in some cases "judgments" executed on those who break laws). The point seems to be this: God would "carry out judgments" against those who refused to "carry out" his "laws." ‡‡‡ tn: Heb "in the sight of the nations." sn: This is one of the ironies of the passage. The Lord set Israel among the nations for honor and praise as they would be holy and obey God's law as told in Ezek 5:5 and Deut 26:16-19. The practice of these laws and statutes would make the peoples consider Israel wise. (See Deut 4:5-8, where the words for laws and statutes are the same as those used here). Since Israel did not obey, they are made a different kind of object lesson to the nations, not by their obedience but in their punishment as told in Ezek 5:8 and Deut 29:24-29. Yet Deut 30 goes on to say that when they remember the cursings and blessings of the covenant and repent, God will restore them from the nations to which they have been scattered. § tn: Or "abominable idols." §† tn: In context "you" refers to the city of Jerusalem. As in v. 10, the city of Jerusalem is figuratively addressed here. §‡ sn: Judgment by plague, famine, and sword occurs in Jer 21:9; 27:13; Ezek 6:11, 12; 7:15. §§† tn: Or "calm myself." §§‡ tn: The Hebrew noun translated "jealousy" is used in the human realm to describe suspicion of adultery (Num 5:14ff.; Prov 6:34). Since Israel's relationship with God was often compared to a marriage this term is appropriate here. The term occurs elsewhere in Ezekiel in 8:3, 5; 16:38, 42; 23:25. §§§ tc: This reading is supported by the versions and by the Dead Sea Scrolls (11QEzek). Most Masoretic Hebrew MSS

<sup>18</sup> tn: The Hebrew word occurs only here in the OT. A related verb means "revile, taunt" (see Ps 44:16). <sup>19</sup> tn: Heb "discipline and devastation." These words are omitted in the Old Greek. The first term pictures Jerusalem as a recipient or example of divine discipline; the second depicts her as a desolate ruin (see Ezek 6:14). <sup>20</sup> tn: Heb "in anger and in fury and in rebukes of fury." The heaping up of synonyms emphasizes the degree of God's anger. <sup>21</sup> tn: The Hebrew word carries the basic idea of "bad, displeasing, injurious," but when used of weapons has the nuance "deadly" (see Ps 144:10). <sup>22</sup> tn: Heb "which are/were to destroy." <sup>23</sup> tn: The language of this verse may have been influenced by Deut 32:23. <sup>24</sup> tn: Or "which were to destroy those whom I will send to destroy you" (cf. NASB). <sup>25</sup> tn: Heb, "break the staff of bread." The bread supply is compared to a staff that one uses for support. See 4:16, as well as the covenant curse in Lev 26:26. <sup>26</sup> tn: Heb "will bereave you." <sup>27</sup> tn: Heb "will pass through you." This threat recalls the warning of Lev 26:22, 25 and Deut 32:24-25. <sup>28</sup> tn: Heb

"set your face against." The expression occurs at the beginning of Ezekiel's prophetic oracles in Ezek 13:17; 20:46; 21:2; 25:2; 28:21; 29:2; 35:2; 38:2. sn: Based on comparison to a similar expression in Ugaritic, the phrase may imply that Ezekiel was to actually go to these locations to deliver his message. † tn: The phrase "mountains of Israel" occurs only in the book of Ezekiel ( 6:2, 3; 19:9; 33:28; 34:13, 14; 35:12; 36:1, 4, 8; 37:22; 38:8; 39:2, 4, 17). The expression refers to the whole land of Israel. sn: The mountainous terrain of Israel would contrast with the exiles' habitat in the river valley of Babylonia. †† tn: The introductory formula "Hear the word of the sovereign LORD

The construction also indicates that the action is soon to come; the Lord is "about to bring a sword against" them. †† tn: The Hebrew term refers to elevated platforms where pagan sacrifices were performed. †† tn: Thirty-nine of the forty-eight biblical occurrences of this Hebrew word are found in the book of Ezekiel. sn: This verse is probably based on Lev 26:30 in which God forecasts that he will destroy their high places, cut off their incense altars, and set their corpses by the corpses of their idols. ††† tc: This first sentence, which explains the meaning of the last sentence of the previous verse, does not appear in the LXX and may be an instance of a marginal explanatory note making its way into the text. ††† tn: The Hebrew verb translated "wiped out" is used to describe the judgment of the Flood ( Gen 6:7; 7:4, 23). § sn: The phrase you will know that I am the LORD

The image of God being "broken" is startling, but perfectly natural within the metaphorical framework of God as offended husband. The idiom must refer to the intense grief that Israel's unfaithfulness

Greenberg, Ezekiel (AB), 1:134. §†† tn: Heb adds "in their faces." §† tn: Heb "not in vain did I speak to do to them this catastrophe." The wording of the last half of v. 10 parallels God's declaration after the sin of the golden calf ( Exod 32:14). §† sn: By the sword and by famine and by pestilence. † tn: Or “has come.” †† tn: Or “has come.” ‡ tc: With different vowels the verb rendered “it has awakened” would be the noun “the end,” as in “the end is upon you.” The verb would represent a phonetic word-play. The noun by virtue of repetition would continue to reinforce the idea of the end. Whether verb or noun, this is the only instance to occur with this preposition. †† tc: For this entire verse, the LXX has only “the end is come.” tn: In each of the three cases of the verb translated with forms of “to come,” the form may either be a participle (“comes/is coming”) or a perfect (“has come”). Either form would indicate that the end is soon to arrive. This last form appears also to be feminine, although “end” is masculine. This shift may be looking ahead to the next verse, whose first noun (“Doom”) is feminine. ‡† sn: The day refers to the day of the Lord, a concept which, beginning in Amos 5:18-20, became a common theme in the OT prophetic books. It refers to a time when the Lord intervenes in human affairs as warrior and judge. ‡†† tc: The LXX reads “neither tumult nor birth pains.” The LXX varies at many points from the MT in this chapter. The context suggests that one or both of these would be present on a day of judgment, thus favoring the MT. Perhaps more significant is the absence of “the mountains” in the LXX.

tn: The expression “to pour out rage” also occurs in Ezek 9:8; 14:19; 20:8, 13, 21; 22:31; 30:15; 36:18. ‡ tn: The meaning of the Hebrew term is primarily emotional: “to pity,” which in context implies an action, as in being moved by pity in order to spare them from the horror of their punishment. ‡† tn: Heb “According to your behavior I will place on you.” ‡†† tn: The MT lacks “you.” It has been added for clarification. ‡† tn: Heb “the violence.” ‡†† tc: The LXX reads “he will crush the wicked rod without confusion or haste.” tn: The verb has been supplied for the Hebrew text to clarify the sense. ‡† tn: The Hebrew word occurs only here in the OT. ‡†† tn: Heb “wrath.” Context clarifies that God’s wrath is in view. ‡†† tc: The translation follows the LXX for the first line of the verse, although the LXX has lost the second line due to homoioteleuton (similar endings of the clauses). The MT reads “The seller will not return to the sale.” This Hebrew reading has been construed as a reference to land redemption, the temporary sale of the use of proper-

Whoever is in the open field will die by the sword, and famine and pestilence will consume everyone in the city. 16 Their survivors will escape to the mountains and become like doves of the valleys; all of them will moan – each one for his iniquity. 17 All of their hands will hang limp; their knees will be wet with urine. 1918 They will wear sackcloth, terror will cover them; shame will be on all their faces, and all of their heads will be shaved bald. 2019 They will discard their silver in the streets, and their gold will be treated like filth. 21 Their silver and gold will not be able to deliver them on the day of the LORD’s fury. 22 They will not satisfy their hunger or fill their stomachs because their wealth‡ was the obstacle leading to their iniquity. 2420 They rendered the beauty of his ornaments into pride, 25 and with it they made their abominable images – their detestable idols. Therefore I will render it filthy to them. 21 I will give it to foreigners as loot, to the world’s wicked ones as plunder, and they will desecrate it. 22 I will turn my face away from them and they will desecrate my treasured place. 26 Vandals will enter it and desecrate it. 2723 (Make the chain, 28 because the land is full of murder‡9

ty, with property rights returned to the seller in the year of Jubilee. But the context has no other indicator that land redemption is in view. If correct, the LXX evidence suggests that one of the cases of “the customer” has been replaced by “the seller” in the MT, perhaps due to hoimoioarcton (similar beginnings of the words). ‡†† tn: The Hebrew word refers to the din or noise made by a crowd, and by extension may refer to the crowd itself. ‡†† tn: Or “in their punishment.” The phrase “in/for [a person’s] iniquity” occurs fourteen times in Ezekiel: here and in v. 16; 3:18, 19; 4:17; 18:17, 18, 19, 20; 24:23; 33:6, 8, 9; 39:23. The Hebrew word for “iniquity” may also mean the “punishment for iniquity.” 18 tn: The Hebrew word refers to the din or noise made by a crowd, and by extension may refer to the crowd itself. 19 tn: Heb “their knees will run with water.” The expression probably refers to urination caused by fright, which is how the LXX renders the phrase. More colloquial English would simply be “they will wet their pants,” but as D. I. Block (Ezekiel [NICOT], 1:261, n. 98) notes, the men likely wore skirts which were short enough to expose urine on the knees. 20 tn: Heb “baldness will be on their heads.” 21 tn: The Hebrew term can refer to menstrual impurity. The term also occurs at the end of v. 20. 22 sn: Compare Zeph 1:18. 23 tn: Heb “it.” Apparently the subject is the silver and gold mentioned earlier (see L. C. Allen, Ezekiel [WBC], 1:102). 24 tn: The “stumbling block of their iniquity” is a unique phrase of the prophet Ezekiel (Ezek 14:3, 4, 7; 18:30; 44:12). 25 tc: The MT reads “he set up the beauty of his ornament as pride.” The verb may be repointed as plural without changing the consonantal text. The Syriac reads “their ornaments” (plural), implying ܡܝܬܘܢ ܝܘܝܬܘܢ treasured place probably refers to the temple (however, cf. NLT "my treasured land").<sup>27</sup> sn: Since the pronouns "it" are both feminine, they do not refer to the masculine "my treasured place"; instead they probably refer to Jerusalem or the land, both of which are feminine in Hebrew. <sup>28</sup> tc: The Hebrew word "the chain" occurs only here in the OT. The reading of the LXX ("and they will make carnage") seems to imply a Hebrew text of הַבְּתוּקָה

‡‡ tn: Or "power." sn: Hand in the OT can refer metaphorically to power, authority, or influence. In Ezekiel God's hand being on the prophet is regularly associated with communication or a vision from God (3:14, 22; 8:1; 37:1; 40:1). ‡‡† tn: Heb "fell upon me there," that is, God's influence came over him. ‡‡‡ tn: The word הָנָה

§ tc: The MT reads "fire" rather than "man," the reading of the LXX. The nouns are very similar in Hebrew. §† tc: The MT reads "what appeared to be his waist and downwards was fire." The LXX omits "what appeared to be," reading "from his waist to below was fire." Suggesting that "like what appeared to be" belongs before "fire," D. I. Block (Ezekiel [NICOT], 1:277) points out the resulting poetic symmetry of form with the next line as followed in the translation here. §†† tc: The LXX omits "like a brightness." §‡ tn: See Ezek 1:4. §†† tn: The Hebrew term is normally used as an architectural term in describing the pattern of the tabernacle or temple or a representation of it (see Exod 25:8; 1 Chr 28:11). §† tn: Or "spirit." See note on "wind" in 2:2.

The word is often used to describe the figures of foreign gods. <sup>20</sup> sn: These engravings were prohibited in the Mosaic law (Deut 4:16-18). <sup>21</sup> sn: Note the contrast between these seventy men who represented Israel and the seventy elders who ate the covenant meal before God, inaugurating the covenant relationship (Exod 24:1, 9). <sup>22</sup> tn: The Hebrew word occurs only here in the OT. <sup>23</sup> tn: Heb "the room of his images." The adjective "idolatrous" has been supplied in the translation for clarity. sn: This type of image is explicitly prohibited in the Mosaic law (Lev 26:1). <sup>24</sup> tn: Given the context this could be understood as a shock, e.g., idiomatically "Good grief! For they have filled the land with violence and provoked me to anger still further. Look, they are putting the branch to their nose! ††18 Therefore I will act with fury! My eye will not pity them nor will I spare††† them. When they have shouted in my ears, I will not listen to them."

9 Then he shouted in my ears, "Approach, ††† you who are to visit destruction on the city, each with his destructive weapon in his hand!" 2 Next, I noticed§ six men§† coming from the direction of the upper gate§†† which faces north, each with his war club in his hand. Among them was a man dressed in linen with a writing kit§§ at his side. They came and stood beside the bronze altar.

3 Then the glory of the God of Israel went up from the cherub where it had rested to the threshold of the temple. ††† He called to the man dressed in linen who had the writing kit at his side. 4 The LORD said to him, "Go through the city of Jerusalem§† and put a mark§† on the foreheads of the people who moan and groan over all the abominations practiced in it."

A possible parallel is the Syrian relief of a king holding a flower to his nose as he worships the stars (ANEP 281). See L. C. Allen, Ezekiel (WBC), 1:145-46. The LXX glosses the expression as "Behold, they are like mockers." †††† tn: The meaning of the Hebrew term is primarily emotional: "to pity," which in context implies an action, as in being moved by pity in order to spare them from the horror of their punishment. †††† tc: Heb "they approached." 7 He said to them, "Defile the temple and fill the courtyards with corpses. Go!" So they went out and struck people down throughout the city. 8 While they were striking them down, I was left alone, and I threw myself face down and cried out, "Ah, sovereign LORD! Will you destroy the entire remnant of Israel when you pour out your fury on Jerusalem?"

9 He said to me, "The sin of the house of Israel and Judah is extremely great; the land is full of murder, and the city is full of corruption, †††† for they say, 'The LORD has abandoned the land, and the LORD does not see!' 1810 But as for me, my eye will not pity them nor will I spare<sup>19</sup> them; I hereby repay them for what they have done." 20

11 Next I noticed the man dressed in linen with the writing kit at his side bringing back word: "I have done just as you commanded me."

10 As I watched, I saw<sup>21</sup> on the platform<sup>22</sup> above the top of the cherubim something like a sapphire, resembling the shape of a throne, appearing above them. 2 The LORD <sup>23</sup> said to the man dressed in linen, "Go between the wheelwork<sup>24</sup> underneath the cherubim. 25 Fill your hands with burning coals from among the cherubim and scatter them over the city." He went as I watched.

3 (The cherubim were standing on the south side<sup>26</sup> of the temple when the man went in, and a cloud filled the inner court.) 4 Then the glory of the LORD arose from the cherub and moved to the threshold of the temple. The temple was filled with the cloud while the court was filled with the brightness of the LORD's glory. 5 The sound of the wings of the cherubim could be heard from the outer court, like the sound of the sovereign God<sup>27</sup> when he speaks.

They stopped at the entrance to the east gate of the LORD's temple as the glory of the God of Israel hovered above them.

<sup>20</sup> These were the living creatures<sup>27</sup> which I saw at the Kebar River underneath the God of Israel; I knew that they were cherubim. <sup>21</sup> Each had four faces; each had four wings and the form of human hands under the wings. <sup>22</sup> As for the form of their faces, they were the faces whose appearance I had seen at the Kebar River. <sup>22</sup> Then the cherubim spread§† their wings with their wheels alongside them while the glory of the God of Israel hovered above them. <sup>23</sup> The glory of the LORD rose up from within the city and stopped§† over the mountain east of it. <sup>24</sup> Then a wind§†† lifted me up and carried me to the exiles in Babylonia, §§† in the vision given to me by the Spirit of God.

Then the vision I had seen went up from me. <sup>25</sup> So I told the exiles everything§§§ the LORD had shown me.

12 The word of the LORD came to me: <sup>2</sup> "Son of man, you are living in the midst of a rebellious house. <sup>18</sup> They have eyes to see, but do not see, and ears to hear, but do not hear, <sup>19</sup> because they are a rebellious house.

<sup>3</sup> "Therefore, son of man, pack up your belongings as if for exile. During the day, while they are watching, pretend to go into exile. Go from where you live to another place. Perhaps they will understand,<sup>20</sup> although they are a rebellious house. <sup>4</sup> Bring out your belongings packed for exile during the day while they are watching. And go out at evening, while they are watching, as if for exile. <sup>5</sup> While they are watching, dig a hole in the wall and carry your belongings out through it. <sup>6</sup> While they are watching, raise your baggage onto your shoulder and carry it out in the dark. <sup>21</sup> You must cover your face so that you cannot see the ground<sup>22</sup> because I have made you an object lesson<sup>23</sup> to the house of Israel."

<sup>7</sup> So I did just as I was commanded. I carried out my belongings packed for exile during the day, and at evening I dug myself a hole through the wall with my hands. I went out in the darkness, carrying my baggage<sup>24</sup> on my shoulder while they watched.

Then they will know that I am the LORD."

<sup>17</sup> The word of the LORD came to me: <sup>18</sup> " Son of man, eat your bread with trembling, § and drink your water with anxious shaking. <sup>19</sup> Then say to the people of the land, 'This is what the sovereign LORD says about the inhabitants of Jerusalem and of the land of Israel: They will eat their bread with anxiety and drink their water in fright, for their land will be stripped bare of all it contains because of the violence of all who live in it. <sup>20</sup> The inhabited towns will be left in ruins and the land will be devastated. Then you will know that I am the LORD."

longer.' But say to them, 'The days are at hand when every vision will be fulfilled. <sup>§†24</sup> For there will no longer be any false visions or flattering omens amidst the house of Israel. <sup>25</sup> For I, the LORD, will speak. Whatever word I speak will be accomplished. It will not be delayed any longer. Indeed in your days, O rebellious house, I will speak the word and accomplish it, declares the sovereign LORD."

<sup>26</sup> The word of the LORD came to me: <sup>27</sup> " Take note, son of man, the house of Israel is saying, 'The vision that he sees is for distant days; he is prophesying about the far future.' <sup>28</sup> Therefore say to them, 'This is what the sovereign LORD says: None of my words will be delayed any longer! The word I speak will come to pass, declares the sovereign LORD."

13 Then the word of the LORD came to me: <sup>2</sup> " Son of man, prophesy against the prophets of Israel who are now prophesying. Say to the prophets who prophesy from their imagination: ‡†† 'Hear the word of the LORD! <sup>3</sup> This is what the sovereign LORD says: Woe to the foolish prophets who follow their own spirit but have seen nothing! <sup>4</sup> Your prophets have become like jackals among the ruins, O Israel. <sup>5</sup> You have not gone up in the breaks in the wall, nor repaired a wall for the house of Israel that it would stand strong in the battle on the day of the LORD. <sup>6</sup> They see delusion and their omens are a lie. § They say, "the LORD declares," though the LORD has not sent them,§†† yet they expect their word to be confirmed. <sup>§†7</sup> Have you not seen a false vision and announced a lying omen when you say, "the LORD declares," although I myself never spoke?

The MT reads "within them." Possibly a scribe copied this form from the following verse "among them," but only "within it" makes sense in this context. †† sn: The prince is a reference to Zedekiah. ‡ tn: The words "his belongings" are not in the Hebrew text but are implied. †† tc: The MT reads "they"; the LXX and Syriac read "he." ‡‡ tn: Or "Babylonians" (NCV, NLT). sn: The Chaldeans were a group of people in the country south of Babylon from which Nebuchadnezzar came. The Chaldean dynasty his father established became the name by which the Babylonians are regularly referred to in the book of Jeremiah, while Jeremiah's contemporary, Ezekiel, uses both terms. ‡‡† sn: He will not see it. This prediction was fulfilled in 2 Kgs 25:7 and Jer 52:11, which recount how Zedekiah was blinded before being deported to Babylon. ‡‡‡ sn: There he will die. <sup>12</sup> The word of the LORD came to me: <sup>13</sup> “Son of man, suppose a country sins against me by being unfaithful, and I stretch out my hand against it, cut off its bread supply, ‡† cause famine to come on it, and kill both people and animals. <sup>14</sup> Even if these three men, Noah, Daniel, ‡‡ and Job, were in it, they would save only their own lives by their righteousness, declares the sovereign LORD.

<sup>15</sup> “Suppose I were to send wild animals through the land and kill its children, leaving it desolate, without travelers due to the wild animals. <sup>16</sup> Even if these three men were in it, as surely as I live, declares the sovereign LORD, they could not save their own sons or daughters; they would save only their own lives, and the land would become desolate.

<sup>17</sup> “Or suppose I were to bring a sword against that land and say, ‘Let a sword pass through the land,’ and I were to kill both people and animals. <sup>18</sup> Even if these three men were in it, as surely as I live, declares the sovereign LORD, they could not save their own sons or daughters – they would save only their own lives.

<sup>19</sup> “Or suppose I were to send a plague into that land, and pour out my rage on it with bloodshed, killing both people and animals. <sup>20</sup> Even if Noah, Daniel, and Job were in it, as surely as I live, declares the sovereign LORD, they could not save their own son or daughter; they would save only their own lives by their righteousness.

<sup>21</sup> “For this is what the sovereign LORD says: How much worse will it be when I send my four terrible judgments – sword, famine, wild animals, and plague – to Jerusalem‡‡‡ to kill both people and animals! <sup>22</sup> Yet some survivors will be left in it, sons and daughters who will be brought out. They will come out to you, and when you see their behavior and their deeds, you will be consoled about the catastrophe I have brought on Jerusalem – for everything I brought on it. <sup>23</sup> They will console you when you see their behavior and their deeds, because you will know that it was not without reason that I have done everything which I have done in it, declares the sovereign LORD.”

<sup>6</sup> “Therefore, this is what the sovereign LORD says: Like the wood of the vine is among the trees of the forest which I have provided as fuel for the fire – so I will provide the residents of Jerusalem§† as fuel. <sup>§††7</sup> I will set§† my face against them – although they have escaped from the fire, §†† the fire will still consume them! See Exod 6:7; Lev 26:12; Jer 7:23; 11:4. ‡† tn: Heb “break its staff of bread.” ‡‡ sn: Traditionally this has been understood as a reference to the biblical Daniel, though he was still quite young when Ezekiel prophesied. One wonders if he had developed a reputation as an intercessor by this point. For this reason some prefer to see a reference to a ruler named Danel, known in Canaanite legend for his justice and wisdom. In this case all three of the individuals named would be non-Israelites, however the Ugaritic Danel is not known to have qualities of faith in the Lord that would place him in the company of the other men. See D. I. Block, Ezekiel (NICOT), 1:447-50.

You offered your sexual favors to every man who passed by so that your beauty §† became his. <sup>16</sup> You took some of your clothing and made for yourself decorated high places; you engaged in prostitution on them. You went to him to become his. <sup>§†17</sup> You also took your beautiful jewelry, made of my gold and my silver I had given to you, and made for yourself male images and engaged in prostitution§§† with them. <sup>18</sup> You took your embroidered clothing and used it to cover them; you offered my olive oil and my incense to them. <sup>19</sup> As for my food that I gave you – the fine flour, olive oil, and honey I fed you – you placed it before them as a soothing aroma. That is exactly what happened, declares the sovereign LORD.

<sup>20</sup> "You took your sons and your daughters whom you bore to me and you sacrificed them§§† as food for the idols to eat. As if your prostitution not enough, <sup>21</sup> you slaughtered my children and sacrificed them to the idols. <sup>§§§22</sup> And with all your abominable practices and prostitution you did not remember the days of your youth when you were naked and bare, kicking around in your blood.

17 The word of the LORD came to me:<sup>2</sup> “Son of man, offer a riddle, †† and tell a parable to the house of Israel.<sup>3</sup> Say to them: ‘This is what the sovereign LORD says: †††

<sup>4</sup> He plucked off its topmost shoot; he brought it to a land of merchants and planted it in a city of traders.

“Will it prosper? Will he not rip out its roots and cause its fruit to rot<sup>18</sup> and wither? All its foliage<sup>19</sup> will wither.

No strong arm or large army will be needed to pull it out by its roots.<sup>20</sup>

<sup>10</sup> Consider! It is planted, but will it prosper? Will it not wither completely when the east wind blows on it?

<sup>16</sup> “As surely as I live, declares the sovereign LORD, surely in the city<sup>28</sup> of the king who crowned him, whose oath he despised and whose covenant he broke – in the middle of Babylon he will die! <sup>17</sup> Pharaoh with his great army and mighty horde will not help<sup>29</sup> him in naked,<sup>17</sup> refrains from wrongdoing,† does not engage in usury or charge interest, carries out my regulations and follows my statutes. He will not die for his father's iniquity;†† he will surely live.<sup>18</sup> As for his father, because he practices extortion, robs his brother, and does what is not good among his people, he will die for his iniquity.

<sup>19</sup> " Yet you say, 'Why should the son not suffer‡ for his father's iniquity? When the son does what is just and right, and observes all my statutes and carries them out, he will surely live.'<sup>20</sup> The person who sins is the one who will die. A son will not suffer‡† for his father's iniquity, and a father will not suffer‡† for his son's iniquity; the righteous person will be judged according to his righteousness, and the wicked person according to his wickedness.‡‡†

<sup>21</sup> " But if the wicked person turns from all the sin he has committed and observes all my statutes and does what is just and right, he will surely live; he will not die.<sup>22</sup> None of the sins he has committed will be held‡‡† against him; because of the righteousness he has done, he will live.<sup>23</sup> Do I actually delight in the death of the wicked, declares the sovereign LORD? Do I not prefer that he turn from his wicked conduct and live?

<sup>24</sup> " But if a righteous man turns away from his righteousness and practices wrongdoing according to all the abominable practices the wicked carry out, will he live? All his righteous acts will not be remembered; because of the unfaithful acts he has done and the sin he has committed, he will die.§

<sup>25</sup> " Yet you say, 'The Lord's conduct§† is unjust!' Hear, O house of Israel: Is my conduct unjust? Is it not your conduct that is unjust?<sup>26</sup> When a righteous person turns back from his righteousness and practices wrongdoing, he will die for it;§†† because of the wrongdoing he has done, he will die.<sup>27</sup> When a wicked person turns from the wickedness he has committed and does what is just and right, he will preserve his life.<sup>28</sup> Because he considered§‡ and turned from all the sins he had done, he will surely live; he will not die.<sup>29</sup> Yet the house of Israel says, 'The Lord's conduct is unjust!' Is my conduct unjust, O house of Israel? Is it not your conduct that is unjust?

<sup>30</sup> " Therefore I will judge each person according to his conduct,§†† O house of Israel, declares the sovereign LORD. Repent§† and turn from all your wickedness; then it will not be an obstacle leading to iniquity.<sup>§‡31</sup> Throw away all your sins you have committed and fashion yourselves a new heart and a new spirit.§§† Why should you die, O house of Israel?<sup>32</sup> For I take no delight in the death of anyone,§§† declares the sovereign LORD. must get rid of the detestable idols you keep before you,<sup>19</sup> and do not defile yourselves with the idols of Egypt; I am the LORD your God."<sup>8</sup> But they rebelled against me, and refused to listen to me; no one got rid of their detestable idols,<sup>20</sup> nor did they abandon the idols of Egypt. Then I decided to pour out<sup>21</sup> my rage on them and fully vent my anger against them in the midst of the land of Egypt. <sup>9</sup> I acted for the sake of my reputation,<sup>22</sup> so that I would not be profaned before the nations among whom they lived,<sup>23</sup> before whom I milk and honey," a figure of speech describing the land's abundant fertility, occurs in v. 15 as well as Exod 3:8, 17; 13:5; 33:3; Lev 20:24; Num 13:27; Deut 6:3; 11:9; 26:9; 27:3; Josh 5:6; Jer 11:5; 32:23 (see al-that they did so. <sup>20</sup> tn: Heb "each one, the detestable things of that it displayed his power and his commitment to his promises.

Zedekiah. 22 tn: Elsewhere in the Bible the turban is worn by priests ( Exod 28:4, 37, 39; 29:6; 39:28, 31; Lev 8:9; 16:4), but here a royal crown is in view. 23 tn: Heb "This not this." 24 tn: Heb
"the high one." 25 tn: Heb "A ruin, a ruin, a ruin I will make it."
The threefold repetition of the noun "ruin" is for emphasis and draws attention to the degree of ruin that would take place. See IBHS 233 §12.5a and GKC 431-32 §133. k. The pronominal suffix (translated "it") on the verb "make" is feminine in Hebrew. The probable antecedent is the "turban/crown" (both nouns are feminine in form) mentioned in verse 26. The point is that the king's royal splendor would be completely devastated as judgment overtook his realm and brought his reign to a violent end. 26 tn: Heb "Also this, he was not, until the coming of the one to whom the judgment belongs and I have given it." The Hebrew text, as it stands, is grammatically difficult. The pronoun "this" is feminine, while the following negated verb ("was not") is masculine. Some emend the verb to a feminine form (see BHS). In this case the statement refers to the destiny of the king's turban/crown (symbolizing his reign). See the previous note. The preposition translated "when" normally means

"until," but here it seems to refer to the period during which the preceding situation is realized, rather than its termination point. See L. C. Allen, Ezekiel (WBC), 2:19, 21. The second part of the statement, though awkward, probably refers to the arrival of the Babylonian king, to whom the Lord had assigned the task of judgment (see 23:24). Or the verse may read "A total ruin I will make, even this. It will not be until the one comes to whom is (the task of) judgment and I have assigned it." † †† tn: Heb "their reproach." ††† tn: Heb "to contain, endure." Since the Hebrew text as it stands makes little, if any, sense, most emend the text to read either "to consume" or "for destruction." For discussion of options see D. I. Block, Ezekiel (NICOT), 1:693. † †† tn: Heb "in the seeing concerning you falsehood, in divining concerning you a lie." This probably refers to the attempts of the Ammonites to ward off judgment through prophetic visions and divination. †† †† tn: Heb "you"; the referent (the sword mentioned in v. 28) has been specified in the translation for clarity. †† †† sn: The second half of the verse appears to state that the sword of judgment would fall upon the wicked, despite their efforts to prevent it. ††† †† sn: Once the Babylonian king's sword (vv. 19-20) has carried out its assigned task, the Lord commands it to halt and announces that Babylon itself will also experience his judgment. See L. C. Allen, Ezekiel (WBC), 2:28. ††† †† tn: In the Hebrew text of vv. 30-32 the second person verbal and pronominal forms are feminine singular. This may indicate that the personified Babylonian sword is being addressed. The Hebrew word for "sword" (see v. 28) is feminine. However, it may refer to the Ammonites. † †† tn: Heb "your blood will be in the middle of the land." †† †† tn: Heb "will you judge." Here the imperfect form of the verb is probably used with a desiderative nuance. Addressed to the prophet, "judge" means to warn of or pronounce God's impending judgment upon the city. See 20:4. ††† †† tn: The phrase "bloody city" is used of Nineveh in Nah 3:1. †† †† tn: Heb "her time"; this refers to the time of impending judgment (see the note on "doom" in v. 4).

††† †† tn: Heb "you have brought near your days." The expression "bring near your days" appears to be an adaptation of the idiom "days draw near," which is used to indicate that an event, such as death, is imminent (see Gen 27:41; 47:29; Deut 31:14; 1 Kgs 2:1; Ezek 12:23). Here "your days" probably refers to the days of the personified city's life, which was about to come to an end through God's judgment. †† †† tn: Heb "and you have come to your years." This appears to mean that she has arrived at the time when her years (i.e., life) would end, though it may mean that her years of punishment will begin. Because "day" and "time" are so closely associated in the immediate context (see 21:25, 29) some prefer to emend the text and read "you have brought near your time." See L. C. Allen, Ezekiel (WBC), 2:31, as well as the translator's note on verse 3. ††† †† tn: The Hebrew verb is a prophetic perfect, emphasizing that the action is as good as done from the speaker's perspective. ††† †† tn: Heb "unclean of name." †††† †† tn: Heb "Look! The princes of Israel, each according to his arm, were in you in order to shed blood." †††† †† tn: Heb "treated lightly, cursed." <sup>18</sup> †† tn: Widows and orphans are often coupled together in the OT ( Deut 14:29; 16:11, 14; 24:19-21; 26:12-13; Jer 7:6; 22:3). They represented all who were poor and vulnerable to economic exploitation. <sup>19</sup> †† tn: Heb "men of slander are in you in order to shed blood." <sup>20</sup> †† tn: Heb "and on the mountains they eat within you." The mountains mentioned here were the site of pagan sacrifices. See 18:6. <sup>21</sup> †† sn: This statement introduces vv. 10-11 and refers in general terms to the sexual sins described there. For the legal background of vv. 10-11, see Lev 18:7-20; 20:10-21; Deut 22:22-23, 30; 27:22. <sup>22</sup> †† tn: Heb "the nakedness of a father one uncovers within you." The ancient versions read the verb as plural ("they uncover"). If the singular is retained, it must be taken as indefinite and representative of the entire group. The idiomatic expression "uncover the nakedness" refers here to sexual intercourse (cf. Lev 18:6). To uncover a father's nakedness could include sexual relations with one's own mother ( Lev 18:7), but more likely it refers to having intercourse with another wife of one's father, such as a stepmother ( Lev 18:8; cf. Gen 35:22; 49:4). <sup>23</sup> †† tn: Heb "(one who is) unclean due to the impurity they humble within you." The use of the verb "to humble" suggests that these men forced themselves upon women during menstruation. Having sexual relations with a woman during her period was forbidden by the Law ( Lev 18:19; 20:18). <sup>24</sup> †† tn: Heb "a man." <sup>25</sup> †† tn: The verb is the same one used in verse 10b and suggests forcible sexual violation of the woman. <sup>26</sup> †† sn: Sexual relations with one's half-sister may be primarily in view here. See Lev 18:9; 20:17.

<sup>11</sup>“ Her sister Oholibah watched this,§† but she became more corrupt in her lust than her sister had been, and her acts of prostitution were more numerous than those of her sister. <sup>12</sup> She lusted after the Assyrians – governors and officials, warriors in full armor, horsemen riding on horses, all of them desirable young men. <sup>13</sup> I saw that she was defiled; both of them followed the same path. <sup>14</sup> But she increased her prostitution. She saw men carved on the wall, images of the Chaldeans carved in bright red,<sup>§††15</sup> wearing belts on their waists and flowing turbans on their heads, all of them looking like officers, the image of Babylonians§† whose native land is Chaldea. <sup>16</sup> When she saw them,§†† she lusted after them and sent messengers to them in Chaldea. <sup>§††17</sup> The Babylonians crawled into bed with her.§†† They defiled her with their lust; after she was defiled by them, she§§† became disgusted with them. <sup>18</sup> When she lustfully exposed her nakedness,§§† <sup>†§§§</sup> was disgusted with her, just as I<sup>†8</sup> had been disgusted with her sister. <sup>19</sup> Yet she increased her prostitution, remembering the days of her

† sn: In this allegory the Lord is depicted as being the husband of two wives. The OT law prohibited a man from marrying sisters ( Lev 18:18), but the practice is attested in the OT (cf. Jacob). The metaphor is utilized here for illustrative purposes and does not mean that the Lord condoned such a practice or bigamy in general.

†† tn: Heb “while she was under me.” The expression indicates that Oholah is viewed as the Lord’s wife. See Num 5:19-20, 29. sn: Played the harlot refers to alliances with pagan nations in this context. In Ezek 16 harlotry described the sin of idolatry. ‡ tn: Heb “Assyria.” ‡† tn: The term apparently refers to Assyrian military officers; it is better construed with the description that follows. See D. I. Block, Ezekiel (NICOT), 1:738. ‡‡ tn: Heb “lusted after.” ‡†† tn: Heb “and poured out her harlotry on her.” ‡‡‡ tn: Heb “I gave her into the hand of her lovers, into the hand of the sons of Assyria.” § tn: Heb “name.” §† tn: The word “this” is not in the original text. §†† tn: The only other occurrence of the Hebrew term is in Jer 22:14. §‡ tn: Heb “the sons of Babel.” §†† tn: Heb “at the appearance of her eyes.” §† sn: The Chaldeans were prominent tribal groups of Babylonia. The imagery is reminiscent of events in the reigns of Hezekiah ( 2 Kgs 20:12-15) and Jehoiakim ( 2 Kgs 23:34-24:1). §‡ tn: Heb “The sons of Babel came to her on a bed of love.” §§† tn: Heb “her soul.” §§‡ tn: Heb “She exposed her harlotry and she exposed her nakedness.” §§§ tn: Heb “my soul.” 18 tn: Heb “my soul.”

youth when she engaged in prostitution in the land of Egypt. <sup>20</sup> She lusted after their genitals – as large as those of donkeys, <sup>19</sup> and their seminal emission was as strong as that of stallions. <sup>21</sup> This is how you assessed<sup>20</sup> the obscene conduct of your youth, when the Egyptians fondled<sup>21</sup> your nipples and squeezed<sup>22</sup> your young breasts.

19 tn: Heb “She lusted after their concubines (?) whose flesh was the flesh of donkeys.” The phrase “their concubines” is extremely problematic here. The pronoun is masculine plural, suggesting that the Egyptian men are in view, but how concubines would fit into the picture envisioned here is not clear. Some suggest that Ezekiel uses the term in an idiomatic sense of “paramour,” but this still fails to explain how the pronoun relates to the noun. It is more likely that the term refers here to the Egyptians’ genitals. The relative pronoun that follows introduces a more specific description of their genitals. 20 tn: Or “you took note of.” The Hebrew verb † took note of.

21 tn: Heb “when (they) did,” but the verb makes no sense here and is better emended to “when (they) fondled,” a verb used in vv. 3 and 8. See L. C. Allen, Ezekiel (WBC), 2:43. 22 tn: Heb “for the sake of,” but the expression is awkward and is better emended to read “to squeeze.” See L. C. Allen, Ezekiel (WBC), 2:43. 23 tn: The word הָנָה.

24 sn: Pekod was the name of an Aramean tribe (known as Puqudu in Mesopotamian texts) that lived in the region of the Tigris River. 25 sn: Shoa was the name of a nomadic people (the Sutu) that lived in Mesopotamia. 26 sn: Koa was the name of another Mesopotamian people group (the Qutu). 27 tn: Heb “come against.” 28 tn: This is the only occurrence of this term in the OT. The precise meaning is uncertain. 29 tn: Heb “an assembly of peoples.” 30 tn: Heb “I will place before them judgment.” 31 tn: Heb “give.” 32 tn: Heb “they will remove.” sn: This method of punishment is attested among ancient Egyptian and Hittite civilizations. have practiced in the land of Egypt. † You will not seek their help†† or remember Egypt anymore.

<sup>28</sup> " For this is what the sovereign LORD says: Look here,‡ I am about to deliver you over to†† those whom you hate, to those with whom you were disgusted. <sup>29</sup> They will treat you with hatred, take away all you have labored for,‡‡ and leave you naked and bare. Your nakedness will be exposed, just as when you engaged in prostitution and obscene conduct. ‡‡‡<sup>30</sup> I will do these things to you‡‡‡ because you engaged in prostitution with the nations, polluting yourself with their idols. <sup>31</sup> You have followed the ways of your sister, so I will place her cup of judgment§ in your hand. <sup>32</sup> " This is what the sovereign LORD says : "You will drink your sister's deep and wide cup; §† you will be scorned and derided, for it holds a great deal. <sup>33</sup> You will be overcome by§†† drunkenness and sorrow. The cup of your sister Samaria is a cup of horror and desolation. <sup>34</sup> You will drain it dry,§† gnaw its pieces,§†† and tear out your breasts, §† for I have spoken, declares the sovereign LORD.

‡‡ tn: The Hebrew term means "labor," but by extension it can also refer to that for which one works. ‡‡‡ tn: Heb "The nakedness of your prostitution will be exposed, and your obscene conduct and your harlotry." ‡‡‡† tn: The infinitive absolute continues the sequence begun in v. 28: "Look here, I am about to deliver you." See Joüon 2:430 §123.w. § tn: Heb "her cup." A cup of intoxicating strong drink is used, here and elsewhere, as a metaphor for judgment because both leave one confused and reeling. (See Jer 25:15, 17, 28; Hab 2:16.) The cup of wrath is a theme also found in the NT ( Mark 14:36). §† sn: The image of a deep and wide cup suggests the degree of punishment; it will be extensive and leave the victim helpless. §†† tn: Heb "filled with." §‡† tn: Heb "You will drink it and drain (it)." §‡†† tn: D. I. Block compares this to the idiom of "licking the plate" ( Ezekiel [NICOT], 1:754, n. 137). The text is difficult as the word translated "gnaw" is rare. The noun is used of the shattered pieces of pottery and so could envision a broken cup. But the Piel verb form is used in only one other place ( Num 24:8), where it is a denominative from the noun "bone" and seems to mean to "break (bones)." Why it would be collocated with "sherds" is not clear. For this reason some emend the phrase to read "consume its dregs" (see L. C. Allen, Ezekiel [WBC], 2:44) or emend the verb to read "swallow," as if the intoxicated Oholibah breaks the cup and then eats the very sherds in an effort to get every last drop of the beverage that dampens them. §† sn: The severe action is more extreme than beating the breasts in anguish ( Isa 32:12; Nah 2:7). It is also ironic for these are the very breasts she so blatantly offered to her lovers (vv. 3, 21). §‡† tn: Heb "and you cast me behind your back." The expression pictures her rejection of the Lord (see 1 Kgs 14:9). §§† tn: The word "punishment" is not in the Hebrew text but is demanded by the context. §§‡† tn: Heb "will you judge." Here the imperfect form of the verb is probably used with a desider-they have committed adultery and blood is on their hands. They have committed adultery with their idols, and their sons, whom they bore to me,§§§ they have passed through the fire as food to their idols. <sup>1838</sup> Moreover, they have done this to me: In the very same day<sup>19</sup> they desecrated my sanctuary and profaned my Sabbaths. <sup>39</sup> On the same day they slaughtered their sons for their idols, they came to my sanctuary to desecrate it. This is what they have done in the middle of my house.

ative nuance. Addressed to the prophet, "judge" means to warn of or pronounce God's impending judgment. See 20:4; 22:2. §§§ sn: The Lord speaks here in the role of the husband of the sisters. <sup>18</sup> tn: Heb "they have passed to them for food." The verb is commonly taken to refer to passing children through fire, especially as an offering to the pagan god Molech. See Jer 32:35. <sup>19</sup> tn: Heb "in that day." <sup>20</sup> tn: Heb "to whom a messenger was sent, and look, they came." Foreign alliances are in view here. <sup>21</sup> tn: The Hebrew verb form is feminine singular, indicating that Oholibah (Judah) is specifically addressed here. This address continues through verse 42a (note "her"), but then both sisters are described in verse 42b, where the feminine pronouns are again plural. <sup>22</sup> tn: Heb "(was) in her." <sup>23</sup> tn: Heb "and men from the multitude of mankind." <sup>24</sup> tn: An alternate reading is "drunkards." Sheba is located in the area of modern day Yemen. <sup>25</sup> tn: Heb "they"; the referents (the sisters) have been specified in the translation for the sake of clarity. <sup>26</sup> tn: Heb "and they came to her." <sup>27</sup> tn: Heb "and upright men will judge them (with) the judgment of adulteresses and the judgment of those who shed blood." <sup>28</sup> tn: Heb "assembly." <sup>29</sup> tn: Heb "give them to." <sup>30</sup> tn: The Hebrew text adds "with fire." <sup>31</sup> tn: Heb "and the sins of your idols you will bear." By extension it can mean the punishment for the sins.

24 The word of the LORD came to me in the ninth year, in the tenth month, on the tenth day of the month†: <sup>2</sup> "Son of man, write down the name of this day, this very day. The king of Babylon has laid siege†† to Jerusalem‡ this very day. <sup>3</sup> Recite a proverb to this rebellious house‡‡ and say to them, 'This is what the sovereign LORD says:

No lot has fallen on it. §
<sup>7</sup> For her blood was in it; she poured it on an exposed rock; she did not pour it on the ground to cover it up with dust.

<sup>9</sup> "Therefore this is what the sovereign LORD says: Woe to the city of bloodshed ! I will also make the pile high.

The meaning of the statement is unclear in the Hebrew text; some follow the LXX and delete it. The first word in the statement (rendered "toil" in the literal translation above) occurs only here in the OT, and the verb "she has wearied" lacks a stated object. Elsewhere the Hiphil of the verb refers to wearying someone or trying someone's patience. The feminine subject is apparently the symbolic pot. §†† tn: Heb "does not go out." §† tn: Heb "in fire its rust." The meaning of the expression is unclear. The translation understands the statement as a command to burn the rust away. See D. I. Block, Ezekiel (NICOT), 1:768.

Ezekiel's Wife Dies

<sup>15</sup> The word of LORD came to me: <sup>16</sup> " Son of man, realize that I am about to take the delight of your eyes away from you with a jolt, <sup>21</sup> but you must not mourn or weep or shed tears. <sup>17</sup> Groan in silence for the dead, <sup>22</sup> but do not perform mourning rites. <sup>23</sup> Bind on your turban<sup>24</sup> and put your sandals on your feet. Do not cover your lip<sup>25</sup> and do not eat food brought by others." <sup>26</sup>

<sup>18</sup> So I spoke to the people in the morning, and my wife died in the evening. In the morning<sup>27</sup> I acted just as I was commanded. <sup>19</sup> Then the people said to me, "Will you not tell us what these things you are doing mean for us?"

<sup>20</sup> So I said to them: "The word of the LORD came to me: <sup>21</sup> Say to the house of Israel, 'This is what the sovereign LORD says : Realize I am about to desecrate my sanctuary – the source of your confident pride, <sup>28</sup> the object in which your eyes delight, <sup>29</sup> and your life's passion. <sup>30</sup> Your very own sons and daughters whom you

Such rites would involve outward demonstrations of one's sorrow, including wailing and weeping. 24 sn: The turban would normally be removed for mourning ( Josh 7:6; 1 Sam 4:12). 25 sn: Mourning rites included covering the lower part of the face. See Lev 13:45. 26 tn: Heb "the bread of men." The translation follows the suggestion accepted by M. Greenberg ( Ezekiel [AB], 2:509) that this refers to a meal brought by comforters to the one mourning. Some repoint the consonantal text to read "the bread of despair" (see L. C. Allen, Ezekiel [WBC], 2:56), while others, with support from the Targum and Vulgate, emend the consonantal text to read "the bread of mourners" (see D. I. Block, Ezekiel [NICOT], 1:784). 27 tn: This may refer to the following morning. For a discussion of various interpretive options in understanding the chronology reflected in verse 18, see D. I. This reading makes little sense; many, following the lead of the LXX, emend the text to read "nor will you stand" with the negative particle before the preceding verb understood by ellipsis; see L. C. Allen, Ezekiel (WBC), 2:73. D. I. Block (Ezekiel [NICOT], 2:47) offers another alternative, taking the apparent first person verb form as an archaic second feminine form and translating "nor radiate splendor." ‡ tn: Heb "lift up over Tyre a lament." †† tn: Heb "entrances." The term is dual, so perhaps it refers to a double-decked ship. §† tn: Or "hull." §†† tc: The Hebrew reads "Your deck they made ivory, daughter of Assyria." The syntactically difficult "ivory" is understood here as dittography and omitted, though some construe this to refer to ivory inlays. "Daughter of Assyria" is understood here as improper word division and the vowels repointed as "cypresses." §† tn: Heb "from the coastlands (or islands) of Kittim," generally understood to be a reference to the island of Cyprus, where the Phoenicians had a trading colony on the southeast coast. Many modern English versions have "Cyprus" (CEV, TEV), "the coastlands of Cyprus" (NASB), "the coasts of Cyprus" (NIV, NRSV), or "the southern coasts of Cyprus" (NLT). sn: The Kittean isles is probably a reference to southeast Cyprus where the Phoenicians had a colony. §†† sn: This is probably a reference to Cyprus. §† tc: The MT reads "the residents of"; the LXX reads "your rulers who dwell in." With no apparent reason for the LXX to add "the rulers" many suppose something has dropped out of the Hebrew text. While more than one may be possible, Allen's proposal, positing a word meaning "elders," is the most likely to explain the omission in the MT from a graphic standpoint and also provides a parallel to the beginning of v. 9. See L. C. Allen, Ezekiel (WBC), 2:81.a parallel to v. 9. §† map: For location see . §§† sn: Sidon and Arvad, like Tyre, were Phoenician coastal cities.

The word for "damages" occurs several times in 1 Kgs 12 about some type of damage to the temple, which may have referred to or included cracks. Since the context describes Tyre in its glory, we do not expect this reference to damages to be of significant scale, even if there are repairmen. This may refer to using pitch to seal the seams of the ship, which had to be done periodically and could be considered routine maintenance rather than repair of damage. 19 sn: The reference to "all the ships of the sea...within you" suggests that the metaphor is changing; previously Tyre had been described as a magnificent ship, but now the description shifts back to an actual city. Greenberg, Ezekiel (AB), 2:580-81. ‡ sn: The imagery of the lament appears to draw upon an extrabiblical Eden tradition about the expulsion of the first man (see v. 14 and the note there) from the garden due to his pride. The biblical Eden tradition speaks of cherubs placed as guardians at the garden entrance following the sin of Adam and Eve ( Gen 3:24), but no guardian cherub like the one described in verse 14 is depicted or mentioned in the biblical account. Ezekiel's imagery also appears to reflect Mesopotamian and Canaanite mythology at certain points. See D. I. Block, Ezekiel (NICOT), 2:119-20. ‡† tn: The exact identification of each gemstone is uncertain. The list should be compared to that of the priest in Exod 28:17-20, which lists twelve stones in rows of three. The LXX apparently imports the Exod 28 list. See reference to the types of stones in L. C. Allen, Ezekiel (WBC), 2:91. ‡‡ tn: Or "winged"; see L. C. Allen, Ezekiel (WBC), 2:91. ‡‡† tn: The meaning of this phrase in Hebrew is uncertain. The word translated here "guards" occurs in Exod 25:20 in reference to the cherubim "covering" the ark. ‡‡‡ tn: Heb "you (were) an anointed cherub that covers and I placed you." In the Hebrew text the ruler of Tyre is equated with a cherub, and the verb "I placed you" is taken with what follows ("on the holy mountain of God"). However, this reading is problematic. The pronoun "you" at the beginning of verse 14 is feminine singular in the Hebrew text; elsewhere in this passage the ruler of Tyre is addressed with masculine singular forms. It is possible that the pronoun is a rare (see Deut 5:24; Num 11:15) or defectively written (see 1 Sam 24:19; Neh 9:6; Job 1:10; Ps 6:3; Eccl 7:22) masculine form, but it is more likely that the form should be repointed as the preposition "with" (see the LXX). In this case the ruler of Tyre is compared to the first man, not to a cherub. If this emendation is accepted, then the verb "I placed you" belongs with what precedes and concludes the first sentence in the verse. It is noteworthy that the verbs in the second and third lines of the verse also appear at the end of the sentence in the Hebrew text. The presence of a conjunction at the beginning of "I placed you" is problematic for the proposal, but it may reflect a later misunderstanding of the syntax of the verse. For a defense of the proposed emendation, see L. C. Allen, Ezekiel (WBC), 2:91. § tn: Heb "ways." §† tn: Heb "they filled your midst with violence." §†† tn: Heb "I defiled you." I threw you down to the ground; I placed you before kings, that they might see you. <sup>18</sup> By the multitude of your iniquities, through the sinfulness of your trade, you desecrated your sanctuaries. So I drew fire out from within you; it consumed you, and I turned you to ashes on the earth before the eyes of all who saw you. <sup>19</sup> All who know you among the peoples are shocked at you; you have become terrified and will be no more."

sition "from" following the verb indicates that a verb of motion is implied as well. See L. C. Allen, Ezekiel (WBC), 2:91. §† tn: Heb "and I expelled you, O guardian cherub." The Hebrew text takes the verb as first person and understands "guardian cherub" as a vocative, in apposition to the pronominal suffix on the verb. However, if the emendation in verse 14a is accepted (see the note above), then one may follow the LXX here as well and emend the verb to a third person perfect. In this case the subject of the verb is the guardian cherub. See L. C. Allen, Ezekiel (WBC), 2:91. §†† tn: Heb "set your face against." §† sn: Sidon was located 25 miles north of Tyre. map: For location see . §‡ tn: Or "I challenge you." They will live securely†† when I execute my judgments on all those who scorn them and surround them. Then they will know that I am the LORD their God."

I will turn the land of Egypt into an utter desolate ruin from Migdo‡†† to Syene, ‡†† as far as the border with Ethiopia. <sup>11</sup> No human foot will pass through it, and no animal's foot will pass through it; it will be uninhabited for forty years. <sup>12</sup> I will turn the land of Egypt into a desolation in the midst of desolate lands; for forty years her cities will lie desolate in the midst of ruined cities. I will scatter Egypt among the nations and disperse them among foreign countries.

<sup>13</sup> "For this is what the sovereign LORD says: At the end of forty years‡‡‡ I will gather Egypt from the peoples where they were scattered. <sup>14</sup> I will restore the fortunes of Egypt, and will bring them back<sup>18</sup> to the land of Pathros, to the land of their origin; there they will be an insignificant kingdom. <sup>15</sup> It will be the most insignificant of the kingdoms; it will never again exalt itself over the nations. I will make them so small that they will not rule over the nations. <sup>16</sup> It will never again be Israel's source of confidence, but a reminder of how they sinned by turning to Egypt for help. <sup>19</sup> Then they will know that I am the sovereign LORD."

<sup>20</sup> In the eleventh year, in the first month, on the seventh day of the month, <sup>24</sup> the word of the LORD came to me: <sup>21</sup>" Son of man, I have broken the arm<sup>25</sup> of Pharaoh king of Egypt. <sup>26</sup> Look, it has not been bandaged for healing or set with a dressing so that it might become strong enough to grasp a sword. <sup>22</sup> Therefore this is what the sovereign LORD says: Look, <sup>27</sup>

The MT reads Sin, which has already been mentioned in v. 15. <sup>21</sup> sn: On and Pi-beseth are generally identified with the Egyptian cities of Heliopolis and Bubastis. <sup>22</sup> tn: Heb "they will go." The pronoun and verb are feminine plural, indicating that the cities just mentioned are the antecedent of the pronoun and the subject of the verb. The translation makes this clear by stating the subject as "the cities." <sup>23</sup> sn: In Zeph 1:15 darkness is associated with the day of the LORD. <sup>24</sup> tn: April 29, 587 B.C. <sup>25</sup> sn: The expression "breaking the arm" indicates the removal of power (Ps 10:15; 37:17; Job 38:15; Jer 48:25). <sup>26</sup> sn: This may refer to the event recorded in Jer 37:5. <sup>27</sup> tn: The word h!nn@h indicates becoming aware of something and has been translated here as a verb.

Then they will know that I am the LORD when I place my sword in the hand of the king of Babylon and he extends it against the land of Egypt.<sup>26</sup> I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations and disperse them among foreign countries. Then they will know that I am the LORD."

31 In the eleventh year, in the third month, on the first day of the month, ‡ the word of the LORD came to me:<sup>2</sup> "Son of man, say to Pharaoh king of Egypt and his hordes:

† tn: Or "I challenge you." The phrase "I am against you" may be a formula for challenging someone to combat or a duel. See D. I. Block, Ezekiel (NICOT), 1:201-2, and P. Humbert, "Die Herausforderungsformel 'h!nn#n' ?!K&gt;,'" ZAW 45 (1933): 101-8. †† tn: Heb "him"; the referent has been specified in the translation for clarity. ‡ sn: June 21, 587 B.C. ‡‡ sn: Either Egypt, or the Lord compares Egypt to Assyria, which is described in vv. 3-17 through the metaphor of a majestic tree. See D. I. Block, Ezekiel (NICOT), 2:185. Like Egypt, Assyria had been a great world power, but in time God brought the Assyrians down. Egypt should learn from history the lesson that no nation, no matter how powerful, can withstand the judgment of God. Rather than following the text here, some prefer to emend the proper name Assyria to a similar sounding common noun meaning "boxwood" (see Ezek 27:6), which would make a fitting parallel to "cedar of Lebanon" in the following line. In this case vv. 3-18 in their entirety refer to Egypt, not Assyria. See L. C. Allen, Ezekiel (WBC), 2:121-27. ‡‡‡ sn: Lebanon was known for its cedar trees (Judg 9:15; 1 Kgs 4:33; 5:6; 2 Kgs 14:9; Ezra 3:7; Pss 29:5; 92:12; 104:16). ‡‡† tn: Heb "Waters made it grow; the deep made it grow tall. It (the deep) was flowing with its rivers around the place it (the tree) was planted, it (the deep) sent out its channels to all the trees of the field." <sup>‡‡‡†</sup> tn: Heb "when it sends forth." Repeating the consonants of the Masoretic text would render the proposed reading "shoots" (cf. NRSV). § tn: Or "many."

<sup>8</sup> The cedars in the garden of God could not eclipse it, nor could the fir trees§† match its boughs; the plane trees were as nothing compared to its branches;

no tree in the garden of God could rival its beauty.

<sup>10</sup> "Therefore this is what the sovereign LORD says: Because it was tall in stature, and its top reached into the clouds, and it was proud of its height,†† I gave it over to the leader of the nations. He has judged it thoroughly,§†† as its sinfulness deserves. I have thrown it out.‡ <sup>12</sup> Foreigners from the most terrifying nations have cut it down and left it to lie there on the mountains. In all the valleys its branches have fallen, and its boughs lie broken in the ravines of the land. All the peoples of the land§‡ have departed§†† from its shade and left it. <sup>13</sup> On its ruins all the birds of the sky will live, and all the wild animals§† will walk§‡ on its branches. <sup>14</sup> For this reason no watered trees will grow so tall; their tops will not reach into the clouds, nor will the well-watered ones grow that high. §§† For all of them have been appointed to die in the lower parts of the earth; §§† they will be among mere mortals, §§§ with those who descend to the pit.

<sup>15</sup> "This is what the sovereign LORD says: On the day it<sup>18</sup> went down to Sheol I caused observers to lament. <sup>19</sup> I covered it with the deep and held back its rivers; its plentiful water was restrained. I clothed Lebanon in black for it, and all the trees of the field wilted because of it. <sup>16</sup> I made the nations shake at the sound of its fall, when I threw it down to Sheol, along with those who descend to the pit. <sup>20</sup> Then all the trees of Eden, the choicest and the best of Lebanon, all that were well-watered, were comforted in the earth below. <sup>17</sup> Those who lived in its shade, its allies<sup>21</sup> among the nations, also went down with it to Sheol, to those killed by the sword. <sup>18</sup> Which of the trees of Eden was like you in majesty and loftiness? You will be brought down with the trees of Eden to the lower parts of the earth; you will lie among the uncircumcised, with those killed by the sword! This is what will happen to

§† tn: Or "cypress trees" (cf. NASB, NLT); NIV "pine trees." §†† tn: Heb "acting he has acted with regard to it." The infinitive absolute precedes the main verb to emphasize the certainty and decisiveness of the action depicted. §‡ tn: Or "earth" (KJV, ASV, NASB, NIV, NRSV). §†† tn: Heb "gone down." §† tn: Heb "the beasts of the field," referring to wild as opposed to domesticated animals. §‡ tn: Heb "be." §§† tn: Heb "and they will not stand to them in their height, all the drinkers of water." §§‡ tn: Heb "for death, to the lower earth." §§§ tn: Heb "the sons of men." <sup>18</sup> tn: Or "he." <sup>19</sup> tn: Heb "I caused lamentation." D. I. Block (Ezekiel [NICOT], 2:194-95) proposes an alternative root which would give the meaning "I gated back the waters," i.e., shut off the water supply. <sup>20</sup> sn: For the expression "going down to the pit," see Ezek 26:20; 32:18, 24, 29. <sup>21</sup> tn: Heb "its arm."
