27 The list of Joash's<sup>22</sup> sons, the many prophetic oracles pertaining to him, and the account of his building project on God's temple are included in the record of the Scroll of the Kings. 23 His son Amaziah replaced him as king.

25 Amaziah was twenty-five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned for twenty-nine years in Jerusalem. 24 His mother was Jehoaddan, who was from Jerusalem. 2 He did what the LORD approved, 25 but not with wholehearted devotion. 26

3 When he had secured control of the kingdom, 27 he executed the servants who had assassinated his father. 284 However, he did not execute their sons. He obeyed the LORD's commandment as recorded in the law scroll of Moses, 29 "Fathers must not be executed for what their sons do, 30 and sons must not be executed for what their fathers do." 31 A man must be executed only for his own sin." 32

5 Amaziah assembled the people of Judah<sup>33</sup> and assigned them by families to the commanders of units of a thousand and the commanders of units of a hundred for all Judah and Benjamin. He counted those twenty years old and up and discovered there were 300,000 young men of fighting age<sup>34</sup> equipped with spears and shields. 356 He hired 100,000 Israelite warriors for a hundred talents<sup>36</sup> of silver.

7 But a prophet<sup>37</sup> visited him and said: "O king, the Israelite troops must not go with you, for the LORD is not with Israel or any of the Ephraimites. 388 Even if you go and fight bravely in battle, God will defeat you<sup>39</sup> before the enemy. God is capable of helping or defeating." 409 Amaziah asked the prophet 41 "But what should I do about the hundred talents of silver I paid the Israelite troops?" The prophet<sup>42</sup> replied, "The LORD is capable of giving you more than that." 10 So Amaziah dismissed the troops that had come to him from Ephraim and sent them home. 43 They were very angry at Judah and returned home incensed. 11 Amazi-

They took them to the top of a cliff and threw them over. †† All the captives††† fell to their death. †††13 Now the troops Amaziah had dismissed and had not allowed to fight in the battle<sup>s</sup> raided<sup>s†</sup> the cities of Judah from Samaria<sup>s††</sup> to Beth Horon. They killed<sup>s†</sup> 3,000 people and carried off a large amount of plunder.

14 When Amaziah returned from defeating the Edomites, he brought back the gods of the people<sup>s††</sup> of Seir and made them his personal gods. <sup>s†</sup> He bowed down before them and offered them sacrifices. 15 The LORD was angry at Amaziah and sent a prophet to him, who said, "Why are you following<sup>s†</sup> these gods<sup>s††</sup> that could not deliver their own people from your power?" <sup>s††16</sup> While he was speaking, Amaziah<sup>s††</sup> said to him, "Did we appoint you to be a royal counselor? Stop prophesying or else you will be killed!"<sup>17</sup> So the prophet stopped, but added, "I know that the LORD has decided<sup>19</sup> to destroy you, because you have done this thing and refused to listen to my advice."

17 After King Amaziah of Judah consulted with his advisers,<sup>20</sup> he sent this message to the king of Israel, Joash son of Jehoahaz, the son of Jehu, "Come, face me on the battlefield."<sup>21</sup> King Joash of Israel sent this message back to King Amaziah of Judah, "A thorn bush in Lebanon sent this message to a cedar in Lebanon, 'Give your daughter to my son as a wife.' Then a wild animal of Lebanon came by and trampled down the thorn bush. <sup>22</sup>19 You defeated Edom<sup>23</sup> and it has gone to your head.<sup>24</sup> Gloat over your success, <sup>25</sup> but stay in your palace. The expression refers here not to a visit but to meeting in battle. See v. 21. 22 sn: The thorn bush in the allegory is Judah. Amaziah's success had deceived him into thinking he was on the same level as the major powers in the area (symbolized by the cedar). In reality he was not capable of withstanding an attack by a real military power such as Israel (symbolized by the wild animal). 23 tn: Heb "you say [to yourself], 'look, you have defeated Edom.'" 24 tn: Heb "and your heart is lifted up." 25 tn: Heb "to glorify." 26 tn: Heb "Why get involved in calamity and fall, you and Judah with you?"

20 But Amaziah did not heed the warning,<sup>27</sup> for God wanted to hand them over to Joash because they followed the gods of Edom. <sup>28</sup>21 So King Joash of Israel attacked. He and King Amaziah of Judah faced each other on the battlefield<sup>29</sup> in Beth Shemesh of Judah. 22 Judah was defeated by Israel, and each man ran back home. <sup>30</sup>23 King Joash of Israel captured King Amaziah of Judah, son of Joash son of Jehoahaz, in Beth Shemesh and brought him to Jerusalem. He broke down the wall of Jerusalem from the Gate of Ephraim to the Corner Gate – a distance of about six hundred feet. <sup>31</sup>24 He took away all the gold and silver, all the items found in God's temple that were in the care of Obed-Edom, the riches in the royal palace, and some hostages. Then he went back to Samaria.

25 King Amaziah son of Joash of Judah lived for fifteen years after the death of King Joash son of Jehoahaz of Israel. 26 The rest of the events of Amaziah's reign, from start to finish, are recorded in the Scroll of the Kings of Judah and Israel. <sup>32</sup>27 From the time Amaziah turned from following the LORD, conspirators plotted against him in Jerusalem, <sup>33</sup> so he fled to Lachish. But they sent assassins after him<sup>34</sup> and they killed him there. 28 His body was carried back by horses, <sup>35</sup> and he was buried in Jerusalem with his ancestors<sup>36</sup> in the City of David. <sup>37</sup>

26 All the people of Judah took Uzziah, <sup>38</sup> who was sixteen years old, and made him king in his father Amaziah's place. 2 Uzziah<sup>39</sup> built up Elat and restored it to Judah after King Amaziah<sup>40</sup> had passed away. <sup>41</sup>

3 Uzziah was sixteen years old when he began to reign, and he reigned for fifty-two years in Jerusalem. <sup>42</sup> His mother's name was Jeholiah, who was from Jerusalem. 4 He did what the LORD approved, just as his father Amaziah had done. <sup>43</sup>5 He followed<sup>44</sup> God during the lifetime of<sup>45</sup> Zechariah, who taught him how to honor God. As long as he followed† the LORD, God caused him to succeed.††

<sup>11</sup> Uzziah had an army of skilled warriors trained for battle. They were organized by divisions according to the muster rolls made by Jeiel the scribe and Maaseiah the officer under the authority of Hananiah, a royal official.<sup>12</sup> The total number of family leaders who led warriors was 2,600.<sup>13</sup> They commanded an army of 307,500 skilled and able warriors who were ready to defend§‡ the king against his enemies.<sup>14</sup> Uzziah supplied shields, spears, helmets, breastplates, bows, and slingstones for the entire army.<sup>15</sup> In Jerusalem he made war machines carefully designed to shoot arrows and large stones from the towers and corners of the walls. He became very famous, for he received tremendous support and became powerful.§††

<sup>27</sup> Jotham was twenty-five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned for sixteen years in Jerusalem.<sup>27</sup> His mother was Jerusha the daughter of Zadok.<sup>2</sup> He did what the LORD approved, just as his father Uzziah had done.<sup>28</sup> (He did not, however, have the audacity to enter the temple.)<sup>29</sup> Yet the people were still sinning.

<sup>3</sup> He built the Upper Gate to the LORD's temple and did a lot of work on the wall in the area known as Ophel.<sup>304</sup> He built cities in the hill country of Judah and fortresses and towers in the forests.

<sup>5</sup> The LORD his God handed him over to the king of Syria. The Syrians§†† defeated him and deported many captives to Damascus. §† He was also handed over to the king of Israel, who thoroughly defeated him. <sup>§††6</sup> In one day King Pekah son of Remaliah of Israel killed 120,000 warriors in Judah, because they had abandoned the LORD God of their ancestors. <sup>§†7</sup> Zikri, an Ephraimite warrior, killed the king's son Maaseiah, Azrikam, the supervisor of the palace, and Elkanah, the king's second-in-command. <sup>8</sup> The Israelites seized from their brothers 200,000 wives, sons, and daughters. They also carried off a huge amount of plunder and took it§† back to Samaria. §§†

<sup>9</sup> Oded, a prophet of the LORD, was there. He went to meet the army as they arrived in Samaria and said to them: "Look, because the LORD God of your ancestors was angry with Judah he handed them over to you. You have killed them so mercilessly that God has taken notice. <sup>§§†10</sup> And now you are planning§§§ to en-slave<sup>18</sup> the people<sup>19</sup> of Judah and Jerusalem. Yet are you not also guilty before the LORD your God? <sup>11</sup> Now listen to me! Send back those you have seized from your brothers, for the LORD is very angry at you!" <sup>20†2</sup> So some of<sup>†21</sup> the Ephraimite family leaders, Azariah son of Jehochanan, Berechiah son of Meshillemoth, Jechizkiah son of Shallum, and Amasa son of Hadlai confronted<sup>22</sup> those returning from the battle. <sup>13</sup> They said to them, "Don't bring those captives here! Are you planning on making us even more sinful and guilty before the LORD? <sup>23</sup> Our guilt is already great and the LORD is very angry at Israel." <sup>24†4</sup> So the soldiers released the captives and the plunder before the officials and the entire assembly. <sup>15</sup> Men were assigned to take the prisoners and find clothes among the plunder for those who were naked. <sup>25</sup> So they clothed them, supplied them with sandals, gave them food and drink, and provided them with oil to rub on their skin. <sup>26</sup> They put the ones who couldn't walk on donkeys. <sup>27</sup> They brought them back to their brothers at Jericho, <sup>28</sup> the city of the date palm trees, and then returned to Samaria.

<sup>15</sup> They assembled their brothers and consecrated themselves. Then they went in to purify the LORD's temple, just as the king had ordered, in accordance with the word<sup>18</sup> of the LORD. <sup>16</sup> The priests then entered the LORD's temple to purify it; they brought out to the courtyard of the LORD's temple every ceremoni-ally unclean thing they discovered inside. <sup>19</sup> The Levites took them out to the Kidron Valley. <sup>17</sup> On the first day of the first month they began consecrating; by the eighth day of the month they reached the porch of the LORD's temple. <sup>20</sup> For eight more days they consecrated the LORD's temple. On the sixteenth day of the first month they were finished. <sup>18</sup> They went to King Hezekiah and said : "We have purified the entire temple of the LORD , including the altar of burnt sacrifice and all its equipment, and the table for the Bread of the Presence and all its equipment. <sup>19</sup> We have prepared and consecrated all the items that King Ahaz removed during his reign when he acted unfaithfully. They are in front of the altar of the LORD."

<sup>30</sup> Hezekiah sent messages throughout Israel and Judah; he even wrote letters to Ephraim and Manasseh, summoning them to come to the LORD's temple in Jerusalem<sup>18</sup> and observe a Passover celebration for the LORD God of Israel.<sup>2</sup> The king, his officials, and the entire assembly in Jerusalem decided to observe the Passover in the second month.<sup>3</sup> They were unable to observe it at the regular<sup>19</sup> time because not enough priests had consecrated themselves and the people had not assembled in Jerusalem.<sup>4</sup> The proposal seemed appropriate to<sup>20</sup> the king and the entire assembly.<sup>5</sup> So they sent an edict<sup>21</sup> throughout Israel from Beer Sheba to Dan, summoning the people<sup>22</sup> to come and observe a Passover for the LORD God of Israel in Jerusalem, for they had not observed it on a nationwide scale as prescribed in the law.<sup>236</sup> Messengers<sup>24</sup> delivered the letters from the king and his officials throughout Israel and Judah.

This royal edict read:<sup>25</sup> "O Israelites, return to the LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, so he may return<sup>26</sup> to you who have been spared from the kings of Assyria.<sup>27</sup> Don't be like your fathers and brothers who were unfaithful to the LORD God of their ancestors,<sup>28</sup> provoking him to destroy them,<sup>29</sup> as you can see.<sup>8</sup> Now, don't be stubborn<sup>30</sup> like your fathers! Submit<sup>31</sup> to the LORD and come to his sanctuary which he has permanently consecrated. Serve the LORD your God so that he might relent from his raging anger.<sup>329</sup> For if you return to the LORD, your brothers and sons will be shown mercy by their captors and return to this land. The LORD your God is merciful and compassionate; he will not reject you<sup>33</sup> if you return to him."

<sup>10</sup> The messengers journeyed from city to city through the land of Ephraim and Manasseh as far as Zebulun, but people mocked and ridiculed them.<sup>3411</sup> But some men from Asher, Manasseh, and Zebulun humbled themselves and came to Jerusalem.<sup>12</sup> In Judah God moved the people to unite and carry out the edict the king and the officers had issued at the LORD's command.<sup>3513</sup> A huge crowd assembled in Jerusalem to observe the Feast of Unleavened Bread in the second month. <sup>†14</sup> They removed the altars in Jerusalem; they also removed all the incense altars and threw them into the Kidron Valley. ††

<sup>15</sup> They slaughtered the Passover lamb on the fourteenth day of the second month. The priests and Levites were ashamed, so they consecrated themselves and brought burnt sacrifices to the LORD's temple. <sup>16</sup> They stood at their posts according to the regulations outlined in the law of Moses, the man of God. The priests were splashing the blood as the Levites handed it to them. <sup>17</sup> Because many in the assembly had not consecrated themselves, the Levites slaughtered †† the Passover lambs of all who were ceremonially unclean and could not consecrate their sacrifice to the LORD. <sup>††18</sup> The majority of the many people from Ephraim, Manasseh, Issachar, and Zebulun were ceremonially unclean, yet they ate the Passover in violation of what is prescribed in the law. ††† For Hezekiah prayed for them, saying: "May the LORD, who is good, forgive <sup>†††19</sup> everyone who has determined to follow God, § the LORD God of his ancestors, even if he is not ceremonially clean according to the standards of the temple." <sup>††20</sup> The LORD responded favorably ††† to Hezekiah and forgave §† the people.

tributed† the initial portion of their grain, wine, olive oil, honey, and all the produce of their fields. They brought a tenth of everything, which added up to a huge amount.<sup>6</sup> The Israelites and people of Judah†† who lived in the cities of Judah also contributed a tenth of their cattle and sheep, as well as a tenth of the holy items consecrated to the LORD their God. They brought them and placed them in many heaps.‡ In the third month they began piling their contributions in heaps‡‡ and finished in the seventh month.<sup>8</sup> When Hezekiah and the officials came and saw the heaps, they praised the LORD and pronounced blessings on his people Israel.‡‡‡

<sup>9</sup> When Hezekiah asked the priests and Levites about the heaps,<sup>10</sup> Azariah, the head priest from the family of Zadok, said to him, "Since the contributions began arriving in the LORD's temple, we have had plenty to eat and have a large quantity left over. For the LORD has blessed his people, and this large amount remains."<sup>11</sup> Hezekiah ordered that storerooms be prepared in the LORD's temple. When this was done,<sup>‡‡‡‡</sup> they brought in the contributions, tithes,‡‡‡ and consecrated items that had been offered.§ Konaniah, a Levite, was in charge of all this, assisted by his brother Shimei.<sup>13</sup> Jehiel, Azaziah, Nahath, Asahel, Jerimoth, Jozabad, Eliel, Ismakiah, Mahath, and Benaiah worked under the supervision of Konaniah and his brother Shimei, as directed by King Hezekiah and Azariah, the supervisor of God's temple.

<sup>14</sup> Kore son of Imnah, a Levite and the guard on the east side, was in charge of the voluntary offerings made to God and disbursed the contributions made to the LORD and the consecrated items.<sup>15</sup> In the cities of the priests, Eden, Miniamin, Jeshua, Shemaiah, Amariah, and Shecaniah faithfully assisted him in making disbursements to their fellow priests§† according to their divisions, regardless of age.<sup>§††16</sup> They made disbursements to all the males three years old and up who were listed in the genealogical records – to all who would enter the LORD's temple to serve on a daily basis and fulfill their duties as assigned to their divisions.<sup>§††17</sup> They made disbursements to the priests listed in the genealogical records by their families, and to the Levites twenty years old and up, according to their duties as assigned to their divisions,<sup>18</sup> and to all the infants, wives, sons, and daughters of the entire assembly listed in the genealogical records, for they faithfully consecrated themselves.<sup>19</sup> As for the de-

It read: <sup>10</sup> "This is what King Sennacherib of Assyria says: 'Why are you so confident that you remain in Jerusalem while it is under siege?' <sup>11</sup> Hezekiah says, "The LORD our God will rescue us from the power†† of the king of Assyria." But he is misleading you and you will die of hunger and thirst! <sup>12</sup> Hezekiah is the one who eliminated‡† the LORD's ‡ high places and altars and then told Judah and Jerusalem, "At one altar you must worship and offer sacrifices." <sup>13</sup> Are you not aware of what I and my predecessors‡†† have done to all the nations of the surrounding lands? Have the gods of the surrounding lands actually been able to rescue their lands from my power? <sup>‡††14</sup> Who among all the gods of these nations whom my predecessors annihilated was able to rescue his people from my power? <sup>§15</sup> Now don't let Hezekiah deceive you or mislead you like this. Don't believe him, for no god of any nation or kingdom has been able to rescue his people from my power or the power of my predecessors. So how§† can your gods rescue§†† you from my power?"

From that time on he was respected by<sup>22</sup> all the nations.

Hezekiah's Shortcomings and Accomplishments

<sup>24</sup> In those days Hezekiah was stricken with a terminal illness.<sup>23</sup> He prayed to the LORD, who answered him and gave him a sign confirming that he would be healed. <sup>2425</sup> But Hezekiah was ungrateful; he had a proud attitude, provoking God to be angry at him, as well as Judah and Jerusalem. <sup>2526</sup> But then Hezekiah and the residents of Jerusalem humbled themselves and abandoned their pride, and the LORD was not angry with them for the rest of Hezekiah's reign. <sup>26</sup>

<sup>27</sup> Hezekiah was very wealthy and greatly respected. He made storehouses for his silver, gold, precious stones, spices, and all his other valuable possessions. <sup>2728</sup> He made storerooms for the harvest of grain, wine, and olive oil, and stalls for all his various kinds of livestock and his flocks. <sup>2829</sup> He built royal cities<sup>29</sup> and owned a large number of sheep and cattle, for God gave him a huge amount of possessions.

<sup>30</sup> Hezekiah dammed up the source of the waters of the Upper Gihon and directed them down to the west side of the City of David. <sup>30</sup> Hezekiah succeeded in all that he did. <sup>31</sup> So when the envoys arrived from the Babylonian officials to visit him and inquire about the sign that occurred in the land, <sup>31</sup> God left him alone to test him, in order to know his true motives. <sup>32</sup>

He bowed down to all the stars in the sky‡‡‡ and worshiped<sup>s</sup> them. <sup>4</sup> He built altars in the LORD's temple, about which the LORD had said, "Jerusalem will be my permanent home." <sup>‡15</sup> In the two courtyards of the LORD's temple he built altars for all the stars in the sky. <sup>6</sup> He passed his sons through the fire‡‡† in the Valley of Ben-Hinnom and practiced divination, omen reading, and sorcery. He set up a ritual pit to conjure up underworld spirits and appointed magicians to supervise it.‡‡ He did a great amount of evil in the sight of the LORD and angered him. <sup>‡‡†7</sup> He put an idolatrous image he had made in God's temple, about which God had said to David and to his son Solomon, "This temple in Jerusalem, which I have chosen out of all the tribes of Israel, will be my permanent home. <sup>‡†8</sup> I will not make Israel again leave the land I gave to their ancestors, ‡‡ provided that they carefully obey all I commanded them, the whole law, the rules and regulations given to Moses." <sup>9</sup> But Manasseh misled the people of‡‡† Judah and the residents of Jerusalem so that they sinned more than the nations whom the LORD had destroyed ahead of the Israelites.

<sup>15</sup> He removed the foreign gods and images from the LORD's temple and all the altars he had built on the hill of the LORD's temple and in Jerusalem; he threw them outside the city. <sup>16</sup> He erected the altar of the LORD and offered on it peace offerings and thank offerings. He told the people of<sup>30</sup> Judah to serve the LORD God of Israel. <sup>17</sup> The people continued to offer sacrifices at the high places, but only to the LORD their God.

<sup>18</sup> The rest of the events of Manasseh's reign, including his prayer to his God and the words the prophets<sup>31</sup> spoke to him in the name of the LORD God of Israel, are recorded<sup>32</sup> in the Annals of the Kings of Israel. <sup>19</sup> The Annals of the Prophets include his prayer, give an account of how the LORD responded to it, record all his sins and unfaithful acts, and identify the sites where he built high places and erected Asherah poles and idols before he humbled himself. <sup>33</sup><sup>20</sup> Manasseh passed away† and was buried in his palace. His son Amon replaced him as king.

Amon's Reign

<sup>3</sup> In the eighth year of his reign, while he was still young, he began to seek the God of his ancestor‡‡ David. In his twelfth year he began ridding‡‡† Judah and Jerusalem of the high places, Asherah poles, idols, and images. <sup>4</sup> He ordered the altars of the Baals to be torn down,‡† and broke the incense altars that were above them. He smashed the Asherah poles, idols and images, crushed them up and sprinkled the dust over the tombs of those who had sacrificed to them. <sup>5</sup> He burned the bones of the pagan priests‡‡ on their altars; he purified Judah and Jerusalem. <sup>6</sup> In the cities of Manasseh, Ephraim, and Simeon, as far as Naphtali, and in the ruins‡‡† around them, <sup>7</sup> he tore down the altars and Asherah poles, demolished the idols, and smashed all the incense altars throughout the land of Israel. Then he returned to Jerusalem.

<sup>8</sup> In the eighteenth year of his reign, he continued his policy of purifying the land and the temple. ‡‡† He sent Shaphan son of Azaliah, Maaseiah the city official, and Joah son of Joahaz the secretary to repair the temple of the LORD his God. <sup>9</sup> They went to Hilkiah the high priest and gave him the silver that had been brought to God's temple. The Levites who guarded the door had collected it from the people of‡‡‡ Manasseh and Ephraim and from all who were left in Israel, as well as from all the people of<sup>†8</sup> Judah and Benjamin and the residents of<sup>†9</sup> Jerusalem. <sup>10</sup> They handed it over to the construction foremen<sup>20</sup> assigned to the LORD's temple. They in turn paid the temple workers to restore and repair it. <sup>2111</sup> They gave money to the craftsmen and builders to buy chiseled stone and wood for the braces and rafters of the buildings that the kings of Judah had allowed to fall into disrepair. <sup>2212</sup> The men worked faithfully. Their supervisors were Jahath and Obadiah (Levites descended from Merari), as well as Zechariah and Meshullam (descendants of Kohath). The Levites, all of whom were skilled musicians, <sup>13</sup> supervised the laborers and all the foremen on their various jobs. <sup>23</sup> Some of the Levites were scribes, officials, and guards.

<sup>14</sup> When they took out the silver that had been brought to the LORD's temple, Hilkiah the priest found the law scroll the LORD had given to Moses. <sup>15</sup> Hilkiah informed Shaphan the scribe, "I found the law scroll in the LORD's temple." Hilkiah gave the scroll to Shaphan. <sup>16</sup> Shaphan brought the scroll to the king and reported, <sup>24</sup> "Your servants are doing everything assigned to them. <sup>17</sup> They melted down the silver in the LORD's temple<sup>25</sup> and handed it over to the supervisors of the construction foremen." <sup>18</sup> Then Shaphan the scribe told the king, "Hilkiah the priest has given me a scroll." Shaphan read it out loud before the king. <sup>19</sup> When the king heard the words of the law scroll, he tore his clothes. <sup>20</sup> The king ordered Hilkiah, Ahikam son of Shaphan, Abdon son of Micah, <sup>26</sup> Shaphan the scribe, and Asaiah the king's servant, <sup>21</sup> "Go, seek an oracle from<sup>27</sup> the LORD for me and those who remain in Israel and Judah. Find out about<sup>28</sup> the words of this scroll that has been discovered. For the LORD's fury has been ignited against us,<sup>29</sup> because our ancestors<sup>30</sup> have not obeyed the word of the LORD by doing all that this scroll instructs!" <sup>31</sup>

<sup>7</sup> From his own royal flocks and herds, Josiah supplied the people with 30,000 lambs and goats for the Passover sacrifice, as well as 3,000 cattle. <sup>198</sup> His officials also willingly contributed to the people, priests, and Levites. Hilkiah, Zechariah, and Jehiel, the leaders of God's temple, supplied 2,600 Passover sacrifices and 300 cattle. <sup>9</sup> Konaniah and his brothers Shemaiah and Nethanel, along with Hashabiah, Jeiel, and Jozabad, the officials of the Levites, supplied the Levites with 5,000 Passover sacrifices and 500 cattle. <sup>10</sup> Preparations were made, <sup>20</sup> and the priests stood at their posts and the Levites in their divisions as prescribed by the king. <sup>11</sup> They slaughtered the Passover lambs and the priests splashed the blood,<sup>21</sup> while the Levites skinned the animals. <sup>12</sup> They reserved the burnt offerings and the cattle for the family divisions of the people to present to the LORD, as prescribed in the scroll of Moses. <sup>2213</sup> They cooked the Passover sacrifices over the open fire as prescribed and cooked the consecrated offerings in pots, kettles, and pans. They quickly served them to all the people. <sup>14</sup> Afterward they made preparations for themselves and for the priests, because the priests, the descendants of Aaron, were offering burnt sacrifices and fat portions until evening. The Levites made preparations for themselves and for the priests, the descendants of Aaron. <sup>15</sup> The musicians, the descendants of Asaph, manned their posts, as prescribed by David, Asaph, Heman, and Jeduthun

None of the kings of Israel had observed a Passover like the one celebrated by Josiah, the priests, the Levites, all the people of Judah and Israel who were there, and the residents of Jerusalem. <sup>19</sup> This Passover was observed in the eighteenth year of Josiah's reign.

Josiah's Reign Ends

<sup>20</sup> After Josiah had done all this for the temple, †† King Necho of Egypt marched up to do battle at Carchemish on the Euphrates River. ‡ Josiah marched out to oppose him. <sup>21</sup> Necho †† sent messengers to him, saying, "Why are you opposing me, O king of Judah? †† I am not attacking you today, but the kingdom with which I am at war. †† God told me to hurry. Stop opposing God, who is with me, or else he will destroy you." †††<sup>22</sup> But Josiah did not turn back from him, <sup>5</sup> he disguised himself for battle. He did not take seriously <sup>5†</sup> the words of Necho which he had received from God; he went to fight him in the Plain of Megiddo. <sup>5††23</sup> Archers shot King Josiah; the king ordered his servants, "Take me out of this chariot, <sup>5†</sup> for I am seriously wounded." <sup>24</sup> So his servants took him out of the chariot, put him in another chariot that he owned, and brought him to Jerusalem, <sup>5††</sup> where he died. He was buried in the tombs of his ancestors; <sup>5†</sup> all the people of Judah and Jerusalem mourned Josiah. <sup>25</sup> Jeremiah composed laments for Josiah which all the male and female singers use to mourn Josiah to this very day. It has become customary in Israel to sing these; they are recorded in the Book of Laments.

<sup>26</sup> The rest of the events of Josiah's reign, including the faithful acts he did in obedience to what is written in the law of the LORD <sup>5††27</sup> and his accomplishments, from start to finish, are recorded <sup>5††</sup> in the Scroll of the Kings of Israel and Judah.

<sup>36</sup> The people of the land took Jehoahaz son of Josiah and made him king in his father's place in Jerusalem. <sup>5†2</sup> Jehoahaz was twenty-three years old when he became king, and he reigned three months in Jerusalem. <sup>3</sup> The king of Egypt prevented him from ruling in Jerusalem and imposed on the land a special tax <sup>5†5</sup> of one hundred talents <sup>18</sup> of silver and a talent of gold. <sup>4</sup> The king of Egypt made Jehoahaz's <sup>19</sup> brother Eliakim king over Judah and Jerusalem, and changed his name to Jehoiakim. ### Jehoiakim's Reign

Zedekiah's Reign

The Babylonians Destroy Jerusalem

<sup>15</sup> The LORD God of their ancestors‡‡‡ continually warned them through his messengers, § for he felt compassion for his people and his dwelling place. <sup>16</sup> But they mocked God's messengers, despised his warnings, §† and ridiculed his prophets. §†† Finally the LORD got very angry at his people and there was no one who could prevent his judgment. <sup>§†17</sup> He brought against them the king of the Babylonians, who slaughtered§†† their young men in their temple. §† He did not spare§† young men or women, or even the old and ag-

The Decree of Cyrus †

"The LORD God of heaven has given me all the kingdoms of the earth. He has instructed me to build a temple§‡ for him in Jerusalem, §†† which is in Judah. <sup>3</sup>

† sn: In addition to the canonical books of Ezra and Nehemiah, there are two deuterocanonical books that are also called "Ezra." Exactly how these books are designated varies in ancient literature. In the Septuagint (LXX) canonical Ezra is called Second Esdras, but in the Latin Vulgate it is called First Esdras. Our Nehemiah is called Third Esdras in some manuscripts of the LXX, but it is known as Second Esdras in the Latin Vulgate. (In the earliest LXX manuscripts Ezra and Nehemiah were regarded as one book, as they were in some Hebrew manuscripts.) The deuterocanonical books of Ezra are called First and Fourth Esdras in the LXX, but Third and Fourth Esdras in the Latin Vulgate. The titles for the so-called books of Ezra are thus rather confusing, a fact that one must keep in mind when consulting this material. †† sn: The first year of Cyrus would be ca. 539 B.C. All the people gave a loud<sup>29</sup> shout as they praised the LORD when the temple of the LORD was established. <sup>12</sup> Many of the priests, the Levites, and the leaders<sup>30</sup> – older people who had seen with their own eyes the former temple while it was still established<sup>31</sup> – were weeping loudly,<sup>32</sup> and many others raised their voice in a joyous shout. <sup>13</sup> People were unable to tell the difference between the sound of joyous shouting and the sound of the people's weeping, for the people were shouting so loudly<sup>33</sup> that the sound was heard a long way off.

Some interpreters understand the verse to mean that the letter was written in the Aramaic script and in the Aramaic language, but this does not seem to give sufficient attention to the participle “translated” at the end of the verse. The second reference to Aramaic in the verse is more probably a gloss that calls attention to the fact that the following verses retain the Aramaic language of the letter in its original linguistic form. A similar reference to Aramaic occurs in Dan 2:4b, where the language of that book shifts from Hebrew to Aramaic. Ezra 4:8-6:18 and 7:12-26 are written in Aramaic, whereas the rest of the book is written in Hebrew. §† tn: Aram “lord of the command.” So also in vv. 9, 17. §† sn: Like Rehum, Shimshai was apparently a fairly high-ranking official charged with overseeing Persian interests in this part of the empire. American governmental titles such as “Secretary of State” perhaps provide an analogy in that the word “secretary” can have a broad range of meaning. §§† tn: Or perhaps “against.” §§† tn: Aram “then.” What follows in v. 9 seems to be the preface of the letter, serving to identify the senders of the letter. From that time to the present moment††† it has been in the process of being rebuilt, although it is not yet finished.<sup>1</sup>

Since one would expect the dimensions cited in Ezra 6:3 to correspond to those of Solomon’s temple, it is odd that no dimension for length is provided. <sup>11</sup> “I hereby give orders that if anyone changes this directive a beam is to be pulled out from his house and he is to be raised up and impaled<sup>22</sup> on it, and his house is to be reduced<sup>23</sup> to a rubbish heap<sup>24</sup> for this indiscretion.<sup>2512</sup> May God who makes his name to reside there overthrow any king or nation<sup>26</sup> who reaches out<sup>27</sup> to cause such change so as to destroy this temple of God in Jerusalem. ### The Temple Is Finally Dedicated

7 Now after these things had happened, during the reign of King Artaxerxes§† of Persia, Ezra came up from Babylon.§† Ezra was the son of Seraiah, who was the son of Azariah, who was the son of Hilkiah, <sup>2</sup>

The phrase has also been taken to mean "the younger sons (so NAB), or the ones who "returned at a later date" (so TEV). <sup>20</sup> tc: The translation reads with the Qere, the Lucianic Greek recension, the Syriac Peshitta, and the Vulgate וְזָכוּ

The Exiles Travel to Jerusalem

<sup>15</sup> I had them assemble† at the canal†† that flows toward Ahava, and we camped there for three days. I observed that the people and the priests were present, but I found no Levites there. <sup>16</sup> So I sent for Eliezer, Ariel, Shemaiah, Elnathan, Jarib, Elnathan, † Nathan, Zechariah, and Meshullam, who were leaders, and Joiarib and Elnathan, who were teachers. <sup>17</sup> I sent them to Iddo, who was the leader in the place called Casiphia. I told them†† what to say to Iddo and his relatives, † who were the temple servants in†† Casiphia, so they would bring us attendants for the temple of our God.

<sup>18</sup> Due to the fact that the good hand of our God was on us, they brought us a skilled man, from the descendants of Mahli the son of Levi son of Israel. This man was Sherebiah, †† who was accompanied by his sons and brothers, § 18 men, <sup>19</sup> and Hashabiah, along with Jeshaiiah from the descendants of Merari, with his brothers and their sons, 20 men, <sup>20</sup> and some of the temple servants that David and his officials had established for the work of the Levites – 220 of them. They were all designated by name.

<sup>21</sup> I called for a fast there by the Ahava Canal, so that we might humble ourselves before our God and seek from him a safe journey§† for us, our children, and all our property. <sup>22</sup> I was embarrassed to request soldiers and horsemen from the king to protect us from the enemy§†† along the way, because we had said to the king, “The good hand of our God is on everyone who is seeking him, but his great anger§† is against everyone who forsakes him.” <sup>23</sup> So we fasted and prayed to our God about this, and he answered us.

<sup>24</sup> Then I set apart twelve of the leading priests, together with§†† Sherebiah, Hashabiah, and ten of their brothers, §†<sup>25</sup> and I weighed out to them the silver, the gold, and the vessels intended for the temple of our God – items that the king, his advisers, his officials, and all Israel who were present had contributed. <sup>26</sup> I weighed out to them§† 650 talents of silver, silver vessels worth 100 talents, §†† 100 talents of gold, <sup>27</sup> 20

The silver and the gold are a voluntary offering to the LORD, the God of your fathers. <sup>29</sup> Be careful with them and protect them, until you weigh them out before the leading priests and the Levites and the family leaders of Israel in Jerusalem, §†† in the storerooms of the temple of the LORD.”

<sup>30</sup> Then the priests and the Levites took charge of§§§ the silver, the gold, and the vessels that had been weighed out, to transport them to Jerusalem to the temple of our God.

<sup>31</sup> On the twelfth day of the first month we began traveling from the Ahava Canal to go to Jerusalem. The hand of our God was on us, and he delivered us from our enemy and from bandits<sup>18</sup> along the way. <sup>32</sup> So we came to Jerusalem, and we stayed there for three days. <sup>33</sup> On the fourth day we weighed out the silver, the gold, and the vessels in the house of our God into the care<sup>19</sup> of Meremoth son of Uriah, the priest, and Eleazar son of Phinehas, who were accompanied by Jozabad son of Jeshua and Noadiah son of Binnui, who were Levites. <sup>34</sup> Everything was verified<sup>20</sup> by number and by weight, and the total weight was written down at that time.

<sup>35</sup> The exiles who were returning from the captivity offered burnt offerings to the God of Israel – twelve bulls for all Israel, ninety-six rams, seventy-seven male lambs, along with twelve male goats as a sin offering. All this was a burnt offering to the LORD. <sup>36</sup> Then they presented the decrees of the king to the king’s satraps and to the governors of Trans-Euphrates, who gave help to the people and to the temple of God.

9 Now when these things had been completed, the leaders approached me and said, “The people of Israel, the priests, and the Levites have not separated themselves from the local residents<sup>21</sup> who practice detestable things similar to those of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Perizzites, the Jebusites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Egyptians, and the Amorites. <sup>2</sup> Indeed, they have taken some of their daughters as wives for themselves and for their sons, so that the holy race<sup>22</sup> has become intermingled with the local residents. Worse still, the leaders and the officials have been at the forefront of all of this!”

one who held the words of the God of Israel in awe† gathered around me because of the unfaithful acts of the people of the exile. †† Devastated, I continued to sit there until the evening offering.

<sup>5</sup> At the time of the evening offering I got up from my self-abasement, ‡ with my tunic and robe torn, and then dropped to my knees and spread my hands to the LORD my God. <sup>6</sup> I prayed, ††

"O my God, I am ashamed and embarrassed to lift my face to you, my God! For our iniquities have climbed higher than our heads, and our guilt extends to the heavens. <sup>7</sup> From the days of our fathers until this very day our guilt has been great. Because of our iniquities we, along with our kings and†† priests, have been delivered over by the local kings††† to sword, captivity, plunder, and embarrassment – right up to the present time.

<sup>8</sup> " But now briefly††† we have received mercy from the LORD our God, in that he has left us a remnant and has given us a secure position§ in his holy place. Thus our God has enlightened our eyes§† and has given us a little relief in our time of servitude. <sup>9</sup> Although we are slaves, our God has not abandoned us in our servitude. He has extended kindness to us in the sight of the kings of Persia, in that he has revived us§†† to restore the temple of our God and to raise§† up its ruins and to give us a protective wall in Judah and Jerusalem. §††

Would you not be so angered by us that you would wipe us out, with no survivor or remnant? <sup>15</sup> O LORD God of Israel, you are righteous, for we are left as a remnant this day. Indeed, we stand before you in our guilt. However, because of this guilt§§§ no one can really stand before you."

10 While Ezra was praying and confessing, weeping and throwing himself to the ground before the temple of God, a very large crowd of Israelites – men, women, and children alike – gathered around him. The people wept loudly. <sup>182</sup> Then Shecaniah son of Jehiel, from the descendants of Elam, <sup>19</sup> addressed Ezra :

"We have been unfaithful to our God by marrying<sup>20</sup> foreign women from the local peoples. <sup>21</sup> Nonetheless, there is still hope for Israel in this regard. <sup>223</sup> Therefore let us enact<sup>23</sup> a covenant with our God to send away all these women and their offspring, in keeping with your counsel, my lord, <sup>24</sup> and that of those who respect<sup>25</sup> the commandments of our God. And let it be done according to the law. <sup>4</sup> Get up, for this matter concerns you. We are with you, so be strong and act decisively!"

But the context seems to suggest that a human lord is intended. The apparatus of BHS suggests repointing the word as a singular ("my lord"), but this is unnecessary. The plural ("my lords") can be understood in an honorific sense even when a human being is in view. Most English versions regard this as a reference to Ezra, so the present translation supplies "your" before "counsel" to make this clear. 25 tn: Heb "who tremble at"; NAB, NIV "who fear." 26 tn: Heb "to do according to this plan." 27 tc: The translation reads וְלָךְ

<sup>9</sup> All the men of Judah and Benjamin were gathered in Jerusalem within the three days. (It was in the ninth month, on the twentieth day of that month.) All the people sat in the square at the temple of God, trembling because of this matter and because of the rains.

<sup>10</sup> Then Ezra the priest stood up and said to them, "You have behaved in an unfaithful manner by taking foreign wives! This has contributed to the guilt of Israel." <sup>11</sup> Now give praise to the LORD God of your fathers, and do his will. Separate yourselves from the local residents† and from these foreign wives."

<sup>12</sup> All the assembly replied in a loud voice: "We will do just as you have said!"<sup>††13</sup> However, the people are numerous and it is the rainy season. ‡ We are unable to stand here outside. Furthermore, this business cannot be resolved in a day or two, for we have sinned greatly in this matter. <sup>14</sup> Let our leaders take steps†† on behalf of all the assembly. Let all those in our towns who have married foreign women come at an appointed time, and with them the elders of each town and its judges, until the hot anger of our God is turned away from us in this matter."

Those Who Had Taken Foreign Wives

§† tc: The final statement in v. 44 is difficult in terms of both its syntax and its meaning. The present translation attempts to make sense of the MT. But the passage may have undergone corruption in the transmission process. One proposal is that the text should be emended to read "and they sent these wives and children away" (cf. NAB, NRSV, TEV, CEV).

A Prayer of Nehemiah †

1 These are the words of Nehemiah†† son of Hachaliah:

It so happened that in the month of Kislev, in the twentieth year, † I was in Susa†† the citadel. <sup>2</sup> Hanani, who was one of my relatives, †† along with some of the men from Judah, came to me,††† and I asked them about the Jews who had escaped and had survived the exile, and about Jerusalem. †††

<sup>3</sup> They said to me, "The remnant that remains from the exile there in the province are experiencing considerable§ adversity and reproach. The wall of Jerusalem lies breached, and its gates have been burned down!"§†

<sup>4</sup> When I heard these things I sat down abruptly,§†† crying and mourning for several days. I continued fasting and praying before the God of heaven. <sup>5</sup> Then I said, "Please, O LORD God of heaven, great and awesome God, who keeps his loving covenant§† with those who love him and obey§†† his commandments, <sup>6</sup> may your ear be attentive and your eyes be open to hear the prayer of your servant that I am praying to you today throughout both day and night on behalf of your servants the Israelites. I am confessing the sins of the † sn: In ancient Judaism Ezra and Nehemiah were regarded as a single book with dual authorship. According to the Talmud, "Ezra wrote his book" ( b. Bava Batra 15a). The Gemara then asks and answers, "And who finished it? Nehemiah the son of Hachaliah." Accordingly, the two are joined in the Leningrad Codex (ca. A.D.

4 Now when Sanballat heard that we were rebuilding the wall he became angry and was quite upset. He derided the Jews, and in the presence of his colleagues and the army of Samaria he said, "What are these feeble Jews doing? Will they be left to themselves? Will they again offer sacrifice? Will they finish this in a day? Can they bring these burnt stones to life again from piles of dust?"

3 Then Tobiah the Ammonite, who was close by, said, "If even a fox were to climb up on what they are building, it would break down their wall of stones!"

4 Hear, O our God, for we are despised! Return their reproach on their own head! Reduce them to plunder in a land of exile! Do not cover their iniquity, and do not wipe out their sin from before them. For they have bitterly offended the builders!

6 So we rebuilt the wall, and the entire wall was joined together up to half its height. The people were enthusiastic in their work.

7 When Sanballat, Tobiah, the Arabs, the Ammonites, and the people of Ashdod heard that the restoration of the walls of Jerusalem had moved ahead and that the breaches had begun to be closed, they were very angry. All of them conspired together to move with armed forces against Jerusalem and to create a disturbance in it. So we prayed to our God and stationed a guard to protect against them both day and night. Then those in Judah said, "The strength of the laborers has failed! The debris is so great that we are unable to rebuild the wall."

11 Our adversaries also boasted, "Before they are aware or anticipate anything, we will come in among them and kill them, and we will bring this work to a halt!"

12 So it happened that the Jews who were living near them came and warned us repeatedly about all the schemes they were plotting against us.

13 So I stationed people at the lower places behind the wall in the exposed places. I stationed the people by families, with their swords, spears, and bows. When I had made an inspection, I stood up and said to the nobles, the officials, and the rest of the people,

"Don't be afraid of them. Remember the great and awesome Lord, † and fight on behalf of your brothers, your sons, your daughters, your wives, and your families!" ††

15 It so happened that when our adversaries heard that we were aware of these matters,‡ God frustrated their intentions. Then all of us returned to the wall, each to his own work. 16 From that day forward, half of my men were doing the work and half of them were taking up spears, †† shields, bows, and body armor. Now the officers were behind all the people‡‡ of Judah17 who were rebuilding the wall. ††† Those who were carrying loads did so‡‡‡ by keeping one hand on the work and the other on their weapon. 18 The builders to a man had their swords strapped to their sides while they were building. But the trumpeter§ remained with me.

19 I said to the nobles, the officials, and the rest of the people, "The work is demanding§† and extensive, and we are spread out on the wall, far removed from one another. 20 Wherever you hear the sound of the trumpet, gather there with us. Our God will fight for us!"

21 So we worked on,§†† with half §† holding spears, from dawn till dusk. §††† At that time I instructed§† the people, "Let every man and his coworker spend the night in Jerusalem and let them be guards for us by night and workers by day. 23 We did not change clothes§† – not I, nor my relatives, nor my workers, nor the watchmen who were with me. Each had his weapon, even when getting a drink of water. §††

5 Then there was a great outcry from the people and their wives against their fellow Jews. §††† There were those who said, "With our sons and daughters, we are many. We must obtain§§§ grain in order to eat and stay alive." 3 There were others who said, "We are putting up our fields, our vineyards, and our houses as collateral in order to obtain grain during the famine." 4 Then there were those who said, "We have borrowed money to pay our taxes to the king18 on our fields and our vineyards. 5 And now, though we share the same flesh and blood as our fellow countrymen, 19 and our children are just like their children, 20 still we have found it necessary to subject our sons and daughters to slavery. 21 Some of our daughters have been subjected to slavery, while we are powerless to help, 22 since our fields and vineyards now belong to other people." 23

6 I was very angry when I heard their outcry and these complaints. 247 I considered these things carefully25 and then registered a complaint with the wealthy26 and the officials. I said to them, "Each one of you is seizing the collateral27 from your own countrymen!" 28 Because of them I called for29 a great public assembly. 8 I said to them, "To the extent possible we have bought back our fellow Jews30 who had been sold to the Gentiles. But now you yourselves want to sell your own countrymen, 31 so that we can then buy them back!" They were utterly silent, and could find nothing to say.

9 Then I32 said, "The thing that you are doing is wrong!33 Should you not conduct yourselves34 in the fear of our God in order to avoid the reproach of the Gentiles who are our enemies? 10 Even I and my relatives35 and my associates36 are lending them money and grain. But let us abandon this practice of seizing collateral! 3711 This very day return to them their fields, their vineyards, their olive trees, and their houses, along with the interest38 that you are exacting from

ing to the flesh of our brothers is our flesh." 20 tn: Heb "like their children, our children." 21 tn: Heb "to become slaves" (also later in this verse). 22 tn: Heb "there is not power for our hand." The Hebrew expression used here is rather difficult. 23 sn: The poor among the returned exiles were being exploited by their rich countrymen. Moneylenders were loaning large amounts of money, and not only collecting interest on loans which was illegal ( Lev 25:36-37; Deut 23:19-20), but also seizing pledges as collateral ( Neh 5:3) which was allowed ( Deut 24:10). When the debtors missed a payment, the moneylenders would seize their collateral: their fields, vineyards and homes. With no other means of income, the debtors were forced to sell their children into slavery, a common practice at this time ( Neh 5:5). Nehemiah himself was one of the moneylenders ( Neh 5:10), but he insisted that seizure of collateral from fellow Jewish countrymen was ethically wrong ( Neh 5:9). 24 tn: Heb "words." 25 tn: Heb "my heart was advised upon me." 26 tn: Heb "nobles." 27 tn: Heb "taking a creditor's debt." Then I called the priests and made the wealthy and the officials†† swear to do what had been promised. <sup>‡13</sup> I also shook out my garment, ‡† and I said, "In this way may God shake out from his house and his property every person who does not carry out‡‡ this matter. In this way may he be shaken out and emptied!" All the assembly replied, "So be it!" and they praised the LORD. Then the people did as they had promised. ‡‡†

14 From the day that I was appointed‡‡‡ governor§ in the land of Judah, that is, from the twentieth year until the thirty-second year of King Artaxerxes – twelve years in all – neither I nor my relatives §† ate the food allotted to the governor. <sup>§††15</sup> But the former governors who preceded me had burdened the people and had taken food and wine from them, in addition to§‡ forty shekels of silver. Their associates were also domineering over the people. But I did not behave in this way, due to my fear of God. <sup>16</sup> I gave myself to the work on this wall, without even purchasing§‡† a field. All my associates were gathered there for the work.

17 There were 150 Jews and officials who dined with me routinely, §† in addition to those who came to us from the nations§‡ all around us. <sup>18</sup> Every day one ox, six select sheep, and some birds were prepared for me, and every ten days all kinds of wine in abundance. Despite all this I did not require the food allotted to the governor, for the work was demanding on this people.

19 Please remember me for good, O my God, for all that I have done for this people.

6 When Sanballat, Tobiah, Geshem the Arab, and the rest of our enemies heard that I had rebuilt the wall and no breach remained in it (even though up to that time I had not positioned doors in the gates), <sup>2</sup> Sanballat and Geshem sent word to me saying, "Come on! Let's set up a time to meet together at Kephirim§§† in the plain of Ono." Now they intended to do me harm.

<sup>3</sup> So I sent messengers to them saying, "I am engaged in§§‡ an important work, and I am unable to come down. Why should the work come to a halt when I leave it to come down to you?" <sup>4</sup> They contacted§§§ me four times in this way, and I responded the same way each time. <sup>18</sup>

<sup>5</sup> The fifth time that Sanballat sent his assistant to me in this way, he had an open letter in his hand. <sup>6</sup> Written in it were the following words:

"Among the nations it is rumored<sup>19</sup> (and Geshem<sup>20</sup> has substantiated<sup>21</sup> this) that you and the Jews have intentions of revolting, and for this reason you are building the wall. Furthermore, according to these rumors<sup>22</sup> you are going to become their king. <sup>7</sup> You have also established prophets to announce<sup>23</sup> in Jerusalem<sup>24</sup> on your behalf, 'We have a king in Judah!' Now the king is going to hear about these rumors. So come on! Let's talk about this." <sup>25</sup>

<sup>8</sup> I sent word back to him, "We are not engaged in these activities you are describing. <sup>26</sup> All of this is a figment of your imagination." <sup>27</sup>

<sup>9</sup> All of them were wanting<sup>28</sup> to scare us, supposing, "Their hands will grow slack from the work, and it won't get done."

So now, strengthen my hands! <sup>29</sup>

<sup>10</sup> Then I went to the house of Shemaiah son of De-laiah, the son of Mehetabel. He was confined to his home.<sup>30</sup> He said, "Let's set up a time to meet in the house of God, within the temple. Let's close the doors

The Rebuilding of the Wall Is Finally Completed

<sup>15</sup> So the wall was completed on the twenty-fifth day of Elul, in just fifty-two days. <sup>16</sup> When all our enemies heard and all the nations who were around us saw this, they were greatly disheartened. They knew that this work had been accomplished with the help of our God.

<sup>17</sup> In those days the aristocrats of Judah repeatedly sent letters to Tobiah, and responses from Tobiah were repeatedly coming to them. <sup>18</sup> For many in Judah had sworn allegiance to him, because he was the son-in-law of Shecaniah son of Arah. His son Jonathan had married the daughter of Meshullam son of Berechiah. <sup>19</sup> They were telling me about his good deeds and then taking back to him the things I said. <sup>20</sup> Tobiah, on the other hand, sent letters in order to scare me.

7 When the wall had been rebuilt and I had positioned the doors, and the gatekeepers, the singers, and the Levites had been appointed, <sup>2</sup> I then put in charge over Jerusalem my brother Hanani and Hananiah the chief of the citadel, for he was a faithful man and feared God more than many do. <sup>3</sup> I said to them, "The gates of Jerusalem must not be opened in the early morning, until those who are standing guard close the doors and lock them. Position residents of Jerusalem as guards, some at their guard stations and some near their homes." <sup>4</sup> Now the city was spread out and large, and there were not a lot of people in it. At that time houses had not been rebuilt. <sup>5</sup> My God placed it on my heart to gather the leaders, the officials, and the ordinary people so they could be enrolled on the basis of genealogy. I found the genealogical records of those who had formerly returned. Here is what I found written in that record: <sup>19</sup>

<sup>6</sup> These are the people of the province who returned from the captivity of the exiles, whom King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon had forced into exile. <sup>22</sup> They returned to Jerusalem and to Judah, each to his own city. <sup>7</sup> They came with Zerubbabel, Jeshua, Nehemiah, Azariah, Raamiah, Nahamani, Mordecai, Bishan, Mispereth, Bigvai, Nehum, and Baanah.

The number of Israelite men was as follows:

The People Respond to the Reading of the Law

When the seventh month arrived and the Israelites§† were settled in their cities, §†

8 all the people gathered together§§† in the plaza which was in front of the Water Gate. They asked§§† Ezra the scribe to bring the book of the law of Moses which the LORD had commanded Israel. <sup>2</sup> So Ezra the priest brought the law before the assembly which included men and women and all those able to

Sallu son of Meshullam, the son of Joed, the son of Pedaiah, the son of Kolaiah, the son of Maaseiah, the son of Ithiel, the son of Jeshaiiah, <sup>8</sup> and his followers, †† Gabbai and Sallai – 928 in all. <sup>9</sup> Joel son of Zicri was the officer in charge of them, and Judah son of Has-senuah was second-in-command over the city.

Jedaiah son of Joiarib, Jakin, <sup>11</sup> Seraiah son of Hilkiyah, the son of Meshullam, the son of Zadok, the son of Meraioth, the son of Ahitub, supervisor in the temple of God, <sup>12</sup> and their colleagues‡ who were carrying out work for the temple – 822; and Adaiah son of Jeroham, the son of Pelaliah, the son of Amzi, the son of Zechariah, the son of Pashhur, the son of Malkijah, <sup>13</sup> and his colleagues who were heads of families†† – 242; and Amashsai son of Azarel, the son of Ahzai, the son of Meshillemoth, the son of Immer, <sup>14</sup> and his colleagues‡‡ who were exceptional men – 128. Shemaiah son of Hasshub, the son of Azrikam, the son of Hashabiah, the son of Bunni; <sup>16</sup> Shabbethai and Jozabad, leaders‡‡† of the Levites, were in charge of the external work for the temple of God; <sup>17</sup> Mattaniah son of Mica, the son of Zabdi, the son of Asaph, the praise‡‡‡ leader who led in thanksgiving and prayer; Bakbukiah, second among his colleagues; and Abda son of Shammua, the son of Galal, the son of Jeduthun. <sup>18</sup> The sum total of the Levites in the holy city was 284.

<sup>19</sup> And the gatekeepers:

<sup>20</sup> And the rest of the Israelites, with the priests and the Levites, were in all the cities of Judah, each on his own property.

<sup>21</sup> The temple attendants were living on Ophel, and Ziha and Gishpa were over them. §

<sup>22</sup> The overseer of the Levites in Jerusalem was Uzzi son of Bani, the son of Hashabiah, the son of Mattaniah, the son of Mica. He was one of Asaph's descen-

tophathites<sup>29</sup> and from Beth Gilgal and from the fields of Geba and Azmaveth, for the singers had built settlements for themselves around Jerusalem. 30 When the priests and Levites had purified themselves, they purified the people, the gates, and the wall.

31 I brought the leaders of Judah up on top of the wall, and I appointed two large choirs to give thanks. One was to proceedst on the top of the wall southward toward the Dung Gate. 32 Going after them were Hoshaiiah, half the leaders of Judah, 33 Azariah, Ezra, Meshullam, 34 Judah, Benjamin, Shemaiah, Jeremiah, 35 some of the priests<sup>st†</sup> with trumpets, Zechariah son of Jonathan, the son of Shemaiah, the son of Mattaniah, the son of Micaiah, the son of Zaccur, the son of Asaph, 36 and his colleagues – Shemaiah, Azarel, Milalai, Gilalai, Maai, Nethanel, Judah, and Hanani – with musical instruments of<sup>st†</sup> David the man of God. (Ezra the scribe led them.) <sup>st†</sup> They went over the Fountain Gate and continued directly up the steps of the City of David on the ascent to the wall. They passed the house of David and continued on to the Water Gate toward the east.

38 The second choir was proceeding<sup>18</sup> in the opposite direction. I followed them, along with half the people, on top of the wall, past the Tower of the Ovens to the Broad Wall, 39 over the Ephraim Gate, the Jeshanah Gate, 19 the Fish Gate, the Tower of Hananel, and the Tower of the Hundred, to the Sheep Gate. They stopped<sup>20</sup> at the Gate of the Guard.

40 Then the two choirs that gave thanks took their stations<sup>21</sup> in the temple of God. I did also, along with half the officials with me, 41 and the priests – Eliakim, Maaseiah, Miniamin, Micaiah, Elioenai, Zechariah, and Hananiah, with their trumpets – 42 and also Maaseiah, Shemaiah, Eleazar, Uzzi, Jehohanan, Malkijah, Elam, and Ezer. The choirs sang loudly<sup>22</sup> under the direction of Jezrahiah. 43 And on that day they offered great sacrifices and rejoiced, for God had given them great joy. The women and children also rejoiced. The rejoicing in Jerusalem could be heard from far away.

44 On that day men were appointed over the storerooms for the contributions, first fruits, and tithes, to gather into them from<sup>23</sup> the fields of the cities the portions prescribed by the law for the priests and the Levites, for the people of Judah<sup>24</sup> took delight in the priests and Levites who were ministering. <sup>2545</sup> They performed the service of their God and the service of purification, along with the singers and gatekeepers, according to the commandment of David and<sup>t</sup> his son Solomon.<sup>46</sup> For long ago, in the days of David and Asaph, there had been directors†† for the singers and for the songs of praise and thanks to God.<sup>47</sup> So in the days of Zerubbabel and in the days of Nehemiah, all Israel was contributing the portions for the singers and gatekeepers, according to the daily need.‡ They also set aside†† the portion for the Levites, and the Levites set aside the portion for the descendants of Aaron.

<sup>4</sup> But prior to this time, Eliashib the priest, a relative of Tobiah, had been appointed over the storerooms§ of the temple of our God.<sup>5</sup> He made for himself a large storeroom where previously they had been keeping§† the grain offering, the incense, and the vessels, along with the tithes of the grain, the new wine, and the olive oil as commanded for the Levites, the singers, the gate keepers, and the offering for the priests.

<sup>6</sup> During all this time I was not in Jerusalem,§†† for in the thirty-second year of King Artaxerxes of Babylon, I had gone back to the king. After some time§† I had requested leave of the king,<sup>7</sup> and I returned to Jerusalem. Then I discovered the evil that Eliashib had done for Tobiah by supplying him with a storeroom in the courts of the temple of God.<sup>8</sup> I was very upset, and I threw all of Tobiah's household possessions out of the storeroom.<sup>9</sup> Then I gave instructions that the storerooms should be purified, and I brought back the equipment§†† of the temple of God, along with the grain offering and the incense.

<sup>10</sup> I also discovered that the grain offerings for the Levites had not been provided, and that as a result the Levites and the singers who performed this work had all gone off to their fields.<sup>11</sup> So I registered a complaint with the leaders, asking "Why is the temple of God neglected?" Then I gathered them and reasigned them to their positions.§†

<sup>12</sup> Then all of Judah brought the tithe of the grain, the new wine, and the olive oil to the storerooms.<sup>13</sup> I gave instructions§† that Shelemiah the priest, Zadok the scribe, and a certain Levite named Pedaiah be put in charge of§§† the storerooms, and that Hanan son of Zaccur, the son of Mattaniah, be their assistant,§§† for they were regarded as trustworthy. It was then their responsibility to oversee the distribution to their colleagues.§§§

<sup>14</sup> Please remember me for this, O my God, and do not wipe out the kindness that I have done for the temple of my God and for its services!

<sup>15</sup> In those days I saw people in Judah treading winepresses on the Sabbath, bringing in heaps of grain and loading them onto donkeys, along with wine, grapes, figs, and all kinds of loads, and bringing them to Jerusalem on the Sabbath day. So I warned them on the day that they sold these provisions.<sup>16</sup> The people from Tyre<sup>18</sup> who lived there were bringing fish and all kinds of merchandise and were selling it on the Sabbath to the people of Judah – and in Jerusalem, of all places!<sup>19,17</sup> So I registered a complaint with the nobles of Judah, saying to them, "What is this evil thing that you are doing, profaning the Sabbath day?<sup>18</sup> Isn't this the way your ancestors<sup>20</sup> acted, causing our God to bring on them and on this city all this misfortune? And now you are causing even more wrath on Israel, profaning the Sabbath like this!"

The author clearly takes pleasure in the effectiveness of the measures that he had enacted.

For this please remember me, O my God, and have pity on me in keeping with your great love.

<sup>23</sup> Also in those days I saw the men of Judah who had married women from Ashdod, Ammon, and Moab. <sup>24</sup> Half of their children spoke the language of Ashdod (or the language of one of the other peoples mentioned†) and were unable to speak the language of Judah. <sup>25</sup> So I entered a complaint with them. I called down a curse on them, and I struck some of the men and pulled out their hair. I had them swear by God saying, "You will not marry off†† your daughters to their sons, and you will not take any of their daughters as wives for your sons or for yourselves!" <sup>26</sup> Was it not because of things like these that King Solomon of Israel sinned? Among the many nations there was no king like him. He was loved by his God, and God made‡ him king over all Israel. But the foreign wives made even him sin! <sup>27</sup> Should we then in your case hear that

<sup>29</sup> Please remember them, O my God, because they have defiled the priesthood, the covenant of the priesthood, ‡‡ and the Levites.

<sup>30</sup> So I purified them of everything foreign, and I assigned specific‡‡‡ duties to the priests and the Levites.

Most recent English versions render this as “Susa.” sn: The city of Susa served as one of several capitals of Persia during this time; the other locations were Ecbatana, Babylon, and Persepolis. Partly due to the extreme heat of its summers, Susa was a place where Persian kings stayed mainly in the winter months. Strabo indicates that reptiles attempting to cross roads at midday died from the extreme heat ( Geography 15.3.10-11). § tn: The Hebrew word בִּיחָה

However, there is no textual evidence for this emendation, and the large numbers are not necessarily improbable. §‡ sn: Unlike the Book of Daniel, the usual order for this expression in Esther is “Persia and Media” (cf. vv. 14, 18, 19). In Daniel the order is “Media and Persia,” indicating a time in their history when Media was in the ascendancy. §‡† sn: The size of the banquet described here, the number of its invited guests, and the length of its duration, although certainly immense by any standard, are not without precedent in the ancient world. C. A. Drinks† were served in golden containers, all of which differed from one another. Royal wine was available in abundance at the king's expense.<sup>8</sup> There were no restrictions on the drinking,†† for the king had instructed all of his supervisors‡ that they should do as everyone so desired.‡‡ Queen Vashti‡‡ also gave a banquet for the women in King Ahasuerus' royal palace.

Queen Vashti is Removed from Her Royal Position

<sup>10</sup> On the seventh day, as King Ahasuerus was feeling the effects of the wine,‡‡ he ordered Mehuman, Biztha, Harbona, Bigtha, Abagtha, Zethar, and Carcas, the seven eunuchs who attended him,<sup>‡‡11</sup> to bring Queen Vashti into the king's presence wearing her royal high turban. He wanted to show the people and the officials her beauty, for she was very attractive.<sup>§12</sup> But Queen Vashti refused§† to come at the king's bidding§†† conveyed through the eunuchs. Then the king became extremely angry, and his rage consumed§† him.

<sup>13</sup> The king then inquired of the wise men who were discerners of the times – for it was the royal custom to confer with all those who were proficient in laws and legalities.<sup>§†14</sup> Those who were closest to him were Carshena, Shethar, Admatha, Tarshish, Meres, Marse-na, and Memucan. These men were the seven officials of Persia and Media who saw the king on a regular basis§† and had the most prominent offices§† in the kingdom.<sup>15</sup> The king asked§§† “By law,§§† what should be done to Queen Vashti in light of the fact that she has

But in the Greek histories of this period the queen's name is given as Amestris (e.g., Herodotus, Histories 9.108-13). The name Vashti does not seem to occur in the nonbiblical records from this period. Apparently the two women are not to be confused, but not enough is known about this period to reconcile completely the biblical and extrabiblical accounts. ‡†† tn: Heb “as the heart of the king was good with the wine.” Here the proper name (King Ahasuerus) has been substituted for the title in the translation for stylistic reasons. ‡‡† tn: Heb “King Ahasuerus”; here the proper name has been replaced by the pronoun “him” in the translation for stylistic reasons. Cf. similarly NIV, NCV, CEV, NLT “King Xerxes.” § tn: Heb “was good of appearance”; KJV “was fair to look on”; NAB “was lovely to behold.” §† sn: Refusal to obey the king was risky even for a queen in the ancient world. It is not clear why Vashti behaved so rashly and put herself in such danger. Apparently she anticipated humiliation of some kind and was unwilling to subject herself to it, in spite of the obvious dangers. There is no justification in the biblical text for an ancient Jewish targumic tradition that the king told her to appear before his guests dressed in nothing but her royal high turban, that is, essentially naked. §†† tn: Heb “at the word of the king”; NASB “at the king's command.” §‡ tn: Heb “burned in him” (so KJV). §†† tn: Heb “judgment” (so KJV); NASB, NIV “justice”; NRSV “custom.” §† tn: Heb “seers of the face of the king”; NASB “who had access to the king's presence.” §† tn: Heb “were sitting first”; NAB “held first rank in the realm.” §§† tn: These words are not present in the Hebrew text, but have

<sup>21</sup> The matter seemed appropriate to the king and the officials. So the king acted on the advice of Memucan.<sup>22</sup> He sent letters throughout all the royal provinces, to each province according to its own script and to each people according to its own language,<sup>24</sup> that every man should be ruling his family<sup>25</sup> and NIV, NCV, CEV, NLT, all of which supply similar phrases). §§† tc: The location of the prepositional phrase “according to law” is somewhat unusual in the Hebrew text, but not so much so as to require emendation. Some scholars suggest deleting the phrase as an instance of dittography from the final part of the immediately preceding word in v. 14. Others suggest taking the phrase with the end of v. 14 rather than with v. 15. Both proposals, however, lack adequate justification. §§§ sn: Heb “If upon the king it is good”; KJV “If it please the king.” Deferential language was common in ancient Near Eastern court language addressing a despot; it occurs often in Esther. 18 sn: Laws...that cannot be repealed. But here, in anticipation of her demotion, the title is dropped. 20 tn: Heb “her neighbor”; NIV “someone else.” 21 tn: Heb “who is better than she.” The reference is apparently to worthiness of the royal position as demonstrated by compliance with the king's wishes, although the word יָבוֹ

Educated people throughout the kingdom could be expected to have competence in this language. But in the situation described in v. 22 a variety of local languages are to be used, and not just Aramaic, so as to make the king's edict understandable to the largest possible number of people. 25 tn: Heb “in his house”; NIV “over his own household.”

should be speaking the language of his own people. †

2 When these things had been accomplished†† and the rage of King Ahasuerus had diminished, he remembered‡ Vashti and what she had done and what had been decided‡‡ against her. 2 The king's servants who attended him said, "Let a search be conducted in the king's behalf for attractive young women. ‡‡‡ And let the king appoint officers throughout all the provinces of his kingdom to gather all the attractive young women to Susa the citadel, to the harem‡‡‡ under the authority of Hegai, the king's eunuch who oversees the women, and let him provide whatever cosmetics they desire. ‡‡‡‡ Let the young woman whom the king finds most attractive§ become queen in place of Vashti." This seemed like a good idea to the king, §† so he acted accordingly.

5 Now there happened to be a Jewish man in Susa the citadel whose name was Mordecai. §†† He was the son of Jair, the son of Shimei, the son of Kish, a Benjaminite, § who had been taken into exile from Jerusalem§† with the captives who had been carried into exile with Jeconiah§†† king of Judah, whom Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon had taken into exile. § Now he was acting as the guardian§† of Hadassah§†

† tc: The final prepositional phrase is not included in the LXX, and this shorter reading is followed by a number of English versions (e.g., NAB, NRSV, NLT). Some scholars suggest the phrase may be the result of dittography from the earlier phrase "to each people according to its language," but this is not a necessary conclusion. The edict was apparently intended to reassert male prerogative with regard to two things (and not just one): sovereign and unquestioned leadership within the family unit, and the right of deciding which language was to be used in the home when a bilingual situation existed. †† tn: Heb "after these things" (so KJV, NASB, NRSV). The expression is very vague from a temporal standpoint, not indicating precisely just how much time might have elapsed. Cf. v. 21. ‡ sn: There may be a tinge of regret expressed in the king's remembrance of Vashti. There is perhaps a hint that he wished for her presence once again, although that was not feasible from a practical standpoint. The suggestions by the king's attendants concerning a replacement seem to be an effort to overcome this nostalgia. Certainly it was to their advantage to seek the betterment of the king's outlook. Those around him the most were probably the most likely to suffer the effects of his ire. ‡† tn: Or "decreed" (so NAB, NASB, NRSV); TEV "and about his proclamation against her." ‡‡ tn: Heb "young women, virgins, good of form." Probably many Jews of the period had two names, one for secular use and the other for use especially within the Jewish community. Mordecai's Jewish name is not recorded in the biblical text. §† map: For location see . §†† sn: Jeconiah is an alternative name for Jehoiachin. 8 It so happened that when the king's edict and his law became known<sup>18</sup> many young women were taken to Susa the citadel to be placed under the authority of Hegai. Esther also was taken to the royal palace<sup>19</sup> to be under the authority of Hegai, who was overseeing the women. 9 This young woman pleased him,<sup>20</sup> and she found favor with him. §†† sn: That Mordecai was sitting at the king's gate apparently means that he was a high-ranking government official. It was at the city gate where important business was transacted. Being in this position afforded Mordecai an opportunity to become aware of the plot against the king's life, although the author does not include the particular details of how this information first came to Mordecai's attention. §† sn: That Esther was able so effectively to conceal her Jewish heritage suggests that she was not consistently observing Jewish dietary and religious requirements. As C. A. Moore observes, "In order for Esther to have concealed her ethnic and religious identity...in the harem, she must have eaten..., dressed, and lived like a Persian rather than

continued to do whatever Mordecai said, just as she had done when he was raising her.

21 In those days while Mordecai was sitting at the king's gate, Bigthan§† and Teresh, §† two of the king's eunuchs who protected the entrance, §†† became angry and plotted to assassinate§†† King Ahasuerus. 22 When Mordecai learned of the conspiracy, §§§ he informed Queen Esther, 18 and Esther told the king in Mordecai's behalf. 19‡‡‡ The king then had the matter investigated and, finding it to be so, had the two conspirators‡‡‡‡ hanged on a gallows. 21 It was then recorded in the daily chronicles in the king's presence.

3 Some time later‡‡‡ King Ahasuerus promoted‡‡‡‡ Haman the son of Hammedatha, the Agagite, exalting him and setting his position‡‡‡‡‡ above that of all the officials who were with him. 2 As a result,‡‡‡‡‡ all the king's servants who were at the king's gate were bowing and paying homage to Haman, for the king had so commanded. However, Mordecai did not bow, 26 nor did he pay him homage.

Ancient Jewish traditions state that Mordecai overheard conspiratorial conversation, or that an informant brought this information to him, or that it came to him as a result of divine prompting. These conjectures are all without adequate support from the biblical text. The author simply does not tell the source of Mordecai's insight into this momentous event. 18 tc: The LXX simply reads "Esther" and does not include "the queen." 19 tc: The LXX adds here "the things concerning the plot." tn: Heb "in the name of Mordecai" (so NRSV); NIV "giving credit to Mordecai." 20 tn: Heb "they both were hanged." The referent (the two eunuchs who conspired against the king) has been specified in the translation for clarity. 21 tn: Or "on a pole"; KJV, ASV "on a tree." 22 tn: Heb "after these things" (so KJV, ASV); NAB, NASB, NIV "After these events." 23 tn: Heb "made great"; NAB "raised...to high rank"; NIV "honored." sn: The promotion of Haman in 3:1 for reasons unexplained contrasts noticeably with 2:19-23, where Mordecai's contribution to saving the king's life goes unnoticed. The irony is striking. 24 tn: Heb "chair"; KJV, NRSV "seat"; NASB "established his authority." 25 tn: Heb "and" (so KJV, NASB, NRSV). Other modern English versions leave the conjunction untranslated here (NAB, NIV, NCV, NLT). 26 sn: Mordecai did not bow. The reason for Mordecai's refusal to bow before Haman is not clearly stated here. Certainly the Jews did not refuse to bow as a matter of principle, as though such an action somehow violated the second command of the Decalogue. Many biblical texts bear witness to their practice of falling prostrate before people of power and influence (e.g., 1 Sam 24:8; 2 Sam 14:4; 1 Kgs 1:16). Perhaps the issue here was that Haman was a descendant of the Amalekites, a people who had attacked Israel in an earlier age (see Exod 17:8-16; 1 Sam 15:17-20; Deut 25:17-19). 27 sn: Mordecai's position in the service of the king brought him into regular contact with these royal officials. Because of this association the officials them, they informed Haman to see whether this attitude on Mordecai's part would be permitted.† Furthermore, he had disclosed to them that he was a Jew.††

<sup>12</sup> So the royal scribes<sup>21</sup> were summoned in the first month, on the thirteenth day of the month. Everything Haman commanded was written to the king's satraps<sup>22</sup> and governors who were in every province and to the officials of every people, province by province according to its script and people by people according to its language. In the name of King Ahasuerus it was written and sealed with the king's signet ring.<sup>13</sup> Letters were sent by the runners to all the king's provinces stating that<sup>23</sup> they should destroy, kill, and annihilate all the Jews, from youth to elderly, both women and children,<sup>24</sup> on a particular day, namely the thirteenth day<sup>25</sup> of the twelfth month (that is, the month of Adar), and to loot and plunder their possessions.<sup>14</sup> A copy of this edict was to be presented as law throughout every province; it was to be made known to all the inhabitants,<sup>26</sup> so that they would be prepared for this day.<sup>15</sup> The messengers<sup>27</sup> scurried forth<sup>28</sup> with the king's order.<sup>29</sup> The edict was issued in Susa the citadel. §§§ sn: The enormity of the monetary sum referred to here can be grasped by comparing this amount (10,000 talents of silver) to the annual income of the empire, which according to Herodotus (Histories 3.95) was 14,500 Euboic talents. In other words Haman is offering the king a bribe equal to two-thirds of the royal income. Doubtless this huge sum of money was to come (in large measure) from the anticipated confiscation of Jewish property and assets once the Jews had been destroyed. That such a large sum of money is mentioned may indicate something of the economic standing of the Jewish population in the empire of King Ahasuerus. 18 sn: Possessing the king's signet ring would enable Haman to act with full royal authority. The king's ring would be used to impress the royal seal on edicts, making them as binding as if the king himself had enacted them. 19 tn: Heb "the silver is given to you"; NRSV "the money is given to you"; CEV "You can keep their money." C. A. Moore (Esther [AB], 40) understands these words somewhat differently, taking them to imply acceptance of the money on Xerxes' part. He translates, "Well, it's your money." 20 tn: Heb "according to what is good in your eyes"; NASB "do with them as you please." 21 tn: Or "secretaries" (so NIV, NRSV, NLT). 22 tn: Or "princes" (so NLT); CEV "highest officials." 23 tn: The words "stating that" are not in the Hebrew text but have been supplied in the translation for clarity. 24 tn: Heb "children and women." This final statement of v. 15 is a sad commentary on the pathetic disregard of despots for the human misery and suffering that they sometimes inflict on those who are helpless to resist their power. Here, while common people braced for the reckless loss of life and property that was about to begin, the perpetrators went about their mundane activities as though nothing of importance was happening.

4 Now when Mordecai became aware of all that had been done, he† tore his garments and put on sackcloth and ashes. He went out into the city, crying out in a loud†† and bitter voice. <sup>2</sup> But he went no further than the king's gate, for no one was permitted to enter the king's gate clothed in sackcloth. <sup>3</sup> Throughout each and every province where the king's edict and law were announced‡ there was considerable †† mourning among the Jews, along with fasting, weeping, and sorrow. ‡‡ Sackcloth and ashes were characteristic‡‡† of many. <sup>4</sup> When Esther's female attendants and her eunuchs came and informed her about Mordecai's behavior,‡‡† the queen was overcome with anguish. Although she sent garments for Mordecai to put on so that he could remove his sackcloth, he would not accept them. <sup>5</sup> So Esther called for Hathach, one of the king's eunuchs who had been placed at her service, § and instructed him to find out the cause and reason for Mordecai's behavior. <sup>§†6</sup> So Hathach went to Mordecai at the plaza of the city in front of the king's gate. <sup>7</sup> Then Mordecai related to him everything that had happened to him, even the specific amount of money that Haman had offered to pay to the king's treasuries for the Jews to be destroyed. <sup>8</sup> He also gave him a written copy of the law that had been disseminated§†† in Susa for their destruction so that he could show it to Esther and talk to her about it. He also gave instructions that she should go to the king to implore him and petition him on behalf of her people. <sup>9</sup> So Hathach returned and related Mordecai's instructions§† to Esther.

Now I have not been invited to come to the king for some thirty days!"

<sup>15</sup> Then Esther sent this reply to Mordecai: <sup>16</sup> "Go, assemble all the Jews who are found in Susa and fast in my behalf. Don't eat and don't drink for three days, night or day. My female attendants and I<sup>21</sup> will also fast in the same way. Afterward I will go to the king, even though it violates the law. <sup>22</sup> If I perish, I perish!"

A repetition of the proper name here is redundant in terms of contemporary English style. §§† tn: Heb "from all the Jews"; KJV "more than all the Jews"; NIV "you alone of all the Jews." §§§ tn: Heb "stand"; KJV, NASB, NIV, NLT "arise." <sup>18</sup> tn: Heb "place" (so KJV, NIV, NLT); NRSV "from another quarter." This is probably an oblique reference to help coming from God. D. J. A. Clines disagrees; in his view a contrast between deliverance by Esther and deliverance by God is inappropriate (Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther [NCBC], 302). But Clines' suggestion that perhaps the reference is to deliverance by Jewish officials or by armed Jewish revolt is less attractive than seeing this veiled reference as part of the literary strategy of the book, which deliberately keeps God's providential dealings entirely in the background. <sup>19</sup> tn: Heb "And who knows whether" (so NASB). The question is one of hope, but free of presumption. Cf. This expression is used twice in this verse. In the first instance, it is apparently the larger palace complex that is in view, whereas in the second instance the expression seems to refer specifically to the quarters from which the king governed. <sup>25</sup> tn: Heb "the entrance of the house" (so ASV). <sup>26</sup> tn: Heb "she obtained grace in his eyes"; NASB "she obtained favor in his sight"; NIV "he was pleased with her"; NLT "he welcomed her." <sup>27</sup> tn: Heb "What to you?"; NAB, NIV NRSV "What is it, Queen Esther?"

So the king and Haman went to the banquet that Esther had prepared. <sup>6</sup> While at the banquet of wine, the king said to Esther, "What is your request? It shall be given to you. What is your petition? Ask for as much as half the kingdom, †† and it shall be done!"

<sup>7</sup> Esther responded, ‡ "My request and my petition is this: <sup>8</sup> If I have found favor in the king's sight and if the king is inclined‡‡ to grant my request and perform my petition, let the king and Haman come tomorrow to the banquet that I will prepare for them. At that time‡‡ I will do as the king wishes. ‡‡‡

Haman Expresses His Hatred of Mordecai

He then sent for his friends to join him,§† along with his wife Zeresh. <sup>11</sup> Haman then recounted to them his fabulous wealth, §†† his many sons, §† and how the king had magnified him and exalted him over the king's other officials and servants. <sup>12</sup> Haman said, "Furthermore, Queen Esther invited§†† only me to accompany the king to the banquet that she prepared! And also tomorrow I am invited§† along with the king. <sup>13</sup> Yet all of this fails to satisfy me so long as I have to see Mordecai the Jew sitting at the king's gate."

<sup>14</sup> Haman's§† wife Zeresh and all his friends said to him, "Have a gallows seventy-five feet§§† high built, and in the morning tell the king that Mordecai should be hanged on it. Then go with the king to the banquet contented." §§†

It seemed like a good idea to Haman, so he had the gallows built.

<sup>4</sup> Then the king said, "Who is that in the courtyard?" Now Haman had come to the outer courtyard of the palace to suggest that the king hang Mordecai on the gallows that he had constructed for him. <sup>5</sup> The king's attendants said to him, "It is Haman who is standing in the courtyard." The king said, "Let him enter."

The Greek text thus understands the statement in a more overtly theological way than does the Hebrew text, although even in the Hebrew text there may be a hint of God's providence at work in this matter. After all, this event is crucial to the later reversal of Haman's plot to destroy the Jewish people, and a sympathetic reader is likely to look beyond the apparent coincidence. <sup>18</sup> tn: Heb "the book of the remembrances of the accounts of the days"; NAB "the chronicle of notable events." <sup>19</sup> tn: Heb "they"; the referent (the records) has been specified in the translation for clarity. <sup>20</sup> tn: This individual is referred to as "Bigthan," a variant spelling of the name, in Esth 2:21. <sup>21</sup> tn: Heb "to send a hand against"; NASB "had sought to lay hands on." <sup>22</sup> tn: Heb "honor and greatness." <sup>11</sup> So Haman took the clothing and the horse, and he clothed Mordecai. He led him about on the horse throughout the plaza of the city, calling before him, "So shall it be done to the man whom the king wishes to honor!"

Then Haman became terrified in the presence of the king and queen. <sup>7</sup> In rage the king arose from the banquet of wine and withdrew to the palace garden. Meanwhile, Haman stood to beg Queen Esther for his life, §†† for he realized that the king had now determined a catastrophic end for him. §‡

<sup>8</sup> When the king returned from the palace garden to the banquet of wine, Haman was throwing himself down§†† on the couch where Esther was lying.§† The king exclaimed, "Will he also attempt to rape the queen while I am still in the building!"

As these words left the king's mouth, they covered Haman's face. <sup>9</sup> Harbona, §‡ one of the king's eunuchs, said, "Indeed, there is the gallows that Haman made for Mordecai, who spoke out in the king's behalf. It stands near Haman's home and is seventy-five feet§§† high."

The king said, "Hang him on it!" <sup>10</sup> So they hanged Haman on the very gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai. The king's rage then abated.

8 On that same day King Ahasuerus gave the estate§§‡ of Haman, that adversary of the Jews, to Queen Esther. Now Mordecai had come before the king, for Esther had revealed how he was related to her. <sup>2</sup> The king then removed his signet ring (the very one he had taken back from Haman) and gave it to Mordecai. And Esther designated Mordecai to be in charge of Haman's estate.

<sup>3</sup> Then Esther again spoke with the king, falling at his feet. She wept and begged him for mercy, that he might nullify the evil of Haman the Agagite which he had intended against the Jews. <sup>§§§4</sup> When the king extended to Esther the gold scepter, she<sup>18</sup> arose and stood before the king.

<sup>5</sup> She said, "If the king is so inclined and if I have met with his approval and if the matter is agreeable to the king and if I am attractive to him, let an edict be written rescinding those recorded intentions of Haman the son of Hammedatha, the Agagite, † which he wrote in order to destroy the Jews who are throughout all the king's provinces. 6 For how can I watch the calamity that will befall my people, and how can I watch the destruction of my relatives?" ††

7 King Ahasuerus replied to Queen Esther and to Mordecai the Jew, "Look, I have already given Haman's estate to Esther, and he has been hanged on the gallows because he took hostile action‡ against the Jews. 8 Now you write in the king's name whatever in your opinion is appropriate concerning the Jews and seal it with the king's signet ring. Any decree that is written in the king's name and sealed with the king's signet ring cannot be rescinded.

9 The king's scribes were quickly‡† summoned – in the third month (that is, the month of Sivan), on the twenty-third day.‡‡ They wrote out ‡‡‡ everything that Mordecai instructed to the Jews and to the satraps and the governors and the officials of the provinces all the way from India to Ethiopia‡‡‡ – a hundred and twenty-seven provinces in all – to each province in its own script and to each people in their own language, and to the Jews according to their own script and their own language. 10 Mordecai‡ wrote in the name of King Ahasuerus and sealed it with the king's signet ring. He then sent letters by couriers on horses, who rode royal horses that were very swift.

11 The king thereby allowed the Jews who were in every city to assemble and to stand up for themselves – to destroy, to kill, and to annihilate any army of whatever people or province that should become their adversaries, including their women and children, ‡† and to confiscate their property. 12 This was to take place on a certain day throughout all the provinces of King Ahasuerus – namely, on the thirteenth day of the twelfth month (that is, the month of Adar). 13 A copy of the edict was to be presented as law throughout each and every province and made known to all peoples, so that the Jews might be prepared on that‡†† day to avenge themselves from their enemies.

15 Now Mordecai went out from the king's presence in purple and white royal attire, with a large golden crown and a purple linen mantle. The city of Susa shouted with joy. §††16 For the Jews there was radiant happiness and joyous honor. §†17 Throughout every province and throughout every city where the king's edict and his law arrived, the Jews experienced happiness and joy, banquets and holidays. Many of the resident peoples‡† pretended‡†† to be Jews, because the fear of the Jews had overcome them. §§†

9 In the twelfth month (that is, the month of Adar), on its thirteenth day, the edict of the king and his law were to be executed. It was on this day that the enemies of the Jews had supposed that they would gain power over them. But contrary to expectations, the Jews gained power over their enemies. 2 The Jews assembled themselves in their cities throughout all the provinces of King Ahasuerus to strike out against those who were seeking their harm. No one was able to stand before them, for dread of them fell on all the peoples. 3 All the officials of the provinces, the satraps, the governors and those who performed the king's business were assisting the Jews, for the dread of Mordecai had fallen on them. 4 Mordecai was of high rank‡‡‡ in the king's palace, and word about him was spreading throughout all the provinces. His influence‡‡ continued to become greater and greater.

5 The Jews struck all their enemies with the sword, bringing death and destruction, and they did as they pleased with their enemies. 6 In Susa the citadel the Jews killed and destroyed five hundred men. 7 In addition, they also killed Parshandatha, Dalphon, Aspatha, 8 Poratha, Adalia, Aridatha, 9 Parmashta, Arisai, Aridai, and Vaizatha, 10 the ten sons of Haman son of Hammedatha, the enemy of the Jews. But they did not confiscate their property.

However, the Hitpael stem of the verb is sometimes used of a feigning action rather than a genuine one (see, e.g., 2 Sam 13:5, 6), which is the way the present translation understands the use of the word here (cf. NEB "professed themselves Jews"; NRSV "professed to be Jews"). This is the only occurrence of this verb in the Hebrew Bible, so there are no exact parallels. However, in the context of v. 17 the motivation of their conversion (Heb "the fear of the Jews had fallen upon them") should not be overlooked. The LXX apparently understood the conversion described here to be genuine, since it adds the words "they were being circumcised and" before "they became Jews." §§§† tn: Heb "had fallen upon them" (so NRSV); NIV "had seized them." §§§§ tn: Heb "great"; NRSV "powerful"; NIV "prominent"; NCV "very important." 18 tn: Heb "the man Mordecai" (so NASB, NRSV).

<sup>11</sup> On that same day the number of those killed in Susa the citadel was brought to the king's attention. <sup>12</sup> Then the king said to Queen Esther, "In Susa the citadel the Jews have killed and destroyed five hundred men and the ten sons of Haman! What then have they done in the rest of the king's provinces? What is your request? It shall be given to you. What other petition do you have? It shall be done."

<sup>13</sup> Esther replied, "If the king is so inclined, let the Jews who are in Susa be permitted to act tomorrow also according to today's law, and let them hang the ten sons of Haman on the gallows."

<sup>14</sup> So the king issued orders for this to be done. A law was passed in Susa, and the ten sons of Haman were hanged. <sup>15</sup> The Jews who were in Susa then assembled on the fourteenth day of the month of Adar, and they killed three hundred men in Susa. But they did not confiscate their property.

The Origins of the Feast of Purim

<sup>18</sup> But the Jews who were in Susa assembled on the thirteenth and fourteenth days, and rested on the fifteenth, making it a day for banqueting and happiness.

<sup>19</sup> This is why the Jews who are in the rural country – those who live in rural cities – set aside the fourteenth day of the month of Adar as a holiday for happiness, banqueting, holiday, and sending gifts to one another.

<sup>23</sup> So the Jews committed themselves to continue what they had begun to do and to what Mordecai had written to them. <sup>24</sup> For Haman the son of Hammedatha, the Agagite, the enemy of all the Jews, had devised plans against the Jews to destroy them. He had cast pur (that is, the lot) in order to afflict and destroy them. <sup>25</sup> But when the matter came to the king's attention, the king† gave written orders that Haman's‡ evil intentions that he had devised against the Jews should fall on his own head. He and his sons were hanged on the gallows. <sup>26</sup> For this reason these days are known as Purim, after the name of pur. <sup>27</sup> Therefore, because of the account found in this letter and what they had faced in this regard and what had happened to them, the Jews established as binding on themselves, their descendants, and all who joined their company that they should observe these two days without fail, just as written and at the appropriate time on an annual basis. <sup>28</sup> These days were to be remembered and to be celebrated in every generation and in every family, every province, and every city. The Jews were not to fail to observe these days of Purim; the remembrance of them was not to cease among their descendants.

of the Book of Esther may be described as follows. At the beginning of Esther there is an account (= chapter 11) of a dream in which Mordecai is warned by God of a coming danger for the Jews. In this account two great dragons, representing Mordecai and Haman, prepare for conflict. But God responds to the prayers of his people, and the crisis is resolved. This account is followed by another one (= chapter 12) in which Mordecai is rewarded for disclosing a plot against the king's life. After Esth 3:13 there is a copy of a letter from King Artaxerxes authorizing annihilation of the Jews (= chapter 13). After Esth 4:17 the account continues with a prayer of Mordecai (= part of chapter 13), followed by a prayer of Esther (= chapter 14), and an account which provides details about Esther's appeal to the king in behalf of her people (= chapter 15). After Esth 8:12 there is a copy of a letter from King Artaxerxes in which he denounces Haman and his plot and authorizes his subjects to assist the Jews (= chapter 16). At the end of the book, following Esth 10:3, there is an addition which provides an interpretation to Mordecai's dream, followed by a brief ascription of genuineness to the entire book (= chapter 11).

Polzin, "The Framework of the Book of Job," Int 31 (1974): 182-200. †† sn: The Book of Job is one of the major books of wisdom literature in the Bible. But it is a different kind of wisdom. Whereas the Book of Proverbs is a collection of the short wisdom sayings, Job is a thorough analysis of the relationship between suffering and divine justice put in a dramatic poetic form. There are a number of treatises on this subject in the ancient Near East, but none of them are as thorough and masterful as Job. See J. Gray, "The Book of Job in the Context of Near Eastern Literature," ZAW 82 (1970): 251-69; S. N. Kramer, "Man and His God, A Sumerian Variation on the 'Job' Motif," VTSup 3 (1953): 170-82. While the book has fascinated readers for ages, it is a difficult book, difficult to translate and difficult to study. Most of it is written in poetic parallelism. But it is often very cryptic, it is written with unusual grammatical constructions, and it makes use of a large number of very rare words. All this has led some scholars to question if it was originally written in Hebrew or some other related Semitic dialect or language first. There is no indication of who the author was. It is even possible that the work may have been refined over the years; but there is no evidence for this either. The book uses a variety of genres (laments, hymns, proverbs, and oracles) in the various speeches of the participants. This all adds to the richness of the material. And while it is a poetic drama using cycles of speeches, there is no reason to doubt that the events represented here do not go back to a real situation and preserve the various arguments. Several indications in the book would place Job's dates in the time of the patriarchs. But the composition of the book, or at least its final form, may very well come from the first millennium, maybe in the time of the flowering of wisdom literature with Solomon. We have no way of knowing when the book was written, or when its revision was completed. But dating it late in the intertestamental period is ruled out by the appearance of translations and copies of it, notably bits of a Targum of Job in the Dead Sea Scrolls. Among the general works and commentaries, see A. Hurvitz, "The Date of the Prose Tale of Job Linguistically Reconsidered," HTR 67 (1974): 17-34; R. H. Pfeiffer, "The Priority of Job over Isaiah 40-55," JBL 46 (1927): 202ff. The book presents many valuable ideas on the subject of the suffering of the righteous. Ultimately it teaches that one must submit to the wisdom of the Creator. But it also indicates that the shallow answers of Job's friends do not do justice to the issue. Their arguments that suffering is due to sin are true to a point, but they did not apply to Job. His protests sound angry and belligerent, but he held tenaciously to his integrity. His experience shows that it is possible to live a pure life and yet still suffer. He finally turns his plea to God, demanding a hearing. This he receives, of course, only to hear that God is sovereignly ruling the universe. Job can only submit to him. In the end God does not abandon his sufferer. For additional material, see G. L. # Job

I. The Prologue (1:1-2:13) Job's Good Life

† tn: The Hebrew construction is literally "a man was," using וַיְהִי

†† sn: The term Uz occurs several times in the Bible: a son of Aram ( Gen 10:23), a son of Nahor ( Gen 22:21), and a descendant of Seir ( Gen 36:28). If these are the clues to follow, the location would be north of Syria or south near Edom. The book tells how Job's flocks were exposed to Chaldeans, the tribes between Syria and the Euphrates ( 1:17), and in another direction to attacks from the Sabeans ( 1:15). The most prominent man among his friends was from Teman, which was in Edom ( 2:11). Uz is also connected with Edom in Lamentations 4:21. The most plausible location, then, would be east of Israel and northeast of Edom, in what is now North Arabia. The LXX has "on the borders of Edom and Arabia." An early Christian tradition placed his home in an area about 40 miles south of Damascus, in Baashan at the southeast foot of Hermon. ‡ tn: In Hebrew the defining relative clause ("whose name was Job") is actually an asyndetic verbless noun-clause placed in apposition to the substantive ("a man"); see GKC 486 §155. e. ‡† sn: The name "Job" is mentioned by Ezekiel as one of the greats in the past – Noah, Job, and Daniel ( 14:14). The suffering of Job was probably well known in the ancient world, and this name was clearly part of that tradition. There is little reason to try to determine the etymology and meaning of the name, since it may not be Hebrew. If it were Hebrew, it might mean something like "persecuted," although some suggest "aggressor." If Arabic it might have the significance of "the one who always returns to God." ‡†† tn: The word תָּמִים

תָּמִים

‡†† tn: The word יָשָׁר

‡†† sn: These two expressions indicate the outcome of Job's character. "Fearing God" and "turning from evil" also express two correlative ideas in scripture; they signify his true piety – he had reverential fear of the LORD

§ sn: The numbers used in the chapter, seven, three, and five, carry the symbolism in the Bible of perfection and completeness (see J. J. Davis, Biblical Numerology). Job's "seven sons" are listed first because in the East sons were considered more valuable than daughters (recall Ruth, who is "better than seven sons" [ Ruth 4:15]). §† tn: The verb begins the sentence: "and there were born." This use of the preterite with vav ( ו )

keys; in addition he had a very great household. §†† Thus he§† was the greatest of all the people in the east. §†

The word וַיִּבְרַח

The use of the genitive after "sons" in this construction may emphasize their nature (like "sons of belial"); it would refer to them as easterners (like "sons of the south" in contemporary American English). BDB 869 s.v. בָּנֵי

§§† tn: The perfect verb with the ו וַיִּבְרַח

§§† tn: Heb "make a feast." §§§ tn: The sense is cryptic; it literally says "house – a man – his day." The word "house" is an adverbial accusative of place: "in the house." "Man" is the genitive; it also has a distributive sense: "in the house of each man." And "his day" is an adverbial accusative: "on his day." The point is that they feasted every day of the week in rotation. 18 tn: The use of וַיִּבְרַח

19 tn: Normally cardinal numerals tend to disagree in gender with the numbered noun. In v. 2 "three daughters" consists of the masculine numeral followed by the feminine noun. However, here "three sisters" consists of the feminine numeral followed by the feminine noun. The distinction appears to be that the normal disagreement between numeral and noun when the intent is merely to fix the number (3 daughters as opposed to 2 or 4 daughters). However, when a particular, previously known group is indicated, the numeral tends to agree with the noun in gender. A similar case occurs in Gen 3:13 ("three wives" of Noah's sons). 20 tn: The verse begins with the temporal indicator "and it happened" or "and it came to pass," which need not be translated. The particle וַיְהִי

וַיִּבְרַח

them; he would get up early† in the morning and offer burnt offerings according to†† the number of them all. For Job thought, "Perhaps‡ my children‡‡ have sinned and cursed‡‡ God in their hearts." This was Job's customary practice. ‡‡‡

6 Now the day came when§ the sons of God§† came to present themselves before§†† the LORD – and Satan§‡

23 tn: Or "purify."† tn: The first verb could also be joined with the next to form a verbal hendiadys: "he would rise early and he would sacrifice" would then simply be "he would sacrifice early in the morning" (see M. Delcor, "Quelques cas de survivances du vocabulaire nomade en hébreu biblique," VT 25 [1975]: 307-22). This section serves to explain in more detail how Job sanctified his children. sn: In the patriarchal society it was normal for the father to act as priest for the family, making the sacrifices as needed. Job here is exceptional in his devotion to the duty. The passage shows the balance between the greatest earthly rejoicing by the family, and the deepest piety and affection of the father. †† tn: The text does not have "according to"; the noun "number" is an accusative that defines the extent of his actions (GKC 373-74 §118. e, h). ‡ tn: The clause stands as an accusative to the verb, here as the direct object introduced with "perhaps" (IBHS 645-46 §38.8d). ‡† tn: Heb "sons," but since the three daughters are specifically mentioned in v. 4, "children" has been used in the translation. In this patriarchal culture, however, it is possible that only the sons are in view. ‡‡ tn: The Hebrew verb is נָסַח

‡†† tn: The imperfect expresses continual action in past time, i.e., a customary imperfect (GKC 315 §107. e). ‡‡‡ sn: The text draws the curtain of heaven aside for the reader to understand the background of this drama. God extols the virtue of Job, but Satan challenges the reasons for it. He receives permission to try to dislodge Job from his integrity. In short, God is using Job to prove Satan's theory wrong. § tn: The beginning Hebrew expression "and there was – the day" indicates that "there came a day when" or more simply "the day came when." It emphasizes the particular day. The succeeding clause is then introduced with a preterite with the with vav ( ו )
§† sn: The "sons of God" in the OT is generally taken to refer to angels. They are not actually "sons" of Elohim; the idiom is a poetic way of describing their nature and relationship to God. The phrase indicates their supernatural nature, and their submission to God as the sovereign Lord. It may be classified as a genitive that expresses how individuals belong to a certain class or type, i.e., the supernatural (GKC 418 §128. v). In the pagan literature, especially of Ugarit, "the sons of God" refers to the lesser gods or deities of the pantheon. See H. W. Robinson, "The Council of Yahweh," JTS 45 (1943): 151-57; G. Cooke, "The Sons of (the) God(s)," ZAW 76 (1964): 22-47; M. Tsevat, "God and the Gods in the Assembly," HUCA 40-41 (1969/70): 123-37. §†† tn: The preposition ל

<sup>9</sup> Then Satan answered the LORD, "Is it for nothing that Job fears God? <sup>1910</sup> Have you<sup>20</sup> not made a hedge<sup>21</sup> around him and his household and all that he has on every side? You have blessed<sup>22</sup> the work of his hands, §‡ sn: The word means "adversary" or with the article "the adversary" – here the superhuman adversary or Satan. The word with the article means that the meaning of the word should receive prominence. A denominative verb meaning "to act as adversary" occurs. Satan is the great accuser of the saints (see Zech 3 where "Satan was standing there to 'satanize' Joshua the priest"; and see Rev 12 which identifies him with the Serpent in Genesis). He came among the angels at this time because he is one of them and has access among them. Even though fallen, Satan has yet to be cast down completely (see Rev 12). §†† tn: The imperfect may be classified as progressive imperfect; it indicates action that although just completed is regarded as still lasting into the present (GKC 316 §107. h). §† tn: Heb "answered the LORD

In contrast to that narrative report about Job, the emphasis here is on Job's present character, and so the participle form is translated here as a gnomic or characteristic present ("turns"). It modifies "man" as one who is turning from evil.

‡† tn: The force of the imperatives in this sentence are almost conditional – if God were to do this, then surely Job would respond differently. sn: The two imperatives ("stretch out" and "strike") and the word "hand" all form a bold anthropomorphic sentence. It is as if God would deliver a blow to Job with his fist. But the intended meaning is that God would intervene to destroy Job's material and physical prosperity. ‡‡ sn: The formula used in the expression is the oath formula: "if not to your face he will curse you" meaning "he will surely curse you to your face." Satan is so sure that the piety is insincere that he can use an oath formula. ‡‡† tn: See the comments on Job 1:5. Here too the idea of "renounce" may fit well enough; but the idea of actually cursing God may not be out of the picture if everything Job has is removed. Satan thinks he will denounce God. ‡‡‡ tn: The participle הִנָּח

§ tn: The versions add a verb here: "delivered to" or "abandoned to" the hand of Satan. §† tn: Heb "in your hand." The idiom means that it is now Satan's to do with as he pleases. §†† tn: The Hebrew word order emphatically holds out Job's person as the exception: "only upon him do not stretch forth your hand." §‡ tn: The Targum to Job adds "with permission" to show that he was granted leave from God's presence. §†† sn: So Satan, having received his permission to test Job's sincerity, goes out from the LORD

§† sn: The series of catastrophes and the piety of Job is displayed now in comprehensive terms. Everything that can go wrong goes wrong, and yet Job, the pious servant of Yahweh, continues to worship him in the midst of the rubble. This section, and the next, will lay the foundation for the great dialogues in the book. §‡ tn: The Targum to Job clarifies that it was the first day of the week. The fact that it was in the house of the firstborn is the reason. §§† tn: Heb "his"; the referent (Job) has been specified in the translation for clarity. §§‡ tn: The use of the verb "to be" with the participle gives emphasis to the continuing of the action in the past (GKC 360 §116. r). §§§ tn: The LXX has "the spoilers spoiled them" instead of "the Sabeans swooped down." †† tn: The adjective "naked" is functioning here as an adverbial accusative of state, explicative of the state of the subject. While it does include the literal sense of nakedness at birth, Job is also using it symbolically to mean "without possessions." † sn: While the first half of the couplet is to be taken literally as referring to his coming into this life, this second part must be interpreted only generally to refer to his departure from this life. It is parallel to 1 Tim 6:7, "For we have brought nothing into this world and so we cannot take a single thing out either." †† tn: The two verbs are simple perfects. (1) They can be given the nuance of gnomic imperfect, expressing what the sovereign God always does. This is the approach taken in the present translation. Alternatively (2) they could be referring specifically to Job's own experience: "Yahweh gave [definite past, referring to his coming into this good life] and Yahweh has taken away" [present perfect, referring to his great losses]. Many English versions follow the second alternative. †† sn: Some commentators are troubled by the appearance of the word "Yahweh" on the lips of Job, assuming that the narrator inserted his own name for God into the story-telling. Such thinking is based on the assumption that Yahweh was only a national god of Israel, unknown to anyone else in the ancient world. But here is a clear indication that a non-Israelite, Job, knew and believed in Yahweh. ††† tn: The last clause is difficult to translate. It simply reads, "and he did not give unseemliness to God." See A Guillaume, "A Note on the Root bala," JTS 13 (1962): 320-23; and N. M. ‡††† sn: The meaning of the expression is obscure. It may come from the idea of sacrificing an animal or another person in order to go free, suggesting the expression that one type of skin that was worth less was surrendered to save the more important life. Satan would then be saying that Job was willing for others to die for him to go free, but not himself. "Skin" would be a synecdoche of the part for the whole (like the idiomatic use of skin today for a person in a narrow escape). The second clause indicates that God has not even scratched the surface because Job has been protected. His "skin" might have been scratched, but not his flesh and bone! But if his life had been put in danger, he would have responded differently. 18 tc: The LXX has "make full payment, pay a full price" (LSJ 522 s.v. ἐκτίνω 19 tn: Heb "Indeed, all that a man has he will give for his life." 20 sn: The "bones and flesh" are idiomatic for the whole person, his physical and his psychological/spiritual being (see further H. The skin was so disfigured that even his friends did not recognize him ( 2:12). The book will add that the disease afflicted him inwardly, giving him a foul breath and a loathsome smell ( 19:17, 20). The sores bred worms; they opened and ran, and closed and tightened ( 16:8). He was tormented with dreams ( 7:14). He felt like he was choking ( 7:14). His bones were racked with burning pain ( 30:30). And he was not able to rise from his place ( 19:18). The disease was incurable; but it would last for years, leaving the patient longing for death. †† *tn: The construction uses the disjunctive vav ( ו

This is the understanding of the LXX, which reads "dung-hill outside the city." ††† *tn: The versions have some information here that is interesting, albeit fanciful. The Targum calls her "Dinah." The LXX has "when a long time had passed." But the whole rendering of the LXX is paraphrastic: "How long will you hold out, saying, 'Behold, I wait yet a little while, expecting the hope of my deliverance?' for behold, your memorial is abolished from the earth, even your sons and daughters, the pangs and pains of my womb which I bore in vain with sorrows, and you yourself sit down to spend the night in the open air among the corruption of worms, and I am a wanderer and a servant from place to place and house to house, waiting for the setting sun, that I may rest from my labors and pains that now beset me, but say some word against the Lord and die." ††† *sn: See R. D. Moore, "The Integrity of Job," CBQ 45 (1983): 17-31. The names are probably not symbolic of the things they say. 20 *tn: The verb can mean that they "agreed together"; but it also (and more likely) means that they came together at a meeting point to go visit Job together. 21 *tn: The verb "to show grief" is יָדַג**

As the introduction to the poetic speech that follows (3:3-26), vv. 1-2 continue the prose style of chapters 1-2. Each of the subsequent speeches is introduced by such a prose heading. ‡† tn: The verb “cursed” is the Piel preterite from the verb קָלַל

‡†† tn: Heb “his day” (so KJV, ASV, NAB). The Syriac has “the day on which he was born.” The context makes it clear that Job meant the day of his birth. But some have tried to offer a different interpretation, such as his destiny or his predicament. For this reason the Syriac clarified the meaning for their readers in much the same way as the present translation does by rendering “his day” as “the day he was born.” On the Syriac translation of the book of Job, see Heidi M. Szpek, Translation Technique in the Peshitta to Job (SBLDS). ‡†† tn: The text has וַיִּנְאֶה

§ tn: The relative clause is carried by the preposition with the resumptive pronoun: “the day [which] I was born in it” meaning “the day on which I was born” (see GKC 486-88 §155. f, i). §† tn: The verb is the Niphal imperfect. It may be interpreted in this dependent clause (1) as representing a future event from some point of time in the past – “the day on which I was born” or “would be born” (see GKC 316 §107. k). Or (2) it may simply serve as a preterite indicating action that is in the past. §†† tn: The MT simply has “and the night – it said....” By simple juxtaposition with the parallel construction (“on which I was born”) the verb “it said” must be a relative clause explaining “the night.” Rather than supply “in which” and make the verb passive (which is possible since no specific subject is provided, but leaves open the question of who said it), it is preferable to take the verse as a personification. First Job cursed the day; now he cursed the night that spoke about what it witnessed. See A. Ehrman, “A Note on the Verb ‘amar,’” JQR 55 (1964/65): 166-67. §‡ tn: The word is נָכַר

 †† tn: Not everyone is satisfied with the reading of the MT. Gordis thought "day" should be "sea," and "curser" should be "rouser" (changing 'alef to 'ayin; cf. NRSV). This is an unnecessary change, for there is no textual problem in the line (D. J. A. Clines, Job [WBC], 71). Others have taken the reading "sea" as a personification and accepted the rest of the text, gaining the sense of "those whose magic binds even the sea monster of the deep" (e.g., NEB). sn: Those who curse the day are probably the professional enchanters and magicians who were thought to cast spells on days and overwhelm them with darkness and misfortune. The myths explained eclipses as the dragon throwing its folds around the sun and the moon, thus engulfing or swallowing the day and the night. This interpretation matches the parallelism better than the interpretation that says these are merely professional mourners. ‡ tn: The verb is probably "execrate, curse," from נָקַב

 §‡ sn: Job follows his initial cry with a series of rhetorical questions. His argument runs along these lines: since he was born (v. 10), the next chance he had of escaping this life of misery would have been to be still born (vv. 11-12, 16). In vv. 13-19 Job considers death as falling into a peaceful sleep in a place where there is no trouble. The high frequency of rhetorical questions in series is a characteristic of the Book of Job that sets it off from all other portions of the OT. The effect is primarily dramatic, creating a tension that requires resolution. See W. Watson, Classical Hebrew Poetry, 340-41. §‡† tn: The negative only occurs with the first clause, but it extends its influence to the parallel second clause (GKC 483 §152. z). §‡‡ tn: The two verbs in this verse are both prefix conjugations; they are clearly referring to the past and should be classified as preterites. E. Dhorme (Job, 32) notes that the verb "I came out" is in the perfect to mark its priority in time in relation to the other verbs. §‡‡‡ tn: The translation "at birth" is very smooth, but catches the meaning and avoids the tautology in the verse. The line literally reads "from the womb." The second half of the verse has the verb "I came out/forth" which does double duty for both parallel lines. The second half uses "belly" for the womb. 18 tn: The two halves of the verse use the prepositional phrases ("from the womb" and "from the belly I went out") in the temporal sense of "on emerging from the womb." 19 tn: The verb קָדְמוֹנִי

The idea simply has, "and why breasts that I might suck?" 21 sn: The commentaries mention the parallel construction in the writings of Ashurbanipal: "You were weak, Ashurbanipal, you who sat on the knees of the goddess, queen of Nineveh; of the four teats that were placed near to your mouth, you sucked two and you hid your face in the others" (M. Streck, Assurbanipal [VAB], 348). 22 tn: Heb "that I might suckle." The verb is the Qal imperfect of יָקַח

23 tn: The word עָתָה

§† sn: The expression is literally "the eyelids of the morning." This means the very first rays of dawn (see also Job 41:18). There is some debate whether it refers to "eyelids" or "eyelashes" or "eyeballs." If the latter, it would signify the flashing eyes of a person. See for the Ugaritic background H. L. Ginsberg, The Legend of King Keret (BASORSup), 39; see also J. M. Steadman, "Eyelids of Morn": A Biblical Convention," HTR 56 (1963): 159-67. §†† tn: The subject is still "that night." Here, at the end of this first section, Job finally expresses the crime of that night – it did not hinder his birth. §‡ sn: This use of doors for the womb forms an implied comparison; the night should have hindered conception (see Gen 20:18 and 1 Sam 1:5). §‡† tn: The Hebrew has simply "my belly [= womb]." The suffix on the noun must be objective – it was the womb of Job's mother in which he lay before his birth. See however N. C. Habel, "The Dative Suffix in Job 33:13," Bib 63 (1982): 258-59, who thinks it is deliberately ambiguous.

24 tn: The copula on the verb indicates a sequence for the imperfect: "and then I would..." In the second half of the verse it is paralleled by "then." 25 tn: The text uses a combination of the perfect (lie down/sleep) and imperfect (quiet/rest). The particle עָתָה

There is no reason here to take "houses" to mean tombs; the "houses" refer to the places the princes lived (i.e., palaces). The reference is not to the practice of burying treasures with the dead. It is simply saying that if Job had died he would have been with the rich and famous in death. ‡† tn: The verb is governed by the interrogative of v. 12 that introduces this series of rhetorical questions. ‡†† tn: The verb is again the prefix conjugation, but the narrative requires a past tense, or preterite. ‡††† tn: Heb "hidden." The same Hebrew word is used for the taskmasters in Exod 3:7. 21 tn: The versions have taken the pronoun in the sense of the verb "to be." Others give it the sense of "the same thing," rendering the verse as "small and great, there is no difference there." GKC 437 §135. a, n. 1, follows this idea with a meaning of "the same." 22 tn: The LXX renders this as "unafraid," although the negative has disappeared in some MSS

23 tn: The plural "masters" could be taken here as a plural of majesty rather than as referring to numerous masters. 24 sn: Since he has survived birth, Job wonders why he could not have died a premature death. He wonders why God gives light and life to those who are in misery. His own condition throws gloom over life, and so he poses the question first generally, for many would prefer death to misery (20-22); then he comes to the individual, himself, who would prefer death (23). He closes his initial complaint with some depictions of his suffering that afflicts him and gives him no rest (24-26). 25 tn: Heb "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity. 26 tn: The verb is the simple imperfect, expressing the progressive imperfect nuance. But there is no formal subject to the verb, prompting some translations to make it passive in view of the indefinite subject (so, e.g., NAB, NIV, NRSV). Such a passive could be taken as a so-called "divine passive" by which God is the implied agent. Job clearly means God here, but he stops short of naming him (see also the note on "God" earlier in this verse). sn: In vv. 11, 12, and 16 there was the first series of questions in which Job himself was in question. Now the questions are more general for all mankind - why should the sufferers in general have been afflicted with life? 27 sn: In v. 10 the word was used to describe the labor and sorrow that comes from it; here the one in such misery is called the עֲמֵל 28 tn: The second colon now refers to people in general because of the plural construct תְּרֵי נַפְשׁ מְכָה

It is translated as an English present tense. † tn: The participle could be “when” or “because” in this verse. †† sn: The expression “when they find a grave” means when they finally die. The verse describes the relief and rest that the sufferer will obtain when the long-awaited death is reached. ‡† tn: This first part of the verse, “Why is light given,” is supplied from the context. In the Hebrew text the verse simply begins with “to a man....” It is also in apposition to the construction in v. 20. But after so many qualifying clauses and phrases, a restatement of the subject (light, from v. 20) is required. ‡‡† sn: After speaking of people in general (in the plural in vv. 21 and 22), Job returns to himself specifically (in the singular, using the same word גָּבַר

Parallels like Ps 42:3 which says “my tears have been my bread/food” shows a similar figure. §† tn: The word normally describes the “roaring” of a lion ( Job 4:10); but it is used for the loud groaning or cries of those in distress ( Pss 22:1; 32:3).

In 4:1-11 he wonders that Job who had comforted so many people in trouble, and who was so pious, should fall into such despair, forgetting the great truth that the righteous never perish under affliction – calamity only destroys the wicked. Then in 4:12-5:7 Eliphaz tries to warn Job about complaining against God because only the ungodly resent the dealings of God and by their impatience bring down his wrath upon them. Finally in 5:8-27 Eliphaz appeals to Job to follow a different course, to seek after God, for God only smites to heal or to correct, to draw people to himself and away from evil. See K. Fullerton, “Double Entendre in the First Speech of Eliphaz,” JBL 49 (1930): 320-74; J. C. L. Gibson, “Eliphaz the Temanite: A Portrait of a Hebrew Philosopher,” SJT 28 (1975): 259-72; and J. It would normally be translated “has one tried (words with you)?” Most commentaries posit a conditional clause, however. <sup>23</sup> tn: The verb means “to be weary.” But it can have the extended sense of being either exhausted or impatient (see v. 5). A. B. Davidson ( Job, 29) takes it in the sense of “will it be too much for you?” There is nothing in the sentence that indicates this should be an interrogative clause; it is simply an imperfect. But in view of the juxta-

מִסָּר †† tn: The parallelism again uses a perfect verb in the first colon and an imperfect in the second; but since the sense of the line is clearly what Job has done in the past, the second verb may be treated as a preterite, or a customary imperfect - what Job repeatedly did in the past (GKC 315 §107. e). The words in this verse may have double meanings. The word יָסַר:

‡‡ tn: The "feeble hands" are literally "hands hanging down." This is a sign of weakness, helplessness, or despondency (see 2 Sam 4:1; Isa 13:7). ‡†† tn: Both verbs in this line are imperfects, and probably carry the same nuance as the last verb in v. 3, namely, either customary imperfect or preterite. The customary has the aspect of stressing that this was what Job used to do.

‡‡‡ tn: The form is the singular active participle, interpreted here collectively. The verb is used of knees that give way ( Isa 35:3; Ps 109:24). § tn: The expression is often translated as "feeble knees," but it literally says "the bowing [or "tottering"] knees." The figure is one who may be under a heavy load whose knees begin to shake and buckle (see also Heb 12:12). sn: Job had been successful at helping others not be crushed by the weight of trouble and misfortune. It is easier to help others than to preserve a proper perspective when one's self is afflicted (E. Dhorme, Job, 44). §† tn: The sentence has no subject, but the context demands that the subject be the same kind of trouble that has come upon people that Job has helped. §†† tn: This is the same verb used in v. 2, meaning "to be exhausted" or "impatient." This sentence is an example of casus pendens or extraposition: "as for your hope, it is the integrity of your ways" (see GKC 458 §143. d). sn: Eliphaz is not being sarcastic to Job. He knows that Job is a God-fearing man who lives out his faith in life. But he also knows that Job should apply to himself the same things he tells others. §§† sn: Eliphaz will put his thesis forward first negatively and then positively (vv. 8ff). He will argue that the suffering of the righteous is disciplinary and not for their destruction. He next will argue that it is the wicked who deserve judgment. §§‡ tn: The use of the independent personal pronoun is emphatic, almost as an enclitic to emphasize interrogatives: "who indeed...." (GKC 442 §136. c). §§§ tn: The perfect verb in this line has the nuance of the past tense to express the unique past - the uniqueness of the action is expressed with "ever" ("who has ever perished"). 18 tn: The adjective is used here substantivally. Without the article the word stresses the meaning of "uprightness." Job will use "innocent" and "upright" together in 17:8. 19 tn: The Niphal means "to be hidden" (see the Piel in 6:10; 15:18; and 27:11); the connotation here is "destroyed" or "annihilated." 20 tn: The perfect verb here represents the indefinite past. It has no specific sighting in mind, but refers to each time he has seen the wicked do this. 21 sn: The figure is an implied metaphor. Plowing suggests the idea of deliberately preparing (or cultivating) life for evil. This describes those who are fundamentally wicked. 22 tn: The LXX renders this with a plural "barren places." 23 tn: Heb "reap it." 24 tn: The LXX in the place of "breath" has "word" or "command," probably to limit the anthropomorphism. The verse continues the analogy: houses have foundations, and the house of clay is founded on dust, and will return to dust ( Gen 3:19; Ps 103:14). The reasoning is that if God finds defects in angels, he will surely find them in humans who are inferior to the angels because they are but dust. In fact, they are easily crushed like the moth. ‡ tn: The imperfect verb is in the plural, suggesting "they crush." The Targum to Job has "Is it not by their lack of righteousness that they have been deprived of all support?" tn: On the interpretation of the preposition in this construction, see N. Sarna, "The Interchange of the Preposition bet and min in Biblical Hebrew," JBL 78 (1959): 310-16. §† sn: They die. This clear verb interprets all the images in these verses – they die. When the house of clay collapses, or when their excess perishes – their life is over. §†† tn: Heb "and without wisdom." The word "attaining" is supplied in the translation as a clarification. sn: The expression without attaining wisdom is parallel to the previous without anyone regarding it. Both verses describe how easily humans perish: there is no concern for it, nor any sense to it. Humans die without attaining wisdom which can solve the mystery of human life. §† tn: Some commentators transpose this verse with the following paragraph, placing it after v. 7 (see E. Dhorme, Job, 62). But the reasons for this are based on the perceived development of the argument and are not that compelling. sn: The imperative is here a challenge for Job. If he makes his appeal against God, who is there who will listen? The rhetorical questions are intended to indicate that no one will respond, not even the angels. Job would do better to realize that he is guilty and his only hope is in God. §† tn: The participle with the suffix could be given a more immediate translation to accompany the imperative: "Call now! Is anyone listening to you?" §§† tn: The LXX has rendered "holy ones" as "holy angels" (cf. TEV, CEV, NLT). The LXX has interpreted the verb in the colon too freely: "if you will see." §§† sn: The point being made is that the angels do not represent the cries of people to God as if mediating for them. But if Job appealed to any of them to take his case against God, there would be no response whatsoever for that. §§§ tn: One of the reasons that commentators transpose v. 1 is that the י

Davidson argues that the verse does not mean that Eliphaz cursed his place during his prosperity. This line is metonymical (giving the effect). God judged the fool and his place was ruined; consequently, Eliphaz pronounced it occurred of God (see A. B. Davidson, Job, 36). Many emend the verb slightly to read "and it was suddenly cursed" (<sup>אָל</sup>

†† tn: The imperfect verbs in this verse describe the condition of the accursed situation. Some commentators follow the LXX and take these as jussives, making this verse the curse that the man pronounced upon the fool. Rashi adds "This is the malediction with which I have cursed him." That would make the speaker the one calling down the judgment on the fool rather than responding by observation how God destroyed the habitation of the fool. ‡† tn: The verb <sup>אָל</sup>

The sense here seems to fit the usage of gates as the place of legal disputes, so the phrase "at the place of judgment" has been used in the translation. ‡‡† tn: The text simply says "and there is no deliverer." The entire clause could be subordinated to the preceding clause, and rendered simply "without a deliverer." † sn: The hungry are other people, possibly the hungry poor to whom the wealthy have refused to give bread (22:7). The idea of "swallow" is found in Job 20:15. The general sense of the line is clear, in spite of the difficulties of determining the exact meaning of the verb. †† tn: The LXX has several variations for the line. It reads something like the following: "for what they have collected they just shall eat, but they shall not be delivered out of calamities; let their strength be utterly exhausted." The LXX may have gotten the idea of the "righteous" as those who suffer from hunger. Instead of "thorns" the LXX has the idea of "trouble." The Targum to Job interprets it with "shield" and adds "warriors" as the subject. †† sn: The previous discussion shows how trouble rises, namely, from the rebelliousness of the fool. Here Eliphaz simply summarizes the points made with this general principle - trouble does not come from outside man, nor does it come as a part of the natural order, but rather it comes from the evil nature of man. ††† tn: Heb "man [is]." Because "man" is used in a generic sense for humanity here, the generic "people" has been used in the translation. ††† tn: There is a slight difficulty here in that vv. 6 and 7 seem to be saying the opposite thing. The Targum to Job has "sons of demons" or "the sparks which shoot from coals of fire." 20 sn: Eliphaz affirms that if he were in Job's place he would take refuge in God, but Job has to acknowledge that he has offended God and accept this suffering as his chastisement. Job eventually will submit to God in the end, but not in the way that Eliphaz advises here, for Job does not agree that the sufferings are judgments from God. 21 tn: The word <sup>אָל</sup>

22 tn: The independent personal pronoun here adds emphasis to the subject of the verb, again strengthening the contrast with what Job is doing (see R. J. Williams, Hebrew Syntax, 22, §106). 23 tn: The imperfect verbs in this verse express not so much what Eliphaz does as what he would do if he were in Job's place (even though in 13:3 we have the affirmation). The use fits the category of the imperfect used in conditional clauses (see GKC 319 §107. x). 24 tn: The verb <sup>אָל</sup>

 The participle continues the doxology here. But the article is neces-

 the idea that rain is a gift from God. This would be more keenly felt in the Middle East where water is scarce. § tn: In both halves of ter the previous verse, it would suggest that the purpose of watering the earth was to raise the humble (cf. NASB, “And sends water on the fields, so that He sets on high those who are lowly”). A. B.

 Davidson ( Job, 39) makes a case for this interpretation, saying that God’s gifts in nature have the wider purpose of blessing man, but he prefers to see the line as another benevolence, parallel to v. 10, and so suggests a translation “setting up” rather than “to set up.” §††† perfect verb may be translated “be set on high; be raised up.” E.

The expression indicates that a malicious gossip is more painful than a blow. sn: The Targum saw here a reference to Balaam and the devastation brought on by the Midianites. §§§ tn: The word here is טוֹד

18 tc: The repetition of "destruction" and "famine" here has prompted some scholars to delete the whole verse. Others try to emend the text. The LXX renders them as "the unrighteous and the lawless." But there is no difficulty in having the repetition of the words as found in the MT. tn: The word for "famine" is an Aramaic word found again in 30:3. The book of Job has a number of Aramaisms that are used to form an alternative parallel expression (see notes on "witness" in 16:19). 19 tn: The negated jussive is used here to express the conviction that something cannot or should not happen (GKC 322 §109. e). 20 tn: Heb "your covenant is with the stones of the field." The line has been variously interpreted and translated. It is omitted in the LXX. It seems to mean there is a deep sympathy between man and nature. Some think it means that the boundaries will not be violated by enemies; Rashi thought it represented some species of beings, like genii of the field, and so read

Now, v. 24 describes the safety and peace of the homestead and his possessions if he were right with God. 24 tn: The verb is again the perfect, but in sequence to the previous structure so that it is rendered as a future. This would be the case if Job were right with God. 25 tn: Heb "tent." 26 tn: The word שָׁלוֹם

28 tn: The verb is usually rendered "to sin"; but in this context the more specific primary meaning of "to miss the mark" or "to fail to find something." Neither Job's tent nor his possessions will be lost. 29 tn: Heb "your seed." 30 tn: The word means "your shoots" and is parallel to "your seed" in the first colon. It refers here (as in Isa 34:1 and 42:5) to the produce of the earth. Some commentators suggest that

Eliphaz seems to have forgotten or was insensitive to Job's loss of his children; H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 57) says his conventional theology is untouched by human feeling. † tn: The word translated "in a full age" has been given an array of meanings: "health; integrity"; "like a new blade of corn"; "in your strength [or vigor]." An emphatic personal pronoun also precedes the imperative. The resulting force would be something like "and you had better apply it for your own good!" †† sn: With this the speech by Eliphaz comes to a close. His two mistakes with it are: (1) that the tone was too cold and (2) the argument did not fit Job's case (see further, A. B. In this verse it may not mean that the two things are to be weighed together, but that the whole calamity should be put on the scales (see A. B. Davidson, Job, 43). †† tn: E. Dhorme, Job, 76-77 for a treatment of poisoned arrows in the ancient world). ††† sn: Job here clearly states that his problems have come from the Almighty, which is what Eliphaz said. But whereas Eliphaz said Job provoked the trouble by his sin, Job is perplexed because he does not think he did. ††† tn: Most commentators take "my spirit" as the subject of the participle "drinks" (except the NEB, which follows the older versions to say that the poison "drinks up [or "soaks in"] the spirit.") The image of the poisoned arrow represents the calamity or misfortune from God, which is taken in by Job's spirit and enervates him. ††† tn: The LXX translators knew that a liquid should be used with the verb "drink"; but they took the line to be "whose violence drinks up my blood." For the rest of the verse they came up with, "whenever I am going to speak they pierce me." 18 tn: The word translated "sudden terrors" is found only here and in Ps 88:16 [17]. G. R. Driver notes that the idea of suddenness is present in the root, and so renders this word as "sudden assaults" ("Problems in the Hebrew text of Job," VTSup 3 [1955]: 73). 19 tn: The verb עָבַד

24 tc: The LXX captures the meaning of the verse, but renders it in a more expansive way. tn: This word occurs here and in Isa 30:24. In contrast to the grass that grows on the fields for the wild donkey, this is fodder prepared for the domesticated animals. 25 tn: Heb "a tasteless thing"; the word "food" is supplied from the context. 26 tn: Some commentators are not satisfied with the translation "white of an egg"; they prefer something connected to "slime of purslane" (H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 59; cf. NRSV "juice of mallows"). This meaning is based on the Syriac and Arabic version of Sa'adia. The meaning "white of the egg" comes from the rabbinic interpretation of "slime of the yolk." Others carry the idea further and interpret it to mean "saliva of dreams" or after the LXX "in dream words." H. H. Rowley does not think that the exact edible object can be identified. The idea of the slimy glaring white around the yolk of an egg seems to fit best. This is another illustration of something that is tasteless or insipid. 27 tn: The traditional rendering of אֵשׁ

What Job seems to mean by this clause in this verse is that there is nothing that would hinder his joy of dying for he has not denied or disobeyed God's plan. §† tn: Several commentators delete the colon as having no meaning in the verse, and because (in their view) it is probably the addition of an interpolator who wants to make Job sound more pious. But Job is at least consoling himself that he is innocent, and at the most anticipating a worth-while afterlife (see H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 60). §§† sn: Now, in vv. 11-13, Job proceeds to describe his hopeless condition. In so doing, he is continuing his defense of his despair and lament. The section begins with these rhetorical questions in which Job affirms that he does not have the strength to wait for the blessings that Eliphaz is talking about. §§† tn: The word translated "my end" is וְצָיָ

§§§ sn: The questions imply negative answers. Job is saying that it would take great strength to hold up under these afflictions, but he is only flesh and bone. The sufferings have almost completely overwhelmed him. To endure all of this to the end he would need a strength he does not have. 18 tn: For the use of the particle אִם

 the Qere as the preposition with a suffix referring to "the river," with the idea "you are like it." Others would read the form with the Kethib this line: "But as it seems, the words of a true man are vain, because I do not ask strength of you." But the rest of the versions are equally divided on the verse. 21 tn: This, in the context, is probably the meaning, although the Hebrew simply has the line after the first half of the verse read: "and as/to wind the words of a despairing man." The line could be translated "and the words of a despairing man, [which are] as wind." But this translation follows the same approach as RSV, NIV, and NAB, which take the idiom of the verb ("think, imagine") with the preposition on "wind" to mean "reckon as

It may mean this; it simply says “my righteousness is yet in it.” If the “in it” does not refer to Job’s cause, then it would simply mean “is present.” It would have very little difference either way. ‡‡† tn: The word עוֹלָה

It was God who breathed breath into man's nostrils ( Gen 2:7), and so God is called to remember that man is but a breath. ‡‡‡ tn: The word "that" is supplied in the translation. § tn: The verb with the infinitive serves as a verbal hendiadys: "return to see" means "see again." §† sn: The meaning of the verse is that God will relent, but it will be too late. theological implications from this statement or the preceding verse (Rashi said Job was denying the resurrection). Job is simply stating that when people die they are gone – they do not return to this present life on earth. Most commentators and theologians believe that theological knowledge was very limited at such an early stage, so they would not think it possible for Job to have bodily resurrection in view. (See notes on ch. 14 and 19:25-27.) §§† tn: M. Dahood suggests the meaning is the same as "his abode" ("Hebrew-Ugaritic Lexicography V," Bib 48 [1967]: 421-38). §§‡ tn: The verb means "to recognize" by seeing. "His place," the place where he was living, is the subject of the verb. This personification is intended simply to say that the place where he lived will not have him any more. The line is very similar to Ps 103:16b – when the wind blows the flower away, its place knows it no more. §§§ tn: "Also I" has been rendered frequently as "therefore," introducing a conclusion. But here Job excuses himself in advance of the lament. 19 tn: The verb is not limited to mental musing; it is used for pouring out a complaint or a lament (see S. Mowinkel, "The Verb si a a

The only conclusion open to him is that Job’s family brought this on themselves, and so the only recourse is for Job to humble himself and make supplication to God. To make his point, Bildad will appeal to the wisdom of the ancients, for his theology is traditional. The speech has three parts: vv. 2-7 form his affirmation of the justice of God; vv. 8-19 are his appeal to the wisdom of the ancients, and vv. 20-22 are his summation. See N. C. Habel, “Appeal to Ancient Tradition as a Literary Form,” ZAW 88 (1976): 253-72; W. A. Irwin, “The First Speech of Bildad,” ZAW 51 (1953): 205-16. †† sn: “These things” refers to all of Job’s speech, the general drift of which seems to Bildad to question the justice of God. ‡ tn: The second colon of the verse simply says “and a strong wind the words of your mouth.” The simplest way to treat this is to make it an independent nominal sentence: “the words of your mouth are a strong wind.” Some have made it parallel to the first by apposition, understanding “how long” to do double duty. What Job had before will seem so small in comparison to what lies ahead. 22 tn: The verb has the idea of “to grow”; here it must mean “to flourish; to grow considerably” or the like. The statement is not so much a prophecy; rather Bildad is saying that “if Job had recourse to God, then....” This will be fulfilled, of course, at the end of the book. 23 sn: Bildad is not calling for Job to trace through the learning of antiquity, but of the most recent former generation. Bildad's point is that they have not had time to acquire great knowledge because they are recent. ‡ tn: E. Dhorme (Job, 116) observes that the shadow is the symbol of ephemeral things ( 14:2; 17:7; Ps 144:4). The shadow passes away quickly (116). ‡† tn: The sentence begins emphatically: "Is it not they." ‡‡ tn: The "and" is not present in the line. The second clause seems to be in apposition to the first, explaining it more thoroughly: "Is it not they [who] will instruct you, [who] will speak to you." ‡‡† tn: The noun may have been left indeterminate for the sake of emphasis (GKC 401-2 §125. c), meaning "important words." ‡‡‡ tn: Heb "from their heart." § sn: H. H. Rowley observes the use of the words for plants that grow in Egypt and suspects that Bildad either knew Egypt or knew that much wisdom came from Egypt. The first word refers to papyrus, which grows to a height of six feet (so the verb means "to grow tall; to grow high"). The second word refers to the reed grass that grows on the banks of the river (see Gen 41:2, 18). §† tn: The two verbs, גָּדַל שָׁקַד

However, this does not fit the parallelism very well, and so he emends the second half as well. Nevertheless the Hebrew text needs no emending here. 28 tn: The expression "of stones" is added for clarification of what the heap would be. It refers to the object around which the roots would grow. The parallelism with "house of stones" makes this reading highly probable. 29 tn: The idea is that the plant grows, looking for a place to grow among the stones. Some trees grow so tightly around the rocks and stones that they are impossible to uproot. The rocky ground where it grows forms "a house of stones." The LXX supports an emendation from וַיִּקַּח וַיִּקַּח that the stones around which the roots of the tree wrap themselves suggest strength and security for the tree, but uprooting comes to it nevertheless (v. 18). If the MT stands as it is, the expression must be ironic. It would be saying that the joy (all the security and prosperity) of its way (its life) is short-lived - that is the way its joy goes. §†† sn: "Laughter" (and likewise "gladness") will here be metonymies of effect or adjunct, being put in place of the reason for the joy - restoration. §† sn: These verses show several points of similarity with the style of the Book of Psalms. "Those who hate you" and the "evil-doers" are fairly common words to describe the ungodly in the Psalms. "Those who hate you" are enemies of the righteous man because of the parallelism in the verse. By this line Bildad is showing Job that he and his friends are not among those who are his enemies, and that Job himself is really among the righteous. It is an appealing way to end the discourse. See further G. W. Anderson,

In ch. 9 he argues that God's power and majesty prevent him from establishing his integrity in his complaint to God. And in ch. 10 Job tries to discover in God's plan the secret of his afflictions. Peake observes that Job is raising the question of whether something is right because God says it is right, or that God declares it right because it is right. 19 tn: Some commentators take God to be the subject of this verb, but it is more likely that it refers to the mortal who tries to challenge God in a controversy. 21 tn: This use of the imperfect as potential imperfect assumes that the human is the subject, that in a dispute with God he could not answer one of God's questions (for which see the conclusion of the book when God questions Job). On the other hand, if the interpretation were that God does not answer the demands of mortals, then a simple progressive imperfect would be required. In support of this is the frustration of Job that God does not answer him. 22 tn: The genitive phrase translated "in heart" would be a genitive of specification, specifying that the wisdom of God is in his intelligent decisions. sn: The heart is the seat of intelligence and understanding, the faculty of decision making. 23 sn: The words אמיץ כ

† tn: The use of מַלְאֵךְ

†† tn: The verb is plural: "they do not know it." This suggests that the mountains would not know it. Some follow the Syriac with a singular verb, i.e., God does not know it, meaning, it is so trifling to God that he can do it without thinking. But the better interpretation may be "suddenly." This would be interpreted from the MT as it stands; it would imply "before they know anything," thus "suddenly" (Gray, Dhorme, Buitenwieser, et. al.). D. W. Thomas connects the meaning to another verb based on Arabic and translates it, "so that they are no longer still" ("Additional Notes on the Root yada' in Hebrew," JTS 15 [1964]: 54-57). J. A. Emerton works with a possible root מַלְאֵךְ

‡ sn: This line beginning with the relative pronoun can either be read as a parallel description of God, or it can be subordinated by the relative pronoun to the first ("they do not know who overturned them"). ‡† sn: Shakes the earth out of its place probably refers to earthquakes, although some commentators protest against this in view of the idea of the pillars. In the ancient world the poetical view of the earth is that it was a structure on pillars, with water around it and under it. In an earthquake the pillars were shaken, and the earth moved. ‡‡ tn: The verb מַלְאֵךְ

Crenshaw, "Wÿ dorek `al-bamote 'ares," CBQ 34 (1972): 39-53. But many see here a reference to Canaanite mythology. The marginal note in the RSV has "the back of the sea dragon." The view would also see in "sea" the Ugaritic god Yammu. §‡ sn: The Hebrew has מַלְאֵךְ

§† sn: The identification of this as the Pleiades is accepted by most (the Vulgate has "Hyades"). In classical Greek mythology, the seven Pleiades were seven sisters of the Hyades who were pursued by Orion until they were changed into stars by Zeus. The Greek myth is probably derived from an older Semitic myth. §‡ tn: Heb "and the chambers of the south." §§† tn: Only slight differences exist between this verse and 5:9 which employs the simple מַלְאֵךְ

In the conditional clauses a progressive imperfect is used, but in the following clauses the verbs are potential imperfects. 18 tn: The pronoun "him" is supplied here; it is not in MT, but the Syriac and Vulgate have it (probably for translation purposes as well). 19 sn: Like the mountains, Job knows that God has passed by and caused him to shake and tremble, but he cannot understand or perceive the reasons. 20 tn: E. Dhorme (Job, 133) surveys the usages and concludes that the verb מַלְאֵךְ

21 tn: The verb is the Hiphil imperfect (potential again) from מַלְאֵךְ

22 sn: The meaning of the line is that God's anger will continue until it has accomplished its purpose (23:13-14). 23 sn: "Rahab" is not to be confused with the harlot of the same name from Jericho. "Rahab" is identified with Tiamat of the Babylonian creation epic, or Leviathan of the Canaanite myths. It is also used in parallelism to the sea (26:12), or the Red Sea (Ps 74:13), and so comes to symbolize Egypt (Isa 30:7). In the Babylonian Creation Epic there is reference to the helpers of Tiamat. In the Bible the reference is only to the raging sea, which the LORD

24 tn: The verb מַלְאֵךְ

25 tn: The construction מַלְאֵךְ

26 tn: The imperfect verb here is to be taken with the nuance of a potential imperfect. The idea of "answer him" has a legal context, i.e., answering God in a court of law. If God is relentless in his anger toward greater powers, then Job realizes it is futile for him. 27 sn: In a legal controversy with God it would be essential to choose the correct words very carefully (humanly speaking); but the calmness and presence of mind to do that would be shattered by the overwhelming terror of God's presence. 28 tn: The verb is supplied in this line. 29 tn: The preposition מַלְאֵךְ

‡† tn: The verb is צִדְקָתִי

‡† tn: The form is the Qal imperfect of the verb "answer." As the text stands, Job is saying that he cannot answer or could not answer (contend with) God if given a chance. Some commentators think a Niphal fits better here: "I am not answered," meaning God does not reply to him. This has the LXX, the Syriac, and Theodotion in support of it. The advantage would be to avoid the repetition of the same word from v. 14. But others rightly reject this, because all Job is saying here is that he would be too overwhelmed by God to answer him in court. The LXX change to a passive is understandable in that it would be seeking a different idea in this verse and without vocalization might have assumed a passive voice here. ‡† tn: The verb אָתַתְנֶנּוּ אֶמְצָא

‡†† tn: The word אֶמְצָא

‡†† sn: The idea of "answer" in this line is that of responding to the summons, i.e., appearing in court. This preterite and the perfect before it have the nuance of hypothetical perfects since they are in conditional clauses (GKC 330 §111. x). D. J. A. Clines (Job [WBC], 219) translates literally, "If I should call and he should answer." ‡† tn: The Hiphil imperfect in the apodosis of this conditional sentence expresses what would (not) happen if God answered the summons. ‡† tn: The relative pronoun indicates that this next section is modifying God, the Judge. Job does not believe that God would respond or listen to him, because this is the one who is crushing him. ‡†† tn: The verb אֶשְׁפֹּגְי infinitive is here functioning as the object of the verb (see GKC 350 §114. m). ‡† sn: The meaning of the word is "to satiate; to fill," as in "drink to the full, be satisfied." Job is satiated – in the negative sense – with bitterness. There is no room for more. ‡†† tn: The MT has only "if of strength." ‡†† tn: "Most certainly" translates the particle הִנֵּה ‡†† tn: The question could be taken as "who will summon me?" (see Jer 49:19 and 50:44). This does not make immediate sense. Some have simply changed the suffix to "who will summon him." If the MT is retained, then supplying something like "he will say" could make the last clause fit the whole passage. Another option is to take it as "Who will reveal it to me?" – i.e., Job could be questioning his friends' qualifications for being God's emissaries to bring God's charges against him (cf. KJV, NKJV; and see 10:2 where Job uses the same verb in the Hiphil to request that God reveal what his sin has been that has led to his suffering). sn: Job is saying that whether it is a trial of strength or an appeal to justice, he is unable to go against God. 18 tn: The idea is the same as that expressed in v. 15, although here the imperfect verb is used and not the perfect. Once again with the concessive clause ("although I am right") Job knows that in a legal dispute he would be confused and would end up arguing against himself. 19 tn: Some commentators wish to change this to "his mouth," meaning God's response to Job's complaints. But the MT is far more expressive, and "my mouth" fits the context in which Job is saying that even though he is innocent, if he spoke in a court setting in the presence of God he would be overwhelmed, confused, and no doubt condemn himself. 20 tn: The verb has the declarative sense in the Hiphil, "to declare guilty [or wicked]" or "to condemn." 21 tn: The verb אָנֹכִי tn: Dhorme, in an effort to avoid tautology, makes this a question: "Am I blameless?" The next clause then has Job answering that he does not know. But through the last section Job has been proclaiming his innocence. The other way of interpreting these verses is to follow NIV and make all of them hypothetical ("If I were blameless, he would pronounce me guilty") and then come to this verse with Job saying, "I am blameless." The second clause of this verse does not fit either view very well. In vv. 20, 21, and 22 Job employs the same term for "blameless" ( אָנֹכִי

23 tn: The meaning of the expression "I do not know myself" seems to be, "I do not care." NIV translates it, "I have no concern for my life." sn: Job believes he is blameless and not deserving of all this suffering; he will hold fast to that claim, even if the future is uncertain, especially if that future involved a confrontation with God. 24 tc: The LXX omits the phrase "It is all one." Modern scholars either omit it or transpose it for clarity. sn: The expression "it is one" means that God's dealings with people is indiscriminating. The number "one" could also be taken to mean "the same" – "it is all the same." The implication is that it does not matter if Job is good or evil, if he lives or dies. This is the conclusion of the preceding section. † tn: The relationships of these clauses is in some question. Some think that the poet has inverted the first two, and so they should read, "That is why I have said: 'It is all one.'" Others would take the third clause to be what was said. †† tc: The LXX contains a paraphrase: "for the worthless die, but the righteous are laughed to scorn." sn: The point of these verses is to show – rather boldly – that God does not distinguish between the innocent and the guilty. ‡ sn: This bold anthropomorphism means that by his treatment of the despair of the innocent, God is in essence mocking them. †† tn: The term תַּחַת

††† tn: Some would render this "earth," meaning the whole earth, and having the verse be a general principle for all mankind. But Job may have in mind the more specific issue of individual land.

‡‡‡ sn: The details of the verse are not easy to explain, but the meaning of the whole verse seems to be about the miscarriage of justice in the courts and the failure of God to do anything about it.

§ tn: The subject of the verb is God. The reasoning goes this way: it is the duty of judges to make sure that justice prevails, that restitution and restoration are carried through; but when the wicked gain control of the land of other people, and the judges are ineffective to stop it, then God must be veiling their eyes. §† sn: That these words are strong, if not wild, is undeniable. But Job is only taking the implications of his friends' speeches to their logical conclusion – if God dispenses justice in the world, and there is no justice, then God is behind it all. The LXX omitted these words, perhaps out of reverence for God. §†† tn: This seems to be a broken-off sentence (anacoluthon), and so is rather striking. The scribes transposed the words אָפוּאָ הוּאָ

Heb "I will abandon my face," i.e., change my expression. The construction here is unusual; G. R. Driver connected it to an Arabic word 'adaba, "made agreeable" (IV), and so interpreted this line to mean "make my countenance pleasant" ("Problems in the Hebrew text of Job," VTSup 3 [1955]: 76). M. Dahood found a Ugaritic root meaning "make, arrange" ("The Root 'zb II in Job," JBL 78 [1959]: 303-9), and said, "I will arrange my face." But see H. G. Williamson, "A Reconsideration of 'azab II in Ugaritic," ZAW 87 (1985): 74-85; Williamson shows it is probably not a legitimate cognate. D. J. A. Clines ( Job [WBC], 219) observes that with all these suggestions there are too many homonyms for the root. The MT construction is still plausible. 20 tn: In the Hiphil of בָּלַע

21 tn: The word was used in Job 3:25; it has the idea of "dread, fear, tremble at." The point here is that even if Job changes his appearance, he still dreads the sufferings, because he knows that God is treating him as a criminal. 22 sn: See Job 7:15; see also the translation by G. Perles, "I tremble in every nerve" ("The Fourteenth Edition of Gesenius-Buhl's Dictionary," JQR 18 [1905/06]: 383-90). 23 tn: The conjunction "for" is supplied in the translation. 24 sn: A. B. Davidson ( Job, 73) appropriately notes that Job's afflictions were the proof of his guilt in the estimation of God. If God held him innocent, he would remove the afflictions. 25 tn: The clause simply has "I am guilty." It is the same type of construction found in v. 24. It is also the opposite of that in v. 20. GKC 317 §107. n lists this as an example of the use of the imperfect to express an obligation or necessity according to the judgment of others; it would therefore mean "if I am to be guilty." 26 tn: The demonstrative pronoun is included to bring particular emphasis to the question, as if to say, "Why in the world..." (see R. J. Williams, Hebrew Syntax, 24, §118). 27 tn: The verb means "tire oneself"; see 3:17. 28 tn: Here הִבֵּל

‡† tn: The relative pronoun is understood in this clause. ‡‡ tn: The jussive in conditional sentences retains its voluntative sense: let something be so, and this must happen as a consequence (see GKC 323 §109. i). ‡‡† sn: The idiom of "lay his hand on the two of us" may come from a custom of a judge putting his hands on the two in order to show that he is taking them both under his jurisdiction. The expression can also be used for protection (see Ps 139:5). Job, however, has a problem in that the other party is God, who himself will be arbiter in judgment. ‡‡‡ tn: The verse probably continues the description from the last verse, and so a relative pronoun may be supplied here as well. § tn: According to some, the reference of this suffix would be to God. The arbiter would remove the rod of God from Job. But others take it as a separate sentence with God removing his rod. §† sn: The "rod" is a symbol of the power of God to decree whatever judgments and afflictions fall upon people. §†† tn: "His terror" is metonymical; it refers to the awesome majesty of God that overwhelms Job and causes him to be afraid. §‡ tn: There is no conjunction with this cohortative; but the implication from the context is that if God's rod were withdrawn, if the terror were removed, then Job would speak up without fear. §†† tn: The last half of the verse is rather cryptic: "but not so I with me." NIV renders it "but as it now stands with me, I cannot." This is very smooth and interpretive. Others transpose the two halves of the verse to read, "Since it is not so, I with myself will commune and not fear him." Job would be saying that since he cannot contend with God on equal terms, and since there is no arbiter, he will come on his own terms. English versions have handled this differently: "for I know I am not what I am thought to be" (NEB); "since this is not the case with me" (NAB); "I do not see myself like that at all" (JB). §† tn: The Hebrew has נִפְשִׁי §‡ tn: The verb is pointed like a Qal form but is originally a Niphal from קוּט

26 sn: In this verse Job asks whether or not God is liable to making mistakes or errors of judgment. He wonders if God has no more insight than his friends have. Of course, the questions are rhetorical, for he knows otherwise. But his point is that God seems to be making a big mistake here. 27 tn: The Hebrew has repeated here "like the days of," but some scholars think that this was an accidental replacement of what should be here, namely, "like the years of." D. J. A. Clines notes that such repetition is not uncommon in Job, but suggests that the change should be made for English style even if the text is not emended (Job [WBC], 221). This has been followed in the present translation. sn: The question Job asks concerns the mode of life and not just the length of it (see Job 7:1). Humans spend their days and years watching each other and defending themselves. But there is also the implication that if God is so limited like humans he may not uncover Job's sins before he dies. 28 tn: The clause seems to go naturally with v. 4: do you have eyes of flesh...that you have to investigate? For that reason some like Duhm would delete v. 5. But v. 5 adds to the premise: are you also like a human running out of time that you must try to find out my sin? 29 tn: The imperfect verbs in this verse are best given modal nuances. Does God have such limitations that he must make such an investigation? H. H. Rowley observes that Job implies that God has not yet found the iniquity, or extracted a confession from him (Job [NCBC], 84). 30 tn: Heb "and there is no deliverer." sn: The fact is that humans are the work of God's hands. †† tn: Heb "together round about and you destroy me." The second half of this verse is very difficult. Most commentators follow the LXX and connect the first two words with the second colon as the MT accents indicate (NJPS, "then destroyed every part of me"), rather than with the first colon ("and made me complete," J. E. Hartley, Job [NICOT], 185). Instead of "together" some read "after." Others see in וביבֹּ

The preposition "like" creates a small tension here. So some ignore the preposition and read "clay" as an adverbial accusative of the material (GKC 371 §117. hh but cf. 379 §119. i with reference to beth essentialia: "as it were, by clay"). The NIV gets around the problem with a different meaning for the verb: "you molded me like clay." Some suggest the meaning was "as [with] clay" (in the same manner that we have "as [in] the day of Midian" [Isa 9:4]). ‡† tn: The text has a conjunction: "and to dust...." ‡‡ tn: The verb וַתִּקַּח

15 If I am guilty, §§§ woe<sup>18</sup> to me, and if I am innocent, I cannot lift my head; <sup>19</sup>

I am full of shame, <sup>20</sup> and satiated with my affliction. <sup>21</sup>

and again<sup>24</sup> you display your power <sup>25</sup> against me.

§† sn: The meaning of the line is that this was God's purpose all along. "These things" and "this" refer to the details that will now be given in the next few verses. §†† sn: The contradiction between how God had provided for and cared for Job's life and how he was now dealing with him could only be resolved by Job with the supposition that God had planned this severe treatment from the first as part of his plan. §§† sn: The verbs "guilty" and "innocent" are actually the verbs "I am wicked," and "I am righteous." §§§ tn: The exclamation occurs only here and in Mic 7:1. 18 sn: The action of lifting up the head is a symbol of pride and honor and self-respect (Judg 8:28) – like "hold your head high." In 11:15 the one who is at peace with God lifts his head (face). 19 tn: The expression וַתִּקַּח

20 tn: The last clause is difficult to fit into the verse. It translates easily enough: "and see my affliction." Many commentators follow the suggestion of Geiger to read וַתִּקַּח

וַתִּקַּח

21 tn: The MT has the 3rd person of the verb, "and he lifts himself up." One might assume that the subject is "my head" – but that is rather far removed from the verb. It appears that Job is talking about himself in some way. Some commentators simply emend the text to make it first person. This has the support of Targum Job, which would be expected since it would be interpreting the passage in its context (see D. M. Stec, "The Targum Rendering of WYG'H in Job X 16," VT 34 [1984]: 367-8). Pope and Gordis make the word adjectival, modifying the subject: "proudly you hunt me," but support is lacking. E. Dhorme thinks the line should be parallel to the two preceding it, and so suggests וַתִּקַּח

sn: There is some ambiguity here: Job could be the lion being hunted by God, or God could be hunting Job like a lion hunts its prey. The point of the line is clear in either case. 23 tn: The text uses two verbs without a coordinating conjunction: "then you return, you display your power." This should be explained as a verbal hendiadys, the first verb serving adverbially in the clause (see further GKC 386-87 §120. g). 24 tn: The form is the Hitpael of וַתִּקַּח

25 tn: The text has "you renew/increase your witnesses." This would probably mean Job's sufferings, which were witness to his sins. But some suggested a different word here, one that is cognate to Arabic 'adiya , "to be an enemy; to be hostile": thus "you renew your hostility against me." Less convincing are suggestions that the word is cognate to Ugaritic
"troops" (see W. G. E. Watson, "The Metaphor in Job 10,17," Bib 63 [1982]: 255-57). † tn: The Hebrew simply says "changes and a host are with me." The "changes and a host" is taken as a hendiadys, meaning relieving troops (relief troops of the army). The two words appear together again in 14:14, showing that emendation is to be avoided. The imagery depicts blow after blow from God – always fresh attacks. †† tn: The two imperfect verbs in this section are pours out this stream of words, but he is still not right. 19 tn: The word is literally "be right, righteous." The idea of being right has appeared before for this word (cf. 9:15). The point here is that just because Job talks a lot does not mean he is right or will be shown to be right through it all. 20 tn: The word means "chatter, pratings,

‡ sn: Job had expressed his eagerness to challenge God; Zophar here wishes that God would take up that challenge. ‡† tn: The text seems to be saying "that it [wisdom] is double in understanding." The point is that it is different than Job conceived it – it far exceeded all perception. But some commentators have thought this still too difficult, and so have replaced the word כִּפְלָיִם

‡‡ tn: The verb is the imperative with a † ‡†† tn: Heb "God causes to be forgotten for you part of your iniquity." The meaning is that God was exacting less punishment from Job than Job deserved, for Job could not remember all his sins. This statement is fitting for Zophar, who is the cruelest of Job's friends (see H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 88). Others in an attempt to improve the text make too many unwarranted changes. Some would read וְשָׁחַח לְךָ

‡‡‡ tn: The verb is מָצָא

§ tn: The word means "search; investigation"; but it here means what is discovered in the search (so a metonymy of cause for the effect). ‡† tn: The same verb is now found in the second half of the verse, with a slightly different sense – "attain, reach." A. R. Ceresko notes this as an example of antanaclasis (repetition of a word with a lightly different sense – "find/attain"). See "The Function of Antanaclasis in Hebrew Poetry," CBQ 44 (1982): 560-61. ‡†† tn: The abstract תְּכִלִּית

‡‡‡ tn: The verb means "turn him back." Zophar uses Job's own words (see 9:12). 18 tn: The pronoun is emphatic implying that Zophar indicates that God indeed knows Job's sin even if Job does not. 19 tn: The expression is literally "men of emptiness" (see Ps 26:4). These are false men, for אֲשֶׁן

20 tn: E. Dhorme (Job, 162) reads the prepositional phrase "to him" rather than the negative; he translates the line as "he sees iniquity and observes it closely." 21 tn: Some commentators do not take this last clause as a question, but simply as a statement, namely, that when God sees evil he does not need to ponder or consider it – he knows it instantly. In that case it would be a circumstantial clause: "without considering it." D. J. A. Clines lists quite an array of other interpretations for the line (Job [WBC], 255); for example, "and he is himself unobserved"; taking the word לֹא posture of prayer (see Isa 1:15). The expression means “spread out your palms,” probably meaning that the one praying would fall to his knees, put his forehead to the ground, and spread out his hands in front of him on the ground. 27 † tn: Verse 14 should be taken as a parenthesis and not a continuation of the protasis, because it does not fit with v. 13 in that way (D. J. A. Clines, Job [WBC], 256). † tn: Many commentators follow the Vulgate and read the line “if you put away the sin that is in your hand.” They do this because the imperative comes between the protasis (v. 13) and the apodosis (v. 15) and does not appear to be clearly part of the protasis. The idea is close to the MT, but the MT is much more forceful – if you find sin in your hand, get rid of it. †† tn: The absolute certainty of the statement is communicated with the addition of יָ.

‡ tn: For this use of the preposition ׀

‡† tn: The word “lift up” is chosen to recall Job’s statement that he could not lift up his head (10:15); and the words “without spot” recall his words “filled with shame.” The sentence here says that he will lift up his face in innocence and show no signs of God’s anger on him. ‡‡ tn: The form קָצַח

קָצַח

‡‡† tn: For a second time (see v. 13) Zophar employs the emphatic personal pronoun. Could he be providing a gentle reminder that Job might have forgotten the sin that has brought this trouble? After all, there will come a time when Job will not remember this time of trial. ‡‡‡ sn: It is interesting to note in the book that the resolution of Job’s trouble did not come in the way that Zophar prescribed it. § tn: The perfect verb forms an abbreviated relative clause (without the pronoun) modifying “water.” §† tn: Some translations add the pronoun to make it specifically related to Job (“your life”), but this is not necessary. The word used here has the nuance of lasting life. §†† tn: Heb “and more than the noonday life will arise.” The present translation is an interpretation in the context. The connotation of “arise” in comparison with the noonday, and in contrast with the darkness, supports the interpretation.

§† tn: The form in the MT is the 3fsg imperfect verb, “[though] it be dark.” Most commentators revocalize the word to make it a noun (תִּשְׁכַּח

§†† tn: The Hebrew verb means “to dig”; but this does not provide a good meaning for the verse. A. B. Davidson offers an interpretation of “search,” suggesting that before retiring at night Job would search and find everything in order. Some offer a better solution, namely, redefining the word on the basis of Arabic hafara, “to protect” and repointing it to תִּשְׁכַּח

§† tn: The clause that reads “and there is no one making you afraid,” is functioning circumstantially here (see 5:4; 10:7). §† tn: Heb “they will stroke your face,” a picture drawn from the domestic scene of a child stroking the face of the parent. The verb is a Piel, meaning “stroke, make soft.” It is used in the Bible of seeking favor from God (supplication); but it may on the human level also mean seeking to sway people by flattery. See further D. R. Ap-Thomas, “Notes on Some Terms Relating to Prayer,” VT 6 (1956): 225-41. §§† tn: The verb הָצַח

§§† tn: Heb a “place of escape” (with this noun pattern). There is no place to escape to because they all perish. §§§ tn: The word is to be interpreted as a metonymy; it represents what is hoped for. 18 tn: Heb “the breathing out of the soul”; cf. KJV, ASV “the giving up of the ghost.” The line is simply saying that the brightest hope that the wicked have is death. 19 sn: This long speech of Job falls into three parts: in 12:2-25 Job expresses his resentment at his friends’ attitude of superiority and acknowledges the wisdom of God; then, in 13:1-28 Job expresses his determination to reason with God, expresses his scorn for his friends’ advice, and demands to know what his sins are; and finally, in 14:1-22 Job laments the brevity of life and the finality of death. 20 tn: The expression “you are the people” is a way of saying that the friends hold the popular opinion – they represent it. The line is sarcastic. Commentators do not think the parallelism is served well by this, and so offer changes for “people.” Some have suggested “you are complete” (based on Arabic), “you are the strong one” (based on Ugaritic), etc. J. A. Davies tried to solve the difficulty by making the second clause in the verse a paratactic relative clause: “you are the people with whom wisdom will die” (“Note on Job 12:2,” VT 25 [1975]: 670-71). 21 sn: The sarcasm of Job admits their claim to wisdom, as if no one has it besides them. But the rest of his speech will show that they do not have a monopoly on it. 22 tn: The word is literally “heart,” meaning a mind or understanding. 23 tn: Because this line is repeated in 13:2, many commentators delete it from this verse (as does the LXX). The Syriac translates כָּל

24 tn: Heb “With whom are not such things as these?” The point is that everyone knows the things that these friends have been saying – they are commonplace. 25 tn: Some are troubled by the disharmony with “I am” and “to his friend.” Even though the difficulty is not insurmountable, some have emended the text. Some simply changed the verb to “he is,” which was not very compelling. C. D. Isbell argued that הָצַח

26 tn: The word simply means “laughter”; but it can also mean the object of laughter (see Jer 20:7). The LXX jumps from one “laughter” to the next, eliminating everything in between, presumably due to haplography. 27 tn: Heb “his friend.” A number of English versions (e.g., NASB, NIV, NRSV, NLT) take this collectively, “to my friends.” 28 tn: Heb “one calling to God and he answered him.”

Hartley (Job [NICOT], 216) observes, in this section Job argues that respected tradition “must not be accepted uncritically.” §† tn: The singular verb is used here with the plural collective subject (see GKC 464 §145. k). §†† tn: The word in the MT means “to complain,” not simply “to speak,” and one would expect animals as the object here in parallel to the last verse. So several commentators have replaced the word with words for animals or reptiles – totally different words (cf. NAB, “reptiles”). The RSV and NRSV have here the word “plants” (see 30:4, 7; and Gen 21:15). §‡ tn: A. B. Davidson (Job, 90) offers a solution by taking “earth” to mean all the lower forms of life that teem in the earth (a metonymy of subject). §†† tn: This line could also be translated “by all these,” meaning “who is not instructed by nature?” (H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 93). But D. J. A. Clines points out that the verses have presented the animals as having knowledge and communicating it, so the former reading would be best (Job [WBC], 279). §† tc: Some commentators have trouble with the name “Yahweh” in this verse, which is not the pattern in the poetic section of Job. But to limit this to human beings requires the qualification with “man.” 18 tn: The ׀

In Job 13:1 when Job looks back to this part, he refers to both the eye and the ear. In vv. 13-25 Job refers to many catastrophes which he could not have seen, but must have heard about. 21 tn: The statement in the Hebrew Bible simply has “among the aged – wisdom.” Since this seems to be more the idea of the friends than of Job, scholars have variously tried to rearrange it. Some have proposed that Job is citing his friends: “With the old men, you say, is wisdom” (Budde, Gray, Hitzig). Others have simply made it a question (Weiser). But others take אֶל

‡† tn: The literal rendering of the construct would be "healers of worthlessness." Ewald and Dillmann translated it "patchers" based on a meaning in Arabic and Ethiopic; this would give the idea "botchers." But it makes equally good sense to take "healers" as the meaning, for Job's friends came to minister comfort and restoration to him – but they failed. See P. Humbert, "Maladie et médecine dans l'AT," RHPR 44 (1964): 1-29. ††† tn: The construction is the imperfect verb in the wish formula preceded by the infinitive that intensifies it. The Hiphil is not directly causative here, but internally – "keep silent." †††† tn: The text literally reads, "and it would be for you for wisdom," or "that it would become your wisdom." Job is rather sarcastic here, indicating if they shut up they would prove themselves to be wise (see Prov 17:28). § sn: Job first will argue with his friends. 22 tn: The parallelism of "dust" and "ashes" is fairly frequent in scripture. But "proverbs of ashes" is difficult. The genitive is certainly describing the proverbs; it could be classified as a genitive of apposition, proverbs that are/have become ashes. Ashes represent something that at one time may have been useful, but now has been reduced to what is worthless. 23 tn: There is a division of opinion on the source of this word. Some take it from "answer", related to Arabic, Aramaic, and Syriac words for "answer," and so translate it "responses" (JB). Others take it from a word for "back," with a derived meaning of the "boss" of the shield, and translate it bulwark or "defenses" (NEB, RSV, NIV). The idea of "answers" may fit the parallelism better, but "defenses" can be taken figuratively to refer to verbal defenses. 24 sn: Any defense made with clay would crumble on impact. 25 tn: The Hebrew has a pregnant construction: "be silent from me," meaning "stand away from me in silence," or "refrain from talking with me." See GKC 384 §119. ff. The LXX omits "from me," as do several commentators. 26 tn: The verb is the Piel cohortative; following the imperative of the first colon this verb would show purpose or result. It seems to be drawn from animal imagery in which the wild beast seizes the prey and carries it off to a place of security. The idea would then be that Job may be destroying himself. An animal that fights with its flesh (prey) in its mouth risks losing it. Other commentators do not think this is satisfactory, but they are unable to suggest anything better. 31 tn: There is a textual difficulty here that factors into the interpretation of the verse. But if someone were to show up and have proof of sin against him, he would be silent and die (literally “keep silent and expire”). §†† tn: The line reads “do not do two things.” §† tn: “God” is supplied to the verse, for the address is now to him. They all emphasize different kinds of sins and different degrees of willfulness. Job is demanding that any sins be brought up. Both Job and his friends agree that great afflictions would have to indicate great offenses – he wants to know what they are. 20 sn: The anthropomorphism of “hide the face” indicates a withdrawal of favor and an outpouring of wrath (see Ps 30:7 [8]; Isa 54:8; Ps 27:9). Sometimes God “hides his face” to make himself invisible or aloof (see 34:29). In other words, it appears to be dead, but actually is not completely dead. 23 tn: The LXX translates "dust" [soil] with "rock," probably in light of the earlier illustration of the tree growing in the rocks. sn: Job is thinking here of a tree that dies or decays because of a drought rather than being uprooted, because the next verse will tell how it can revive with water. 24 tn: The personification adds to the comparison with people – the tree is credited with the sense of smell to detect the water. 25 tn: The sense of "flourish" for this verb is found in Ps 92:12,13[13,14], and Prov 14:11. §§‡    sn: Eliphaz probably thinks that Edom was the proverbial home of wisdom, and so the reference here would be to his own people. If, as many interpret, the biblical writer is using these accounts to put Yahwistic ideas into the discussion, then the reference would be to Canaan at the time of the fathers. At any rate, the tradition of wisdom to Eliphaz has not been polluted by foreigners, but has retained its pure and moral nature from antiquity.

§§§    tn: Heb “all the days of the wicked, he suffers.” The word “all” is an adverbial accusative of time, stating along with its genitives (“of the days of a wicked man”) how long the individual suffers.

When the subject is composed of a noun in construct followed by a 21    tn: The word “fill” is not in the Hebrew text, but has been sup-

 Hiphil imperfect negated: “he does not believe” or “he has no confidence.” It is followed by the infinitive construct functioning as the direct object – he does not expect to return (to escape) from darkness.
 sn: The meaning of this line is somewhat in question. H. H. Rowley ( Job [NCBC], 111) thinks it could mean that he is afraid he will not wake up from the night, or he dreads misfortune, thinking it will be final for him. 24    sn: In the context of these arguments, “darkness” probably refers to calamity, and so the wicked can expect a calamity that is final. 25    tn: Heb “he is watched [or waited for] by the sword.” G. R. Driver reads it, “he is marked down for the sword” (“Problems in the Hebrew text of Job,” VTSup 3 [1955]: 78). Ewald suggested “laid up for the sword.” Ball has “looks for the sword.” The MT has a passive participle from פָּחַד

 LXX has “he has been appointed for food for vultures,” reading אֲיָהּ tn: This line is fraught with difficulties (perceived or real), which prompt numerous suggestions. The reading of the MT is “he knows that a day of darkness is fixed in his hand,” i.e., is certain. Many commentators move “day of darkness” to the next verse, following the LXX. Then, suggestions have been offered for

נִכְוֶה                      נִכְוֶה                      נִכְוֶה

††    tn: If “day and darkness” are added to this line, then this verse is made into a tri-colon – the main reason for transferring it away from the last verse. But the newly proposed reading follows the LXX structure precisely, as if that were the approved construction. The Hebrew of MT has “distress and anguish terrify him.” ‡ tn: This last colon is deleted by some, moved to v. 26 by others, and the NEB puts it in brackets. The last word (translated here as “launch an attack”) occurs only here . HALOT 472 s.v. קִידוֹר

Others have made more extensive changes. Pope and Anderson follow Tur-Sinai in accepting “with full battle armor.” But the main idea seems to be that of a headlong assault on God. ‡‡‡    tn: Heb “with the thickness of the bosses of his shield.” The bosses are the convex sides of the bucklers, turned against the foe. This is a defiant attack on God. §    sn: This verse tells us that he is not in any condition to fight, because he is bloated and fat from luxurious living. §†    tn: D. W. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 113). §††    tn: The verbal idea serves here to modify “houses” as a relative clause; so a relative pronoun is added.

The MT has “he shall depart by the breath of his mouth.” If this reading stands, then it must be understood that it is the breath of God’s mouth that is intended. 21 tn: Now, in the second half of the verse, the metaphor of a tree with branches begins. † tn: The verb means "to treat violently" or "to wrong." It indicates that the vine did not nourish the grapes well enough for them to grow, and so they dry up and drop off. †† sn: The point is that like the tree the wicked man shows signs of life but produces nothing valuable. The olive tree will have blossoms in the years that it produces no olives, and so eventually drops the blossoms. ‡ tn: The LXX renders this line: "for death is the witness of an ungodly man. "Death" represents "barren/sterile," and "witness" represents "assembly." †† sn: This may refer to the fire that struck Job (cf. 1:16). †† tn: Heb "the tents of bribery." The word "bribery" can mean a "gift," but most often in the sense of a bribe in court. It indicates that the wealth and the possessions that the wicked man has gained may have been gained unjustly. ††† tn: Infinitives absolute are used in this verse in the place of finite verbs. They lend a greater vividness to the description, stressing the basic meaning of the words. ††† tn: At the start of the speech Eliphaz said Job's belly was filled with the wind; now it is there that he prepares deception. This inclusio frames the speech. § sn: In the next two chapters we have Job's second reply to Eliphaz. Job now feels abandoned by God and by his friends, and so complains that this all intensifies his sufferings. But he still holds to his innocence as he continues his appeal to God as his witness. There are four sections to this speech: in vv. 2-5 he dismisses the consolation his friends offered; in vv. 6-17 he laments that he is abandoned by God and man; in 16:8- 17:9 he makes his appeal to God in heaven as a witness; and finally, in 10-16 he anticipates death. §† tn: The expression uses the Piel participle in construct: קַחְמִי עֵמֶל

28 tn: The subject is "my calamity." 29 tn: The verb is used in Ps 109:24 to mean "to be lean"; and so "leanness" is accepted here for the noun by most. Otherwise the word is "lie, deceit." Accordingly, some take it here as "my slanderer" or "my liar" (gives evidence against me). 30 tn: The referent of these pronouns in v. 9 ("his anger...he has gnashed...his teeth...his eyes") is best taken as God. 31 sn: The figure used now is that of a wild beast. God's affliction of Job is compared to the attack of such an animal. Cf. Amos 1:11. 32 tn: The verb נָחַץ

The verse describes God's relentless pursuit of Job. 34 tn: "People" is supplied; the Hebrew verb is third plural. The colon reads, "they have opened against me with [the preposition is instrumental] their mouth." The gestures here follow the animal imagery; they reflect destructive opposition and attack (see Ps 22:13 among others). 35 tn: This is an "insult" or a "reproach."

Job's dilemma is serious, but common to the human experience: the hostility of God toward him is baffling, but he is conscious of his innocence and can call on God to be his witness. 23 tn: The parallelism now uses the Aramaic word "my advocate" - the one who testifies on my behalf. Other than such a change (which would involve changing the vowels) one would have to interpret similarly by seeing the imperatives as a kind of hendiadys, with the main emphasis being on the second imperative, "make a pledge." §† sn: The idiom is "to strike the hand." Here the wording is a little different, "Who is he that will strike himself into my hand?" §‡ tn: This half-verse gives the reason for the next half-verse. §§† sn: The pronoun their refers to Job's friends. §§§ tn: Heb "for a portion." This verse is rather obscure. The words are not that difficult, but the sense of them in this context is. Some take the idea to mean "he denounces his friends for a portion," and others have a totally different idea of "he invites his friends to share with him." The former fits the context better, indicating that Job's friends speak out against him for some personal gain. The second half of the verse then promises that his children will suffer loss for this attempt at gain. The line is surely proverbial. A number of other interpretations can be found in the commentaries. 18 tn: The verb is the third person, and so God is likely the subject. The LXX has "you have made me." The two words together intensify the idea of the flame. 27 tn: The LXX interprets a little more precisely: “his lamp shall be put out with him.” sn: This thesis of Bildad will be questioned by Job in 21:17 – how often is the lamp of the wicked snuffed out? 28 tn: Heb “the steps of his vigor,” the genitive being the attribute. 29 tn: The verb יָצַר

Yet from his despair a new hope emerges with a stronger faith. Even though he knows he will die in his innocence, he knows that God will vindicate him and that he will be conscious of the vindication. There are four parts to this reply: Job’s impatience with the speeches of his friends (2-6), God’s abandonment of Job and his attack (7-12), Job’s forsaken state and appeal to his friends (13-22), and Job’s confidence that he will be vindicated (23-29). ‡† tn: Heb “torment my soul,” with “soul” representing the self or individual. The Hebrew has “and he reckons me for him like his adversaries.” Most would change the last word to a singular in harmony with the versions, “as his adversary.” But some retain the MT pointing and try to explain it variously: Weiser suggests that the plural might have come from a cultic recitation of Yahweh’s deeds against his enemies; Fohrer thinks it refers to the primeval enemies; Gordis takes it as distributive, “as one of his foes.” If the plural is retained, this latter view makes the most sense.

Instead of "brothers," the sense could be "siblings" (both brothers and sisters; G. R. Driver and G. B. Gray, Job [ICC], 2:168). §§† sn: The use of the verb "rise" is probably fairly literal. The first half seems to say, "My skin and my flesh sticks to my bones." Some think that this is too long, and that the bones can stick to the skin, or the flesh, but not both. Dhorme proposes "in my skin my flesh has rotted away" (כָּבַח)

‡‡ tn: This verse on the whole has some serious interpretation problems that have allowed commentators to go in several directions. The verbal clause is "they strike off this," which is then to be taken as a passive in view of the fact that there is no expressed subject. Some have thought that Job was referring to this life, and that after his disease had done its worst he would see his vindication (see T. J. Meek, "Job 19:25-27," VT 6 [1956]: 100-103; E. F. Sutcliffe, "Further notes on Job, textual and exegetical," Bib 31 [1950]: 377; and others). But Job has been clear - he does not expect to live and see his vindication in this life. There are a host of other interpretations that differ greatly from the sense expressed in the MT. Duhm, for example, has "and another shall arise as my witness." E. Dhorme (Job, 284-85) argues that the vindication comes after death; he emends the verb to get a translation: "and that, behind my skin, I shall stand up." He explains this to mean that it will be Job in person who will be present at the ultimate drama. But the interpretation is forced, and really unnecessary. ††† tn: The Hebrew phrase is "and from my flesh." This could mean "without my flesh," i.e., separated from my flesh, or "from my flesh," i.e., in or with my flesh. The former view is taken by those who think Job's vindication will come in this life, and who find the idea of a resurrection unlikely to be in Job's mind. The latter view is taken by those who interpret the preceding line as meaning death and the next verse underscoring that it will be his eye that will see. This would indicate that Job's faith rises to an unparalleled level at this point. ††† tn: H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 140) says, "The text of this verse is so difficult, and any convincing reconstruction is so unlikely, that it seems best not to attempt it." His words have gone unheeded, even by himself, and rightly so. There seem to be two general interpretations, the details of some words notwithstanding. An honest assessment of the evidence would have to provide both interpretations, albeit still arguing for one. Here Job says he will see God. This at the least means that he will witness his vindication, which it seems clear from the other complaints of Job will occur after his death (it is his blood that must be vindicated). But in what way, exactly, Job will see God is not clarified. In this verse the verb that is used is often used of prophetic visions; but in the next verse the plain word for seeing - with his eye - is used. The fulfillment will be more precise than Job may have understood. Rowley does conclude: "Though there is no full grasping of a belief in a worthwhile Afterlife with God, this passage is a notable landmark in the program toward such a belief." The difficulty is that Job expects to die - he would like to be vindicated in this life, but is resolved that he will die. (1) Some commentators think that vv. 25 and 26 follow the wish for vindication now; (2) others (traditionally) see it as in the next life. Some of the other interpretations that take a different line are less impressive, such as Kissane's, "did I but see God...were I to behold God"; or L. Waterman's translation in the English present, making it a mystic vision in which Job already sees that God is his vindicator ("Note on Job 19:23-27: Job's Triumph of Faith," JBL 69 [1950]: 379-80). § tn: The emphasis is on "I" and "for myself." Dhorme (Job, 289-90) found an Arabic word with the meaning "feeling, sensation." He argues that from this idea developed the meanings in the cognates of "thoughts" as well. Similarly, Gordis translates it "my feeling pain." To take this verb as a simple Qal and read it "answers me," does not provide a clear idea. The form can just as easily be taken as a Hiphil, with the sense "causes me to answer." It is Zophar who will "return" and who will "answer." §† tn: The MT has "Do you not know?" The question can be interpreted as a rhetorical question affirming that Job must know this. The question serves to express the conviction that the contents are well-known to the audience (see GKC 474 §150. e). §†† tn: Heb "from the putting of man on earth." The infinitive is the object of the preposition, which is here temporal. If "man" is taken as the subjective genitive, then the verb would be given a passive translation. Here "man" is a generic, referring to "mankind" or "the human race." §† tn: The expression in the text is "quite near." This indicates that it is easily attained, and that its end is near. §†† tn: For the discussion of הֶנָּח §† tn: The phrase is "until a moment," meaning it is short-lived. But see J. But many argue that there is no reason to remove a coarse expression from Zophar. §§† tn: Heb "and they do not find him." The verb has no expressed subject, and so here is equivalent to a passive. The clause itself is taken adverbially in the sentence. §§§ tn: Heb "the eye that had seen him." tn: Some commentators are surprised to see "his hands" here, thinking the passage talks about his death. Budde changed it to "his children," by altering one letter. R. Gordis argued that "hand" can mean offspring, and so translated it that way without changing anything in the text ("A note on YAD," JBL 62 [1943]: 343). 20 tn: "Bones" is often used metonymically for the whole person, the bones being the framework, meaning everything inside, as well as the body itself. 21 sn: This line means that he dies prematurely – at the height of his youthful vigor. 22 tn: The conjunction וְ

The Niphal perfect simply means "is turned" or "turns"; "sour is supplied in the translation to clarify what is meant. 26 tn: The word is "in his loins" or "within him." Some translate more specifically "bowels." 27 sn: Some commentators suggest that the ancients believed that serpents secreted poison in the gall bladder, or that the poison came from the gall bladder of serpents. In any case, there is poison (from the root "bitter") in the system of the wicked person; it may simply be saying it is that type of poison. 28 tn: Heb "swallowed."

The "satisfaction" is actually the word for "quiet; peace; calmness; ease." He was driven by greedy desires, or he felt and displayed an insatiable greed. §† tn: The verb is the passive participle of the verb קָמַד

§‡ tn: The verb is difficult to translate in this line. It basically means "to cause to escape; to rescue." Some translate this verb as "it is impossible to escape"; this may work, but is uncertain. Others translate the verb in the sense of saving something else: N. Sarna says, "Of his most cherished possessions he shall save nothing" ("The Interchange of the Preposition bet and min in Biblical Hebrew," JBL 78 [1959]: 315-16). The RSV has "he will save nothing in which he delights"; NIV has "he cannot save himself by his treasure." §§† tn: Heb "for his eating," which is frequently rendered "for his gluttony." Clines observes that to do justice to the three jussives in the verse, one would have to translate "May it be, to fill his belly to the full, that God should send...and rain" (Job [WBC], 477). The jussive form of the verb at the beginning of the verse could also simply introduce a protasis of a conditional clause (see GKC 323 §109. h, i). This would mean, "if he [God] is about to fill his [the wicked's] belly to the full, he will send...." The NIV reads "when he has filled his belly." These fit better, because the context is talking about the wicked in his evil pursuit being cut down. 21 tn: "God" is understood as the subject of the judgment. 22 tn: Heb "the anger of his wrath." 23 tn: Heb "rain down upon him, on his flesh." But whereas in the last speech, when he looked on his suffering from the perspective of his innocence, he found great faith and hope, in this chapter when he surveys the divine government of the world, he sinks to despair. The speech can be divided into five parts: he appeals for a hearing (2-6), he points out the prosperity of the wicked (7-16), he wonders exactly when the godless suffer (17-22), he shows how death levels everything (23-26), and he reveals how experience contradicts his friends' argument (27-34). ‡‡ tn: The intensity of the appeal is again expressed by the imperative followed by the infinitive absolute for emphasis. See note on "listen carefully" in 13:17. ††† tc: The LXX negates the sentence, "that I may not have this consolation from you." ‡‡† tn: The word תַּנְחֹמְתֵיכֶם

§†† tn: The addition of the independent pronoun at the beginning of the sentence ("Is it I / against a man / my complaint") strengthens the pronominal suffix on "complaint" (see GKC 438 §135. f). §† sn: The point seems to be that if his complaint were merely against men he might expect sympathy from other men; but no one dares offer him sympathy when his complaint is against God. So he will give free expression to his spirit (H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 147). §‡ tn: On disjunctive interrogatives, see GKC 475 §150. g. §§† tn: Heb "why should my spirit/breath not be short" (see Num 21:4; Judg 16:16). §§‡ tn:

19 tn: The main clause is introduced here by the conjunction, following the adverbial clause of time. 20 tn: Some commentators take "shudder" to be the subject of the verb, "a shudder seizes my body." But the word is feminine (and see the usage, especially in Job 9:6 and 18:20). It is the subject in Isa 21:4; Ps 55:6; and Ezek 7:18. 21 sn: A. B. Davidson (Job, 154) clarifies that Job's question is of a universal scope. In the government of God, why do the wicked exist at all?  that their well-being is from God, which is the problem Job is raising

§ sn: The question implies the answer will be "vanished" or "gone." §† tn: Heb "And where is the tent, the dwellings of the wicked." The word "dwellings of the wicked" is in apposition to "tent." A relative pronoun must be supplied in the translation. §†† tc: The LXX reads, "Ask those who go by the way, and do not disown their signs." tn: The idea is that the merchants who travel widely will talk about what they have seen and heard. These travelers give a different account of the wicked; they tell how he is spared. E. Dhorme ( Job, 322) interprets "signs" concretely: "Their custom was to write their names and their thoughts somewhere at the main cross-roads. The main roads of Sinai are dotted with these scribblings made by such passers of a day." §† tn: The verb means "to be led forth." To be "led forth in the day of trouble" means to be delivered. §†† tn: The expression "and he has done" is taken here to mean "what he has done."

18 sn: The third and final cycle of speeches now begins with Eliphaz' final speech. Eliphaz will here underscore the argument that man's ills are brought about by sin; he will then deduce from Job's sufferings the sins he must have committed and the sinful attitude he has about God. The speech has four parts: Job's suffering is proof of his sin (2-5), Job's sufferings demonstrate the kinds of sin Job committed (6-11), Job's attitude about God (12-20), and the final appeal and promise to Job (21-30). 19 tn: Some do not take this to be parallel to the first colon, taking this line as a statement, but the parallel expressions here suggest the question is repeated. 20 tn: The word טעַ

† tn: The term עָרַץ

†† tn: The idiom is “a man of arm” (= “powerful”; see Ps 10:15). This is in comparison to the next line, “man of face” (= “dignity; high rank”; see Isa 3:5). ‡ tn: Heb “and a man of arm, to whom [was] land.” The line is in contrast to the preceding one, and so the vav here introduces a concessive clause. ††† tn: The expression is unusual: “the one lifted up of face.” This is the “honored one,” the one to whom the dignity will be given. ‡†† tn: Many commentators simply delete the verse or move it elsewhere. Most take it as a general reference to Job, perhaps in apposition to the preceding verse. †††† tn: The “arms of the orphans” are their helps or rights on which they depended for support. ‡††† tn: The verb in the text is Pual: אָרַץ

§ tn: Heb “or dark you cannot see.” Some commentators and the RSV follow the LXX in reading אֶרֶץ אֶרֶץ

‡†† tn: The word אָרַץ

‡††† tn: This reading preserves the text as it is. The nouns “high” and “heavens” would then be taken as adverbial accusatives of place (see GKC 373-74 §118. g). ‡†† tn: The parallel passage in Isa 40:26-27, as well as the context here, shows that the imperative is to be retained here. The LXX has “he sees.” ‡††† tn: Heb “head of the stars.” ‡†† sn: Eliphaz is giving to Job the thoughts and words of the pagans, for they say, “How does God know, and is there knowledge in the Most High?” (see Ps 73:11; 94:11). ‡†† tn: Heb “and he does not see.” The implied object is “us.” ‡††† sn: The word is “circle; dome”; here it is the dome that covers the earth, beyond which God sits enthroned. A. B. Davidson ( Job, 165) suggests “on the arch of heaven” that covers the earth. ‡††† sn: The idea suggested here is that God is not only far off, but he is unconcerned as he strolls around heaven – this is what Eliphaz says Job means. ‡††† tn: The “old path” here is the way of defiance to God. The text in these two verses is no doubt making reference to the flood in Genesis, one of the perennial examples of divine judgment. 18 tn: The word “men” is when the flood<sup>20</sup> was poured out<sup>21</sup>

 17 They were saying to God, ‘Turn away from us,’ yet the counsel of the wicked <sup>25</sup>

 19 The righteous see their destruction<sup>27</sup> and rejoice;
 the innocent mock them scornfully, <sup>28</sup> saying,

 and fire consumes their wealth.’

not in the Hebrew text, but has been supplied to clarify the relative pronoun “who.” 19 tn: The verb אָרַץ

20 tn: The clause has “and [it was] not the time.” It may be used adverbially here. 21 tn: The word is אָרַץ

22 tn: The verb אָרַץ

23 tn: This word is then to be taken as an adverbial accusative of place. Another way to look at this verse is what A. B. Davidson ( Job, 165) proposes “whose foundation was poured away and became a flood.” This would mean that that on which they stood sank away. 24 tn: The form in the text is “to them.” The LXX and the Syriac versions have “to us.” 25 tn: The pronoun is added for this emphasis; it has “but he” before the verb. 26 tn: See Job 10:3. 27 tc: The LXX has “from him,” and this is followed by several commentators. But the MT is to be retained, for Eliphaz is recalling the words of Job. Verses 17 and 18 are deleted by a number of commentators as a gloss because they have many similarities to 21:14-16. But Eliphaz is recalling what Job said, in order to say that the prosperity to which Job alluded was only the prelude to a disaster he denied (H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 156). 28 tn: The line is talking about the rejoicing of the righteous when judgment falls on the wicked. An object (“destruction”) has to be supplied here to clarify this (see Pss 52:6 [8]; 69:32 [33]; 107:42). 29 sn: In Ps 2:4 it was God who mocked the wicked by judging them. 30 tc: The word translated “our enemies” is found only here. The word means “hostility,” but used here as a collective for those who are hostile – “enemies.” Some commentators follow the LXX and read “possessions,” explaining its meaning and derivation in different ways. Gordis simply takes the word in the text and affirms that this is the meaning. On the other hand, to get this, E. Dhorme ( Job, 336) repoints קִיְמוֹת קִיְמוֹת

31 tn: The verb אָרַץ

32 tn: Heb “him”; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity. 33 tn: The two imperatives in this verse imply a relationship of succession and not consequence. 34 tn: The Hebrew word here is אָרַץ 35 tc: M. Dahood has “write his words” (“Metaphor in Job 22:22,” Bib 47 [1966]: 108-9).

† tc: The MT has “you will be built up” (תְּבִנֶה תִּעֲנֶה)

†† tc: The form is the imperative. Eliphaz is telling Job to get rid of his gold as evidence of his repentance. Many commentators think that this is too improbable for Eliphaz to have said, and that Job has lost everything anyway, and so they make proposals for the text. Most would follow Theodotion and the Syriac to read נִשְׁתַּחֲוֶה

‡ tn: The word for “gold” is the rare בָּצָר

‡† tn: The Hebrew text simply has “Ophir,” a metonymy for the gold that comes from there.
 ‡‡ tn: The form for “gold” here is plural, which could be a plural of extension. The LXX and Latin versions have “The Almighty will be your helper against your enemies.” ‡‡† tn: E. Dhorme (Job, 339) connects this word with an Arabic root meaning “to be elevated, steep.” From that he gets “heaps of silver.” ‡‡‡ tc: This is the same verb as in Ps 37:4. G. R. Driver suggests the word comes from another root that means “abandon oneself to, depend on” (“Problems in the Hebrew text of Job,” VTSup 3 [1955]: 84). § tn: The words “to him” are not in the Hebrew text, but are implied. §† tn: The word is גָּוַר
 §†† tn: There is no expressed subject here, and so the verb is taken as a passive voice again. §‡ tn: The word גָּוַר

אֵי אִישׁ אֵי

until he introduces new ideas for his own case with God. His speech unfolds in three parts: Job’s longing to meet God ( 23:2-7), the inaccessibility and power of God ( 23:8-17), the indifference of God ( 24:1-25). §§‡ tc: The MT reads here מְרִי מְרִי

§§§ tc: The MT (followed by the Vulgate and Targum) has “my hand is heavy on my groaning.” This would mean “my stroke is heavier than my groaning” (an improbable view from Targum Job). A better suggestion is that the meaning would be that Job tries to suppress his groans but the hand with which he suppresses them is too heavy (H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 159). Budde, E. Dhorme, J. E. Hartley, and F. I. Andersen all maintain the MT as the more difficult reading. F. I. Andersen (Job [TOTC], 208) indicates that the 18 tn: The preposition can take this meaning; it could be also translated simply “upon.” R. Gordis (Job, 260) reads the preposition “more than,” saying that Job had been defiant (he takes that view) but God’s hand had been far worse. 19 tn: The optative here is again expressed with the verbal clause, “who will give [that] I knew....” 20 tn: The form in Hebrew is וּמֵאֲפָארוֹ

21 tn: This verb also depends on מֵיִתְּנֶנּוּ

22 tn: Or “his place of judgment.” The word is from כּוֹן

‡‡† tn: There is a perfect verb followed by an imperfect in this clause with the protasis and apodosis relationship (see GKC 493 §159. b). § tn: Heb "my foot." §† tn: Heb "held fast." §†† tn: The last clause, "and I have not turned aside," functions adverbially in the sentence. The form אָטַח אָתָּה נִטָּה

Gordis (Job, 262) suggests taking it in the same sense as in Job 14:5: "my limit." §‡‡† tn: Heb "and many such [things] are with him." sn: The text is saying that many similar situations are under God's rule of the world – his plans are infinite. §‡‡† tn: The verb הִכָּח

18 tn: This is a very difficult verse. The Hebrew text literally says: "for I have not been destroyed because of darkness, and because of my face [which] gloom has covered." Most commentators omit the negative adverb, which gives the meaning that Job is enveloped in darkness and reduced to terror. The verb נִצְמַתִּי

19 tn: The preposition מִן
20 tc: The LXX reads "Why are times hidden from the Almighty?" as if to say that God is not interested in the events on the earth. The MT reading is saying that God fails to set the times for judgment and vindication and makes good sense as it stands. 21 tn: The line is short: "they move boundary stones." So some commentators have supplied a subject, such as "wicked men." The reason for its being wicked men is that to move the boundary stone was to encroach dishonestly on the lands of others ( Deut 19:14; 27:17). 22 tc: The LXX reads "and their shepherd." Many commentators accept this reading. But the MT says that they graze the flocks that they have stolen. The difficulty with the MT reading is that there is no suffix on the final verb – but that is not an insurmountable difference. 23 sn: Because of the violence and oppression of the wicked, the poor and needy, the widows and orphans, all are deprived of their rights and forced out of the ways and into hiding just to survive. 24 tc: The verse begins with הֵן

25 tn: That is, "the poor." 26 tc: The MT has "in the working/labor of them," or "when they labor." Some commentators simply omit these words. Dhorme retains them and moves them to go with עֲבָדָה

‡ tn: The verbs in this verse are uncertain. In the first line "reap" is used, and that would be the work of a hired man (and certainly not done at night). The meaning of this second verb is uncertain; it has been taken to mean "glean," which would be the task of the poor. †† tn: Heb "embrace" or "hug." ‡‡ tn: The verb with no expressed subject is here again taken in the passive: "they snatch" becomes "[child] is snatched." ‡‡† tn: This word is usually defined as "violence; ruin." But elsewhere it does mean "breast" (Isa 60:16; 66:11), and that is certainly what it means here. ‡‡† tc: The MT has a very brief and strange reading: "they take as a pledge upon the poor." This could be taken as "they take a pledge against the poor" (ESV). Kamphausen suggested that instead of עַל עוֹל

22 tc: Some commentators join this very short colon to the beginning of v. 17: "they do not know the light. For together..." becomes "for together they have not known the light." 23 tn: Heb "together." 24 tc: Many commentators find vv. 18-24 difficult on the lips of Job, and so identify this unit as a misplaced part of the speech of Zophar. They describe the enormities of the wicked. But a case can also be made for retaining it in this section. Gordis thinks it could be taken as a quotation by Job of his friends' ideas. 25 tn: The verb "say" is not in the text; it is supplied here to indicate that this is a different section. 26 tn: Or "is swift." 27 sn: The wicked person is described here as a spray or foam upon the waters, built up in the agitation of the waters but dying away swiftly. 28 tn: The text reads, "he does not turn by the way of the vineyards." This means that since the land is cursed, he/one does not go there. Bickell emended "the way of the vineyards" to "the treader of the vineyard" (see RSV, NRSV). This would mean that "no wine-presser would turn towards" their vineyards. 29 tn: Heb "the waters of the snow." 30 tn: Or "so Sheol." 31 tn: This is the meaning of the verse, which in Hebrew only has "The grave / they have sinned." 32 tn: Here "womb" is synecdoche, representing one's mother. 33 tc: The form in the text is the active participle, "feed; graze; shepherd." The idea of "prey" is not natural to it. R. Gordis (Job, 270) argues that third he ( n

It is followed by two speeches from Job; and Zophar does not return with his third. Does this mean that the friends have run out of arguments, and that Job is just getting going? Many scholars note that in chs. 26 and 27 there is material that does not fit Job's argument. Many have rearranged the material to show that there was a complete cycle of three speeches. In that light, 26:5-14 is viewed as part of Bildad's speech. Some, however, take Bildad's speech to be only ch. 25, and make 26:5-14 an interpolated hymn. For all the

There may be a reference here to combat in the spiritual world between angels and Satan. The context will show that God has a heavenly host at his disposal, and nothing in heaven or on earth can shatter his peace. "Peace" here could also signify the whole order he establishes. 18 tn: Heb "Is there a number to his troops?" The question is rhetorical: there is no number to them! 19 tc: In place of "light" here the LXX has "his ambush," perhaps reading אֶבְיָאוֹ

20 sn: Bildad here does not come up with new expressions; rather, he simply uses what Eliphaz had said (see Job 4:17-19 and 15:14-16). 21 tn: Heb "not pure in his eyes." 22 tn: The text just has "maggot" and in the second half "worm." Something has to be added to make it a bit clearer. The terms "maggot" and "worm" describe man in his lowest and most ignominious shape. 23 sn: These two chapters will be taken together under this title, although most commentators would assign Job 26:5-14 to Bildad and Job 27:7-23 to Zophar. Those sections will be noted as they emerge. For the sake of outlining, the following sections will be marked off: Job's scorn for Bildad ( 26:2-4); a better picture of God's greatness ( 26:5-14); Job's protestation of innocence ( 27:2-6); and a picture of the condition of the wicked ( 27:7-23). 24 tn: The interrogative clause is used here as an exclamation, and sarcastic at that. Job is saying "you have in no way helped the powerless." The verb uses the singular form, for Job is replying to Bildad. 25 tn: The "powerless" is expressed here by the negative before the word for "strength; power" – "him who has no power" (see GKC 482 §152. u, v). 26 tn: Heb "the arm [with] no strength." Here too the negative expression is serving as a relative clause to modify "arm," the symbol of strength and power, which by metonymy stands for the whole person. "Man of arm" denoted the strong in 22:8. 27 tc: The phrase לֹבֶטֶט

This is an example of the internal object, or a cognate accusative (see GKC 367 §117. q). The LXX has "you all know that you are adding vanity to vanity." §§§††† tn: The expression "allotted by God" interprets the simple prepositional phrase in the text: "with/from God." §§§§†††† tn: R. last two words also constitute the apodosis. 18 tn: Heb "will not be satisfied with bread/food." 19 tn: The text says "will be buried in/by death." A number of passages in the Bible use "death" to mean the plague that kills (see Jer 15:2; Isa 28:3; and BDB 89 s.v. נָקַד

20 tc: The LXX has "their widows" to match the plural, and most commentators harmonize in the same way. 21 tn: The text simply repeats the verb from the last clause. It could be treated as a separate short clause: "He may store it up, but the righteous will wear it. But it also could be understood as the object of the following verb, "[what] he stores up the righteous will wear." The LXX simply has, "All these things shall the righteous gain." 22 tn: Heb נָקַד

23 tn: The Hebrew word is the word for "booth," as in the Feast of Booths. The word describes something that is flimsy; it is not substantial at all. 24 tc: The verb is the Niphal נָקַד

נָקַד! יִנְקַד! 25 tn: Heb "and he is not." One view is that this must mean that he dies, not that his wealth is gone. R. Gordis ( Job, 295) says the first part should be made impersonal: "when one opens one's eyes, the wicked is no longer there." E. Dhorme ( Job, 396) has it more simply: "He has opened his eyes, and it is for the last time." But the other view is that the wealth goes overnight. In support of this is the introduction into the verse of the wealthy. The RSV, NRSV, ESV, and NLT take it that "wealth is gone." 26 tn: Many commentators want a word parallel to "in the night." And so we are offered נָקַד

27 tn: The verb is once again functioning in an adverbial sense. The text has "it hurls itself against him and shows no mercy." 28 tn: If the same subject is to be carried through here, it is the wind. That would make this a bold personification, perhaps suggesting the force of the wind. Others argue that it is unlikely that the wind claps its hands. They suggest taking the verb with an indefinite subject: "he claps" means "one claps. The idea is that of people rejoicing when the wicked are gone. But the parallelism is against this unless the second line is changed as well. R. Gordis ( Job, 296) has "men will clap their hands...men will whistle upon him."

These refrains outline the chapter, giving three sections: there is no known road to wisdom (1-11); no price can buy it (12-19); and only God has it, and only by revelation can man possess it (20-28). †† tn: The poem opens with יָצַד

H. The former seems more likely in the present context; the word "hidden" is supplied in the translation to indicate the mines are "hidden" from sharp-eyed birds of prey above. §§§ sn: The kind of bird mentioned here is debated. The LXX has "vulture," and so some commentaries follow that. The emphasis on the sight favors the view that it is the falcon. 18 tn: Heb "the sons of pride." §§† tn: The MT reads literally, "and the rock was poured out [passive participle] for me as streams of oil." There are some who delete the word "rock" to shorten the line because it seems out of place. But olive trees thrive in rocky soil, and the oil presses are cut into the rock; it is possible that by metonymy all this is intended here (H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 186). §§§ sn: In the public square. The area referred to here should not be thought of in terms of modern western dimensions. The wide space, plaza, or public square mentioned here is the open area in the gate complex where legal and business matters were conducted. The area could be as small as a few hundred square feet. 18 tn: The verb means "to hide; to withdraw." The young men out of respect would withdraw or yield the place of leadership to Job (thus the translation "step aside"). The old men would rise and remain standing until Job took his seat - a sign of respect. 19 tn: The verb here is "hidden" as well as in v. 8. But this is a strange expression for voices. Several argue that the word was erroneously inserted from 8a and needs to be emended. But the word "hide" can have extended meanings of "withdraw; be quiet; silent" (see Gen 31:27). A. Guillaume relates the Arabic habi' a, "the fire dies out," applying the idea of "silent" only to v. 10 (it is a form of repetition of words with different senses, called jinas). The point here is that whatever conversation was going on would become silent or hushed to hear what Job had to say. 20 tn: The words "these things" and "them" in the next colon are not in the Hebrew text, but have been supplied in the translation for clarity. 21 tn: The main clause is introduced by the preterite with the vav ( ו

† sn: The word "father" does not have a wide range of meanings in the OT. But there are places that it is metaphorical, especially in a legal setting like this where the poor need aid. †† tn: The word rendered "fangs" actually means "teeth," i.e., the molars probably; it is used frequently of the teeth of wild beasts. Of course, the language is here figurative, comparing the oppressing enemy to a preying animal. ‡ tn: "I made [him] drop." The verb means "to throw; to cast," throw in the sense of "to throw away." But in the context with the figure of the beast with prey in its mouth, "drop" or "cast away" is the idea. Driver finds another cognate meaning "rescue" (see AJSL 52 [1935/36]: 163). †† tc: The expression in the MT is "with my nest." The figure is satisfactory for the context - a home with all the young together, a picture of unity and safety. In Isa 16:2 the word can mean "nestlings," and with the preposition "with" that might be the meaning here, except that his children had grown up and lived in their own homes. The figure cannot be pushed too far. But the verse apparently has caused enormous problems, because the versions offer a variety of readings and free paraphrases. The LXX has "My age shall grow old as the stem of a palm tree, I shall live a long time." The Vulgate has, "In my nest I shall die and like the palm tree increase my days." G. R. Driver found an Egyptian word meaning "strength" ("Birds in the Old Testament," PEQ 87 [1955]: 138-39). Several read "in a ripe old age" instead of "in my nest" (Pope, Dhorme; see P. P. Saydon, "Philological and Textual Notes to the Maltese Translation of the Old Testament," CBQ 23 [1961]: 252). This requires the verb יָזַק יָזַק

R. Driver, "Problems in the Hebrew text of Job," VTSup 3 [1955]: 86). But if "wait" has the idea of being silent as they wait for him to speak, then the second line would say they were silent for the reason of his advice. The reading of the MT is not impossible. §†† tn: The verb simply means "dropped," but this means like the rain. So the picture of his words falling on them like the gentle rain, drop by drop, is what is intended (see Deut 32:2). §‡ tn: The phrase "people wait for" is not in the Hebrew text, but has been supplied in the translation. §†† sn: The analogy is that they received his words eagerly as the dry ground opens to receive the rains. §† tn: The §‡ tn: The connection of this clause with the verse is difficult. The line simply reads: "[if] I would smile at them, they would not believe." Obviously something has to be supplied to make sense out of this. The view adopted here makes the most sense, namely, that when he smiled at people, they could hardly believe their good fortune. Other interpretations are strained, such as Kissane's, "If I laughed at them, they believed not," meaning, people rejected the views that Job laughed at. §§† tn: The meaning, according to Gordis, is that they did nothing to provoke Job's displeasure. §§‡ tn: All of these imperfects describe what Job used to do, and so they all fit the category of customary imperfect. §§§ tn: Heb "their way." <sup>18</sup> tn: The text simply has "and I sat [as their] head." The adverbial accusative explains his role, especially under the image of being seated. He directed the deliberations as a king directs an army. <sup>19</sup> tc: Most commentators think this last phrase is odd here, and so they either delete it altogether, or emend it to fit the idea of the verse. Ewald, however, thought it appropriate as a transition to the next section, reminding his friends that unlike him, they were miserable comforters. Herz made the few changes in the text to get the reading "where I led them, they were willing to go" (ZAW 20 [1900]: 163). The two key words in the MT are אֲנִי וְיָגֹזְלִים

אוֹבְלִים וְיָחוּ

20 tn: Heb "smaller than I for days." <sup>21</sup> tn: Heb "who I disdained their fathers to set..." meaning "whose fathers I disdained to set." The relative clause modifies the young fellows who mock; it explains that Job did not think highly enough of them to put them with the dogs. The next verse will explain why. <sup>22</sup> sn: Job is mocked by young fellows who come from low extraction. They mocked their elders and their betters. The scorn is strong here - dogs were despised as scavengers. <sup>23</sup> tn: The reference is to the fathers of the scorers, who are here regarded as weak and worthless. <sup>24</sup> tn: The word קָלַח

Driver (see AJSL 52 [1935/36]: 163). 24 tn: The MT has "under the crash," with the idea that they rush in while the stones are falling around them (which is continuing the figure of the military attack). G. R. Driver took the expression to mean in a temporal sense "at the moment of the crash" ( AJSL 52 [1935/36]: 163-64). Guillaume, drawing from Arabic, has "where the gap is made." 25 tn: The verb, the Hitpalpel of אָרְז

Others emend the text in accordance with the LXX, which has, "my hope is gone like the wind." 28 tn: This line can either mean that Job is wasting away (i.e., his life is being poured out), or it can mean that he is grieving. The second half of the verse gives the subordinate clause of condition for this. 29 tn: The subject of the verb "pierces" can be the night (personified), or it could be God (understood), leaving "night" to be an adverbial accusative of time – "at night he pierces." 30 tc: The MT concludes this half-verse with "upon me." That phrase is not in the LXX, and so many commentators delete it as making the line too long. † tn: Heb "my gnawers," which is open to several interpretations. The NASB and NIV take it as "gnawing pains"; cf. NRSV "the pain that gnaws me." Some suggest worms in the sores ( 7:5). The LXX has "my nerves," a view accepted by many commentators. †† tn: Heb "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity. ‡ tc: This whole verse is difficult. The first problem is that this verb in the MT means "is disguised [or disfigured]," indicating that Job's clothes hang loose on him. But many take the view that the verb is a phonetic variant of נָכַח

‡† tn: The phrase "like the collar" is difficult, primarily because their tunics did not have collars. A translation of "neck" would suit better. Some change the preposition to כּ ‡† sn: The implication from the sentence is that this is a cry to God for help. The sudden change from third person (v. 19) to second person (v. 20) is indicative of the intense emotion of the sufferer. ‡†† sn: The verb is simple, but the interpretation difficult. In this verse it probably means he stands up in prayer (Jer 15:1), but it could mean that he makes his case to God. Others suggest a more figurative sense, like the English expression "stand pat," meaning "remain silent" (see Job 29:8). ‡†† tn: If the idea of prayer is meant, then a pejorative sense to the verb is required. Some supply a negative and translate "you do not pay heed to me." This is supported by one Hebrew MS

§ tn: The idiom uses the Niphal verb "you are turned" with "to cruelty." See Job 41:20b, as well as Isa 63:10. §† tc: The LXX reads this verb as "you scourged/whipped me." But there is no reason to adopt this change. §†† sn: Here Job changes the metaphor again, to the driving storm. God has sent his storms, and Job is blown away. §† tn: The verb means "to melt." The imagery would suggest softening the ground with the showers (see Ps 65:10 [11]). The translation "toss...about" comes from the Arabic cognate that is used for the surging of the sea. §†† tc: The Qere is תּוֹשֵׁה

tions. The MT has "surely not against a ruinous heap will he [God] put forth his [God's] hand." But A. B. Davidson takes Job as the subject, reading "does not one stretch out his hand in his fall?" The RSV suggests a man walking in the ruins and using his hand for support. Dillmann changed it to "drowning man" to say "does not a drowning man stretch out his hand?" Beer has "have I not given a helping hand to the poor?" Dhorme has, "I did not strike the poor man with my hand." Kissane follows this but retains the verb form, "one does not strike the poor man with his hand." §†† tc: The second colon is also difficult; it reads, "if in his destruction to them he cries." E. Dhorme (Job, 425-26) explains how he thinks "to them" came about, and he restores "to me." This is the major difficulty in the line, and Dhorme's suggestion is the simplest resolution. §§† tn: Heb "for the hard of day." §§§ tn: Heb "my loins," "my bowels" (archaic), "my innermost being." The latter option is reflected in the translation; some translations take the inner turmoil to be literal (NIV: "The churning inside me never stops"). 18 tn: Heb "boils." 19 tn: The last clause reads "and they [it] are not quiet" or "do not cease." The clause then serves adverbially for the sentence – "unceasingly." 20 tn: The construction uses the word קָדַח

21 sn: The point of this figure is that Job's cries of lament are like the howls and screeches of these animals, not that he lives with them. In Job 39:13 the female ostrich is called "the wailer." 22 tn: The MT has "become dark from upon me," prompting some editions to supply the verb "falls from me" (RSV, NRSV), or "peels" (NIV). 23 tn: The word "my bones" may be taken as a metonymy of subject, the bony framework indicating the whole body. 24 tn: The word חָבַח 25

† tn: The normal approach is to take this as the protasis, and then have it resumed in v. 7 after a parenthesis in v. 6. But some take v. 6 as the apodosis and a new protasis in v. 7. †† tn: The "if" is understood by the use of the consecutive verb. ‡ sn: The verbs "walk" and "hasten" (referring in the verse to the foot) are used metaphorically for the manner of life Job lived. ‡‡ tn: "God" is undoubtedly the understood subject of this jussive. However, "him" is retained in the translation at this point to avoid redundancy since "God" occurs in the second half of the verse. ‡‡‡ tn: The word ‡‡‡

In order to clarify the referent of "that," which refers to v. 9 rather than v. 10, the words "I have committed" have been supplied in the translation. §§† tn: The word for "shameful act" is used especially for sexual offenses (cf. Lev 18:27). §§† tc: Some have deleted this verse as being short and irrelevant, not to mention problematic. But the difficulties are not insurmountable, and there is no reason to delete it. There is a Kethib- Qere reading in each half verse; in the first the Kethib is masculine for the subject but the Qere is feminine going with "shameless deed." In the second colon the Kethib is the feminine agreeing with the preceding noun,

Several commentators have decided to change the pronoun to "I," and make it causative. 26 tn: The expression "from my mother's womb" is obviously hyperbolic. It is a way of saying "all his life." 27 tn: Heb "I guided her," referring to the widow mentioned in v. 16. 28 tn: The MT has simply "if his loins did not bless me." In the conditional clause this is another protasis. It means, "if I saw someone dying and if he did not thank me for clothing them." It is Job's way of saying that whenever he saw a need he met it, and he received his share of thanks – which prove his kindness. G. R. Driver has it "without his loins having blessed me," taking "If...not" as an Aramaism, meaning "except" ( AJSL 52 [1935/36]: 164f.). 29 tn: This clause is interpreted here as a subordinate clause to the first half of the verse. It could also be a separate clause: "was he not warmed...?"

Thus the words "to vote" are supplied in the translation to indicate the setting. †† tn: Heb "gate," referring to the city gate where judicial decisions were rendered in the culture of the time. The translation uses the word "court" to indicate this to the modern reader, who might not associate a city gate complex with judicial functions. ‡ sn: Here is the apodosis, the imprecation Job pronounces on himself if he has done any of these things just listed. ‡† tn: The point is that if he has raised his arm against the oppressed it should be ripped off at the joint. But the MT makes clear sense as it stands. ‡‡‡ tn: The form is וּמִשְׁאֲתוֹ אֲשָׂא

The idea should be that of "my mouth kissed my hand." H. H. This is the only place in the OT that refers to such a custom. Outside the Bible it was known, however. §†† tn: Heb "it." §‡ tn: See v. 11 for the construction. In Deut 17:2ff. false worship of heavenly bodies is a capital offense. In this passage, Job is talking about just a momentary glance at the sun or moon and the brief lapse into a pagan thought. the interrogative, forming the rhetorical question to affirm he has never done this. However, in that case the parenthetical verses inserted become redundant. §‡ sn: The law required people to help their enemies if they could ( Exod 23:4; also Prov 20:22). But often in the difficulties that ensued, they did exult over their enemies' misfortune ( Pss 54:7; 59:10 [11], etc.). But Job lived on a level of purity that few ever reach. Duhm said, "If chapter 31 is the crown of all ethical developments of the O.T., verse 29 is the jewel in that crown." §‡† tn: The Hitpaal of עוּר §‡‡ tn: The word is נָע

20 tn: Now Job picks up the series of clauses serving as the protasis. 21 tn: Heb "the men of my tent." In context this refers to members of Job's household. 22 sn: The line is difficult to sort out. Job is saying it is sinful "if his men have never said, 'O that there was one who has not been satisfied from his food.'" If they never said that, it would mean there were people out there who needed to be satisfied with his food. 23 tn: The optative is again expressed with "who will give?" 24 tn: Heb "his"; the referent (Job) has been specified in the translation for clarity. 25 tn: This verse forms another parenthesis. Job stops almost at every point now in the conditional clauses to affirm his purity and integrity. 26 tn: The word in the MT, אָרַח

27 tn: Now the protasis continues again. 28 sn: Some commentators suggest taking the meaning here to be "as Adam," referring to the Paradise story of the sin and denial. 29 tn: The infinitive is epexegetical, explaining the first line. 30 tn: The MT has "in my bosom." This is the only place in the OT where this word is found. But its meaning is well attested from Aramaic. 31 tn: Here too the verb will be the customary imperfect – it explains what he continually did in past time. 32 tn: Heb "the great multitude." But some commentators take נְבִיאָה

33 sn: There is no clear apodosis for all these clauses. Some commentators transfer the verses around to make them fit the constructions. But the better view is that there is no apodosis – that Job broke off here, feeling it was useless to go further. Now he will address God and not men. But in vv. 38-40b he does return to a self-imprecation. However, there is not sufficient reason to start rearranging all the verses. 34 tn: The optative is again introduced

The simplest way to handle this is to see it as a continuation of the optative (RSV). ‡ tn: The clause begins with the positive oath formula, אֵלֶּיךָ אֶשָּׂא ‡† tn: The word "proudly" is not in the Hebrew text, but is implied (note the following line). ‡‡ tn: This verb is only found in Prov 6:21. But E. Dhorme ( Job, 470) suggests that (with metathesis) we have a derivative מְעַבְּרֹת ‡‡† sn: Many commentators place vv. 38-40b at the end of v. 34, so that there is no return to these conditional clauses after his final appeal. ‡‡‡ sn: Some commentators have suggested that the meaning behind this is that Job might not have kept the year of release ( Deut 15:1), and the law against mixing seed ( Lev 19:19). But the context will make clear that the case considered is obtaining the land without paying for it and causing the death of its lawful owner (see H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 206). Similar to this would be the case of Naboth's vineyard. § tn: Heb "without silver." §† tc: The versions have the verb "grieved" here. The Hebrew verb means "to breathe," but the form is Hiphil. He adds that whoever wrote these speeches this way clearly intended to expose the character rather than exalt him. ‡‡ tc: This expression is unusual; R. and to cover a person's pride.<sup>26</sup>
his very life from crossing over<sup>28</sup> the river.

Hebrew means "frustrations" or "oppositions." The RSV has "displeasure," NIV "faults," and NRSV "occasions." Rashi chose the word found in Judg 14:4 – with metathesis – meaning "pretexts" (תְּאַוּנוֹת) 18 sn: See Job 13:27.

19 tn: The meaning of this verb is "this is my answer to you."
20 tc: The LXX has "he that is above men is eternal." Elihu is saying that God is far above Job's petty problems. 21 tc: The MT has "all his words." This must refer to "man" in the previous verse. But many wish to change it to "my words," since it would be summarizing Job's complaint to God. 22 tn: The Syriac and the Vulgate have "and he does not repeat it," a reading of the text as it is, according to E. Dhorme (Job, 403). But his argument is based on another root with this meaning – a root which does not exist (see L. Dennefeld, RB 48 [1939]: 175). The verse is saying that God does speak to man. 23 tn: The idiom is "he uncovers the ear of men." This expression means "inform" in Ruth 4:4; 1 Sam 20:2, etc. But when God is the subject it means "make a revelation" (see 1 Sam 9:15; 2 Sam 7:27). 24 tc: Heb "and seals their bonds." The form of the present translation, "and terrifies them with warnings," is derived only by emending the text. Aquila, the Vulgate, Syriac, and Targum Job have "their correction" for "their bond," which is what the KJV used. But the LXX, Aquila, and the Syriac have "terrifies" for the verb. This involves a change in pointing from יָהַתּוּם יָהַתּוּם

25 tc: The MT

† tc: The MT has the passive form, and so a subject has to be added: "[a man] is chastened." The LXX has the active form, indicating "[God] chastens," but the object "a man" has to be added. It is understandable why the LXX thought this was active, within this sequence of verbs; and that is why it is the inferior reading. †† tc: The Kethib "the strife of his bones is continual," whereas the Qere has "the multitude of his bones are firm." The former is the better reading in this passage. It indicates that the pain is caused by the ongoing strife. ‡ tn: Heb "food of desire." The word "rejects" is not in the Hebrew text, but is supplied in the translation for clarity. ‡† tc: Heb "are laid bare." This is the Qere reading; the Kethib means "bare height." Gordis reverses the word order: "his bones are bare [i.e., crushed] so that they cannot be looked upon." But the sense of that is not clear. ‡‡ tn: Heb "his soul [נַפְשׁוֹ נִקְטָה]." ‡‡‡ tn: The MT uses the Hiphil participle, "to those who cause death." This seems to be a reference to the belief in demons that brought about death, an idea not mentioned in the Bible itself. Thus many proposals have been made for this expression. Hoffmann and Budde divide the word into לְמוֹתַיִם מְתִימִים

The verse is describing the way God can preserve someone from dying by sending a messenger (translated here as "angel"), who could be human or angelic. This messenger will interpret/mediate God's will. By "one ... out of a thousand" Elihu could have meant either that one of the thousands of messengers at God's disposal might be sent or that the messenger would be unique (see Eccl 7:28; and cp. Job 9:3). § tn: This is a smoother reading. The MT has "to tell to a man his uprightness," to reveal what is right for him. The LXX translated this word "duty"; the choice is adopted by some commentaries. However, that is too far from the text, which indicates that the angel/messenger is to call the person to uprightness. §† tn: This verse seems to continue the protasis begun in the last verse, with the apodosis coming in the next verse. §†† tn: Heb "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity. §‡ tc: The verb is either taken as an anomalous form of פָּרַע

† tn: Or "palate"; the Hebrew term refers to the tongue or to the mouth in general. †† sn: Elihu means "choose after careful examination." ‡ tn: The word is טָפַח

‡† tn: Heb "righteous," but in this context it means to be innocent or in the right. ‡‡ tn: The verb is the Piel imperfect of קָנַח

‡‡† tn: The Hebrew text has only "my arrow." Some commentators emend that word slightly to get "my wound." But the idea could be derived from "arrows" as well, the wounds caused by the arrows. The arrows are symbolic of God's affliction. ‡‡‡ tn: Heb "without transgression"; but this is parallel to the first part where the claim is innocence. § tn: Heb "he drinks," but coming after the question this clause may be subordinated. §† tn: The scorn or derision mentioned here is not against Job, but against God. Job scorns God so much, he must love it. So to reflect this idea, Gordis has translated it "blasphemy" (cf. NAB). §†† tn: The perfect verb with the vav (וּ

§† tn: Heb "men of wickedness"; the genitive is attributive (= "wicked men"). §‡ tn: Gordis, however, takes this expression in the sense of "being in favor with God." §§† tn: Heb "men of heart." The "heart" is used for the capacity to understand and make the proper choice. It is often translated "mind." §§‡ tn: For this construction, see Job 27:5. §§§ tn: Heb "for the work of man, he [= God] repays him." 18 tn: Heb "he causes it to find him." The text means that God will cause a man to find (or receive) the consequences of his actions. 19 tn: The verb קָנַח

 and gather in his spirit and his breath, and human beings would return to dust.

God Is Impartial and Omniscient

16 "If you have<sup>22</sup> understanding, listen to this, hear what I have to say.<sup>23</sup> 17 Do you really think<sup>24</sup> that one who hates justice can govern?<sup>25</sup>
 And will you declare guilty
 the supremely righteous<sup>26</sup> One, 18 who says to a king, 'Worthless man'<sup>28</sup> and to nobles, 'Wicked men,' 19 who shows no partiality to princes, and does not take note of<sup>29</sup> the rich more than the poor,
 because all of them are the work of his hands?
 20 In a moment they die, in the middle of the night,<sup>30</sup> people<sup>31</sup> are shaken<sup>32</sup> and they pass away.
 The mighty are removed effortlessly.<sup>33</sup>
 21 For his eyes are on the ways of an individual,

20 tn: The preposition is implied from the first half of the verse.
 21 tn: Heb "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity. 22 tc: This is the reading following the Qere. The Kethib and the Syriac and the LXX suggest a reading יִשְׁרָאֵל

23 tn: The phrase "you have" is not in the Hebrew text, but is implied. 24 tn: Heb "the sound of my words."
 25 tn: The force of הִצְדִּיק

26 tn: The verb תְּבַח

27 tn: The two words could be taken separately, but they seem to form a fine nominal hendiadys, because the issue is God's justice. So the word for power becomes the modifier. 28 tc: Heb "Does one say," although some smooth it out to say "Is it fit to say?" For the reading "who says," the form has to be repointed to הִצְדִּיק

29 tn: The word יִשְׁרָאֵל

30 tn: The verb means "to give recognition; to take note of" and in this passage with לִפְנֵי

31 tn: Dhorme transposes "in the middle of the night" with "they pass away" to get a smoother reading. But the MT emphasizes the suddenness by putting both temporal ideas first. E. F. Sutcliffe leaves the order as it stands in the text, but adds a verb "they expire" after "in the middle of the night" ("Notes on Job, textual and exegetical," Bib 30 [1949]: 79ff.). 32 tn: R. Gordis (Job, 389) thinks "people" here mean the people who count, the upper class. 33 tn: The verb means "to be violently agitated." There is no problem with the word in this context, but commentators have made suggestions for improving the idea. The proposal that has the most to commend it, if one were inclined to choose a new word, is he observes all a person's† steps.

 22 There is no darkness, and no deep darkness, where evildoers can hide themselves. †† 23 For he does not still consider a person, ‡ that he should come before God in judgment.
 24 He shatters the great without inquiry, †† and sets up others in their place.
 25 Therefore, he knows their deeds, he overthrows them‡ in the night ‡‡
 and they are crushed.
 26 He strikes them for their wickedness, ‡‡ in a place where people can see, § 27 because they have turned away from following him,
 and have not understood§† any of his ways, 28 so that they caused§†† the cry of the poor to come before him, so that he hears§‡ the cry of the needy.
 29 But if God§‡‡ is quiet, who can condemn§† him?
 If he hides his face, then who can see him?
 Yet§‡ he is over the individual and the nation alike, §§†

 † tn: Heb "not by hand." This means without having to use force. †† tn: Heb "his"; the referent (a person) has been specified in the translation for clarity. ‡ tn: The construction of this colon uses the Niphal infinitive construct from קטר

‡† tn: Heb "for he does not put upon man yet." This has been given a wide variety of interpretations, all of which involve a lot of additional thoughts. The word יוד מועד

‡‡ tn: Heb "[with] no investigation." ‡‡† tn: The direct object "them" is implied and has been supplied in the translation for clarity. ‡‡‡ tn: The Hebrew term
 "night" is an accusative of time. § tn: Heb "under wicked men," or "under wickednesses." J. C. Greenfield shows that the preposition can mean "among" as well ("Prepositions B Tachat in Jes 57:5," ZAW 32 [1961]: 227). That would allow "among wicked men." It could also be "instead of" or even "in return for [their wickedness]" which is what the RSV does. §† tn: The text simply uses ראי §†† tn: The verb השקילו

§†
 tn: The verse begins with the infinitive construct of בוא §†† tn: The verb
 here is an imperfect; the clause is circumstantial to the preceding clause, showing either the result, or the concomitant action. §† tn: Heb "he"; the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity. §‡ tn: The verb in this position is somewhat difficult, although it does make good sense in the sentence – it is just not what the parallelism would suggest. So several emendations have been put forward, for which see the commentaries. §§† tn: The line simply reads "and over a nation and over a man together." But it must be the qualification for the points being made in the previous lines, namely, that even if God hides himself so no one can see, yet he is still watching over them all (see H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 222).
 §§‡ tn: The word translated "alike" ( Heb "together") has bothered some interpreters. In the reading taken here it is acceptable.

Job Is Foolish to Rebel

31 " Has anyone said to God,
 ' I have endured chastisement, §§§
 but I will not act wrongly any more.
 32 Teach me what I cannot see. <sup>18</sup>
 If I have done evil, I will do so no more.'
 33 Is it your opinion<sup>19</sup> that God<sup>20</sup> should recompense it,
 because you reject this?<sup>21</sup>
 But you must choose, and not I, so tell us what you know.
 34 Men of understanding say to me – any wise man listening to me says – 35 that<sup>22</sup> Job speaks without knowledge and his words are without understanding. <sup>23</sup> 36 But<sup>24</sup> Job will be tested to the end, because his answers are like those of wicked men.
 37 For he adds transgression<sup>25</sup> to his sin; in our midst he claps his hands,<sup>26</sup> and multiplies his words against God."<sup>27</sup> 35 Then Elihu answered:
 2 " Do you think this to be<sup>28</sup> just :

But others have emended it to gain a verb, such as "he visits" (Beer), "he watches over" (Duhm), "he is compassionate" (Kissane), etc. But it is sufficient to say "he is over." §§§ tn: This last verse is difficult because it is unbalanced and cryptic. Some have joined the third line of v. 29 with this entire verse to make a couplet. But the same result is achieved by simply regarding this verse as the purpose of v. 29. But there still are some words that must be added. In the first colon, "[he is over the nations]... preventing from ruling."
 And in the second colon, "laying" has to be supplied before "snares."
 18 tn: The Hebrew text has only "I lift up" or "I bear" (= I endure).
 The reading "I have been led astray" is obtained by changing the vowels to read a passive. If the MT is retained, an object has to be supplied, such as "chastisement" (so RSV, NASB) or "punishment" (NRSV). If not, then a different reading would be followed (e.g., "I was misguided" [NAB]; "I am guilty" [NIV]). 19 tn: Heb "what I do not see," more specifically, "apart from [that which] I see." 20 tn: Heb "is it from with you," an idiomatic expression meaning "to suit you" or "according to your judgment." 21 tn: Heb "he"; the refer-ent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity. 22 tn:
 There is no object on the verb, and the meaning is perhaps lost. The best guess is that Elihu is saying Job has rejected his teaching.
 23 tn: Adding "that" in the translation clarifies Elihu's indirect citation of the wise individuals' words. 24 tn: The Hiphil infinitive construct is here functioning as a substantive. The word means "prudence; understanding." 25 tc: The MT reads אבן

26 tn: Although frequently translated "rebellion," the basic meaning of this Hebrew term is "transgression." 27 tc: If this reading stands, it would mean that Job shows contempt, meaning that he mocks them and accuses God. It is a bold touch, but workable. Of the many suggested emendations, Dhorme alters some of the vowels and obtains a reading "and casts doubt among us," and then takes "transgression" from the first colon for the complement. Some commentators simply delete the line. 28 sn: This short speech falls into two sections: Elihu refutes Job's claim that goodness avails nothing ( 35:2-8),

<sup>3</sup> But you say, 'What will it profit you,‡ and, 'What do I gain by not sinning?'‡† <sup>4</sup> I‡‡ will reply to you,‡‡† and to your friends with you.
<sup>5</sup> Gaze at the heavens and see;
consider the clouds, which are higher than you!‡‡‡ <sup>6</sup> If you sin, how does it affect God?‡‡
If your transgressions are many,
what does it do to him?‡† <sup>7</sup> If you are righteous, what do you give to God, or what does he receive from your hand?
<sup>8</sup> Your wickedness affects only‡†† a person like yourself,
and your righteousness only other people.‡† <sup>9</sup> " People‡†† cry out because of the excess of oppression;‡† they cry out for help
because of the power‡† of the mighty.‡‡† <sup>10</sup> But no one says, 'Where is God, my Creator, who gives songs in the night,‡‡‡ <sup>11</sup> who teaches us‡‡‡ more than <sup>18</sup> the wild animals of
and makes us wiser than the birds of the sky?'

asserting that when the cry of the afflicted goes unanswered they have not learned their lesson ( 35:9-16). † tn: The line could be read as "do you reckon this for justice? Here "to be" is understood. †† tn: The word "when" is not in the Hebrew text, but is implied. ‡ tn: The brief line could be interpreted in a number of ways. The MT simply has "my right from God." It could be "I am right before God," "I am more just/right than God" (identifying the preposition as a comparative min ( מן )

‡† tn: The referent of "you" is usually understood to be God. ‡‡ tn: The Hebrew text merely says, "What do I gain from my sin?" But Job has claimed that he has not sinned, and so this has to be elliptical: "more than if I had sinned" (H. H. Rowley, Job [NCBC], 224). It could also be, "What do I gain without sin?" ‡†† tn: The emphatic pronoun calls attention to Elihu who will answer these questions. ‡‡‡ tn: The Hebrew text adds, "with words," but since this is obvious, for stylistic reasons it has not been included in the translation. § tn: The preposition is taken here as a comparative min ( מן )

§† tn: Heb "him" (also in v. 7); the referent (God) has been specified in the translation for clarity. §†† tn: See Job 7:20. §‡ tn: The phrase "affects only" is supplied in the translation of this nominal sentence. sn: According to Strahan, "Elihu exalts God's greatness at the cost of His grace, His transcendence at the expense of His immanence. He sets up a material instead of a spiritual stand of profit and loss. He does not realize that God does gain what He desires most by the goodness of men, and loses what He most loves by their evil." §†† tn: Heb "and to [or for] a son of man, your righteousness." §† tn: The word "people" is supplied, because the sentence only has the masculine plural verb. §‡ tn: The final noun is an abstract plural, "oppression." There is no reason to change it to "oppressors" to fit the early versions. The expression is literally "multitude of oppression." §§† tn: Heb "the arm," a metaphor for strength or power. §§‡ tn: Or "of the many" (see HALOT 1172 s.v. I כב §§§ tn: There have been several attempts to emend the line, none of which are particularly helpful or interesting. H. H. Rowley (Job [NCBC], 225) says, "It is a pity to rob Elihu of a poetic line when he creates one." <sup>18</sup> tn: The form in the text, the Piel participle from אָלַץ

<sup>16</sup> So Job opens his mouth to no purpose; <sup>25</sup> without knowledge he multiplies words."<sup>26</sup>

36 Elihu said further:<sup>27</sup>
<sup>2</sup> " Be patient<sup>28</sup> with me a little longer and I will instruct you, for I still have words to speak on God's behalf. <sup>29</sup>
<sup>3</sup> With my knowledge I will speak comprehensively,<sup>30</sup> and to my Creator I will ascribe righteousness. <sup>31</sup>
<sup>4</sup> For in truth, my words are not false; it is one complete<sup>32</sup> in knowledge who is with you.

<sup>21</sup> tn: Heb "surely – vanity, he does not hear." The cry is an empty cry, not a prayer to God. Dhorme translates it, "It is a pure waste of words."

<sup>22</sup> sn: The point is that if God does not listen to those who do not turn to him, how much less likely is he to turn to one who complains against him. <sup>23</sup> tn: The expression "and now" introduces a new complaint of Elihu – in addition to the preceding. Here the verb of v. 14, "you say," is understood after the temporal ki ( כִּי ) tn: The verb אָמַר

sn: This very lengthy speech can be broken down into the following sections: the discipline of suffering ( 36:2-25), the work and wisdom of God ( 36:26– 37:24). <sup>28</sup> tn: The use of וְיָחִי

<sup>30</sup> tn: The Hebrew text simply has "for yet for God words." <sup>31</sup> tn: Heb "I will carry my knowledge to-from afar." The expression means that he will give a wide range to knowledge, that he will speak comprehensively. <sup>32</sup> tn: This line gives the essence of all of Elihu's speech – to give or ascribe righteousness to God against the charges of Job. Dhorme translates this "I will justify my Maker," and that is workable if it carries the meaning of "declaring to be right." <sup>33</sup> tn: The word is תָּמִים

he† is mighty, and firm†† in his intent. †
 6 He does not allow the wicked to live, ††
 but he gives justice to the poor.
 7 He does not take his eyes†† off the righteous;
 but with kings on the throne
 he seats the righteous††† and exalts them forever. ††† 8 But if they are bound in chains, § and held captive by the cords of affliction, 9 then he reveals§† to them what they have done, §†† and their transgressions, that they were behaving proudly.
 10 And he reveals§† this§†† for correction, and says that they must turn§† from evil.
 11 If they obey and serve him, they live out their days in prosperity and their years in pleasantness. §† 12 But if they refuse to listen, they pass over the river of death, §§† and expire without knowledge.
 13 The godless at heart§§† nourish anger, §§§ they do not cry out even when he binds them.

† tn: The object "people" is not in the Hebrew text but is implied.
 †† tn: The text simply repeats "mighty." ††† tn: The last two words are simply לִבְּךָ

‡† tc: There are several problems in this verse: the repetition of "mighty," the lack of an object for "despise," and the meaning of "strength of heart." Many commentators reduce the verse to a single line, reading something like "Lo, God does not reject the pure in heart" (Kissane). Dhorme and Pope follow Nichols with: "Lo, God is mighty in strength, and rejects not the pure in heart." This reading moved "mighty" to the first line and took the second to be בָּרָךְ ‡†† tn: Or "he does not keep the wicked alive." ‡††† tc: Many commentators accept the change of "his eyes" to "his right" (reading יְדִינֵי עֵינָיו

‡††† tn: Heb "them"; the referent (the righteous) has been repeated from the first part of the verse for clarity. § tn: Heb "he seats them forever and exalts them." The last verb can be understood as expressing a logical consequence of the preceding action (cf. GKC 328 §111. l = "he seats them forever so that he exalts them"). Or the two verbs can be taken as an adverbial hendiadys whereby the first modifies the second adverbially: "he exalts them by seating them forever" or "when he seats them forever" (cf. GKC 326 §111. d). Some interpret this verse to say that God seats kings on the throne, making a change in subject in the middle of the verse. But it makes better sense to see the righteous as the subject matter throughout - they are not only protected, but are exalted. §† tn: Dhorme thinks that the verse is still talking about kings, who may be in captivity. But this diverts attention from Elihu's emphasis on the righteous. §†† tn: The verb נָגַד

§† tn: Heb "their work." §††† tn: The idiom once again is "he uncovers their ear." §†† tn: The revelation is in the preceding verse, and so a pronoun must be added to make the reference clear. §††† tn: The verb שָׁבַע

§§† tc: Some commentators delete this last line for metrical considerations. But there is no textual evidence for the deletion; it is simply the attempt by some to make the meter rigid. §§†† tn: This is a similar expression to the one in Job 33:18, where the suggestion was made by many that it means crossing over the canal or river of death. Some retain the earlier interpretation of "perish by the sword" (cf. NIV). §§§† tn: The expression and their life ends among the male cultic prostitutes.

 he reveals himself to them<sup>22</sup> by their suffering.
 16 And surely, he drew you<sup>23</sup> from the mouth of distress, to a wide place, unrestricted, <sup>24</sup> and to the comfort<sup>25</sup> of your table filled with rich food. <sup>26</sup> 17 But now you are preoccupied with the judgment due the wicked, judgment and justice take hold of you.
 18 Be careful that<sup>27</sup> no one entices you with riches;
 do not let a large bribe<sup>28</sup> turn you aside.
 19 Would your wealth<sup>29</sup> sustain you, so that you would not be in distress,<sup>30</sup> even all your mighty efforts? <sup>31</sup> 20 Do not long for the cover of night to drag people away from their homes. <sup>32</sup> 21 Take heed, do not turn to evil, for because of this you have been tested<sup>33</sup> by affliction.
 22 Indeed, God is exalted in his power;

"godless [or hypocrite] in heart" is an intensification of the description. It conveys that they are intentionally godless. See Matt 23:28.
 18 tn: Heb "they put anger." This is usually interpreted to mean they lay up anger, or put anger in their hearts. 19 tn: The text expresses this with "their soul dies." 20 tn: Heb "among the male prostitutes" who were at the temple - the "holy ones," with "holy" being used in that sense of "separated to that form of temple service." So uncleanness and shame are some of the connotations of the reference. Some modern translations give the general sense only: "their life ends in shame" (NRSV); "and perish among the reprobate" (NAB); "die...after wasting their lives in immoral living" (NLT).
 21 tn: The preposition ב

22 tn: Heb "his." 23 tn: Heb "he uncovers their ear."
 24 tn: The Hebrew verb means "to entice; to lure; to allure; to seduce," but these have negative connotations. The English "to persuade; to draw" might work better. The verb is the Hiphil perfect of טוּת

25 tn: Heb "a broad place where there is no cramping beneath [or under] it." 26 tn: The word נָחַת

נָחַת
 27 tn: Heb "filled with fat." 28 tn: The first expression is idiomatic: the text says, "because wrath lest it entice you" - thus, beware. 29 tn: The word is כֶּפֶר

30 tn: The form in the MT is "your cry (for help)." See J. E. Hartley (Job [NICOT], 472-73) and E. Dhorme (Job, 547-48) on the difficulties. 31 tn: This part has only two words נָצַר

32 tc: For the many suggestions and the reasoning here, see the commentaries. 33 tn: The meaning of this line is difficult. There are numerous suggestions for emending the text. Kissane takes the first verb in the sense of "oppress," and for "the night" he has "belonging to you," meaning "your people."

who is a teacher† like him?
 23 Who has prescribed his ways for him?
 Or said to him, 'You have done what is wicked'?

 which people have praised in song.
 25 All humanity has seen it;
 people gaze on it from afar.

The Work and Wisdom of God

26 " Yes, God is great – beyond our knowledge †
 The number of his years is unsearchable.
 27 He draws up drops of water;
 they distill†† the rain into its mist, ‡ 28 which the clouds pour down and shower on humankind abundantly.
 29 Who can understand the spreading of the clouds, the thunderings of his pavilion? ‡‡
 he has covered the depths<sup>s†</sup> of the sea.
 31 It is by these that he judges<sup>s††</sup> the nations and supplies food in abundance.
 and directs it against its target. <sup>33 s†</sup>
 His thunder announces the coming storm, the cattle also, concerning the storm's approach. <sup>s†</sup>

This reads: "Oppress not them that belong not to you, that your kinsmen may mount up in their place." † <sup>tn:</sup> Normally "tested" would be the translation for the Niphal of <sup>בָּחַר</sup>

<sup>s†</sup> <sup>tn:</sup> Peake knew of over thirty interpretations for this verse. The MT literally says, "He declares his purpose [or his shout] concerning it; cattle also concerning what rises." Dhorme has it: "The flock which sniffs the coming storm has warned the shepherd." Kissane: "The thunder declares concerning him, as he excites wrath against iniquity." Gordis translates it: "His thunder-clap proclaims his presence, and the storm his mighty wrath." Many more could be added to the list.

37 At this also my heart pounds and leaps from its place.
 2 Listen carefully<sup>s††</sup> to the thunder of his voice, to the rumbling<sup>s††</sup> that proceeds from his mouth.
 3 Under the whole heaven he lets it go, even his lightning to the far corners<sup>s††</sup> of the earth.
 4 After that a voice roars;
 he thunders with an exalted voice, and he does not hold back his lightning bolts<sup>18</sup> when his voice is heard.
 5 God thunders with his voice in marvelous ways;<sup>19</sup>
 he does great things beyond our understanding. <sup>20</sup> 6 For to the snow he says, 'Fall<sup>21</sup> to earth,' and to the torrential rains, <sup>22</sup> ' Pour down.' <sup>23</sup> 7 He causes everyone to stop working, <sup>24</sup> so that all people<sup>25</sup> may know<sup>26</sup> his work.
 8 The wild animals go to their lairs, and in their dens they remain.
 9 A tempest blows out from its chamber, icy cold from the driving winds. <sup>27</sup> 10 The breath of God produces ice, and the breadth of the waters freeze solid.
 11 He loads the clouds with moisture; <sup>28</sup>
 he scatters his lightning through the clouds.

 to carry out†† all that he commands them or whether it is for mercy, he causes it to find its mark. ‡†

 Stand still and consider the wonders God works.

 how he makes lightning flash in his storm cloud? ‡‡†

 We cannot prepare a case§††
 because of the darkness.

 If a man speaks, surely he would be swallowed up!
 21 But now, the sun§‡† cannot be looked at §† –
 it is bright in the skies –
 after a wind passed and swept the clouds away. §‡ 22 From the north he comes in golden splendor, §‡†

† tn: The words "the clouds" are supplied from v. 11; the sentence itself actually starts: "and it goes round," referring to the cloud. †† tn: Heb "that it may do." ‡ tn: Heb "rod," i.e., a rod used for punishment. ‡† tn: This is interpretive; Heb "he makes find it." The lightning could be what is intended here, for it finds its mark. But R. Gordis ( Job, 429) suggests man is the subject – let him find what it is for, i.e., the fate appropriate for him. ‡‡ tn: The verb is ׀שׁוּבָ ׀שׁוּבָ

‡‡† tn: Dhorme reads this "and how his stormcloud makes lightning to flash forth?" ‡‡† tn: As indicated by HALOT 618 s.v. שׁוּבָ

§ tn:
 The verb means "to beat out; to flatten," and the analogy in the next line will use molten metal. From this verb is derived the word for the "firmament" in Gen 1:6-8, that canopy-like pressure area separating water above and water below. §† tn: The imperfect verb here carries the obligatory nuance, "what we should say?" §†† tn: The verb means "to arrange; to set in order." From the context the idea of a legal case is included. §‡ tn: This imperfect works well as a desiderative imperfect. §‡† tn: The light here must refer to the sun in the skies that had been veiled by the storm. Then, when the winds blew the clouds away, it could not be looked at because it was so dazzling. Elihu's analogy will be that God is the same – in his glory one cannot look at him or challenge him. §† tn: The verb has an indefinite subject, and so should be a passive here. §‡ tn: Heb "and cleaned them." The referent is the clouds (v. 18), which has been supplied in the translation for clarity. There is another way of reading this verse: the word translated "bright" means "dark; obscured" in Syriac. In this interpretation the first line would mean that they could not see the sun, because it was darkened by the clouds, but then the wind came and blew the clouds away. Dhorme, Gray, and several others take it this way, as does the NAB. §‡† tn: The MT has "out of the north comes gold." Left in that sense the line seems irrelevant. The translation "golden splendor" (with RV, RSV, NRSV, NIV) depends upon the context of theophany. Others suggest around God is awesome majesty.

 23 As for the Almighty, §‡† we cannot attain to him!
 He is great in power, but justice§‡‡ and abundant righteousness he does not oppress.
 24 Therefore people fear him, for he does not regard all the wise in heart." <sup>18</sup>

38 Then the LORD answered Job out of the whirlwind: <sup>19</sup> 2 " Who is this<sup>20</sup> who darkens counsel<sup>21</sup> with words without knowledge?
 3 Get ready for a difficult task<sup>22</sup> like a man;
 I will question you and you will inform me!

God's questions to Job

 when I laid the foundation<sup>23</sup> of the earth ?
 Tell me,<sup>24</sup> if you possess understanding!
 5 Who set its measurements – if<sup>25</sup> you know –

"golden rays" (Dhorme), the aurora borealis (Graetz, Gray), or some mythological allusion (Pope), such as Baal's palace. Golden rays or splendor is what is intended, although the reference is not to a natural phenomenon – it is something that would suggest the glory of God. §‡† tn: The name "Almighty" is here a casus pendens, isolating the name at the front of the sentence and resuming it with a pronoun. §‡‡ tn: The MT places the major disjunctive accent (the atnach) under "power," indicating that "and justice" as a disjunctive clause starting the second half of the verse (with ESV, NASB, NIV, NLT). Ignoring the Masoretic accent, NRSV has "he is great in power and justice." 18 sn: The phrase "wise of heart" was used in Job 9:4 in a negative sense. 19 sn: This is the culmination of it all, the revelation of the LORD

20 sn: This is not the storm described by Elihu – in fact, the LORD

21 tn: The demonstrative pronoun is used here to emphasize the interrogative pronoun (see GKC 442 §136. c). 22 sn: The referent of "counsel" here is not the debate between Job and the friends, but the purposes of God (see Ps 33:10; Prov 19:21; Isa 19:17). Dhorme translates it "Providence." 23 tn: Heb "Gird up your loins." This idiom basically describes taking the hem of the long garment or robe and pulling it up between the legs and tucking it into the front of the belt, allowing easier and freer movement of the legs. "Girding the loins" meant the preparation for some difficult task ( Jer 1:17), or for battle ( Isa 5:27), or for running ( 1 Kgs 18:46). C. Gordon suggests that it includes belt-wrestling, a form of hand-to-hand mortal combat ("Belt-wrestling in the Bible World," HUCA 23 [1950/51]: 136). 24 tn: The construction is the infinitive construct in a temporal clause, using the preposition and the subjective genitive suffix. 25 tn: The verb is the imperative; it has no object "me" in the text.

† tn: The particle ׀

†† tn: For the interrogative serving as a genitive, see GKC 442 §136. b. ‡ sn: The world was conceived of as having bases and pillars, but these poetic descriptions should not be pressed too far (e.g., see Ps 24:2, which may be worded as much for its polemics against Canaanite mythology as anything). ‡† sn: The expression “morning stars” (Heb “stars of the morning”) is here placed in parallelism to the angels, “the sons of God.” It may refer to the angels under the imagery of the stars, or, as some prefer, it may poetically include all creation. There is a parallel also with the foundation of the temple which was accompanied by song (see Ezra 3:10,11). But then the account of the building of the original tabernacle was designed to mirror creation (see M. Fishbane, Biblical Text and Texture). ‡‡ tn: The construction, an adverbial clause of time, uses ׀

‡‡† tn: Heb “together.” This is Dhorme’s suggestion for expressing how they sang together. ‡‡‡ tn: See Job 1:6. § tn: The MT has “and he shut up.” The Vulgate has “Who?” and so many commentaries and editions adopt this reading, if not from the Vulgate, then from the sense of the sequence in the text itself. §† tn: The line uses two expressions, first the temporal clause with ׀

 §†† tn: The temporal clause here uses the infinitive from ׀

§‡ tn: This noun is found only here. The verb is in Ezek 16:4, and a related noun is in Ezek 30:21. §†† tc: The MT has “and I broke,” which cannot mean “set, prescribed” or the like. The LXX and the Vulgate have such a meaning, suggesting a verb ׀

§† tn: Dhorme suggested reversing the two verbs, making this the first, and then “shatter” for the second colon. §‡ tn: The imperfect verb receives the permission nuance here. §§† tn: The text has ׀

§§‡ tn: The MT literally says, “here he will put on the pride of your waves.” The verb has no expressed subject and so is made a passive voice. But there has to be some object for the verb “put,” such as “limit” or “boundary”; the translations “confined; halted; stopped” all serve to paraphrase such an idea. The LXX has “broken” at this point, suggesting the verse might have been confused – but “breaking the pride” of the waves would mean controlling them. Some commentators have followed this, exchanging the verb in v. 11 with this one.

or made the dawn know§§§ its place,

 22 Have you entered the storehouse<sup>30</sup> of the snow, or seen the armory<sup>31</sup> of the hail,

§§§ tn: The Hebrew idiom is “have you from your days?” It means “never in your life” (see 1 Sam 25:28; 1 Kgs 1:6). 18 tn: The verb is the Piel of ׀

19 sn: The poetic image is that darkness or night is like a blanket that covers the earth, and at dawn it is taken by the edges and shaken out. Since the wicked function under the cover of night, they are included in the shaking when the dawn comes up. 20 sn: The verse needs to be understood in the context: as the light shines in the dawn, the features of the earth take on a recognizable shape or form. The language is phenomenological. 21 tn: Heb “they”; the referent (the objects or features on the earth) has been specified in the translation for clarity. 22 tc: The MT reads “they stand up like a garment” (NASB, NIV) or “its features stand out like a garment” (ESV). The reference could be either to embroidered decoration on a garment or to the folds of a garment (REB: “until all things stand out like the folds of a cloak”; cf. J. E. Hartley, Job [NICOT], 497, “the early light of day makes the earth appear as a beautiful garment, exquisite in design and glorious in color”). Since this is thought to be an odd statement, some suggest with Ehrlich that the text be changed to ׀

23 tn: Heb “the raised arm.” The words “in violence” are not in the Hebrew text, but are supplied in the translation to clarify the metaphor. 24 sn: What is active at night, the violence symbolized by the raised arm, is broken with the dawn. G. R. Driver thought the whole verse referred to stars, and that the arm is the navigator’s term for the line of stars (“Two astronomical passages in the Old Testament,” JTS 4 [1953]: 208-12). 25 tn: Heb “the springs of the sea.” The words “that fill” are supplied in the translation to clarify the meaning of the phrase. 26 tn: Heb “uncovered to you.” 27 tn: Some still retain the traditional phrase “shadow of death” in the English translation (cf. NIV). The reference is to the entrance to Sheol (see Job 10:21). 28 tn: The interrogative with ׀

29 tn: The suffixes are singular (“that you may take it to its border...to its home”), referring to either the light or the darkness. Because either is referred to, the translation has employed plurals, since singulars would imply that only the second item, “darkness,” was the referent. Plurals are also employed by NAB and NIV. 30 tn: The imperfect verb after the adverb ׀

§† tn: The word actually means "to cause to lie down." §§† tn: The word means "to flow" or "to cast" (as in casting metals). So the noun developed the sense of "hard," as in cast metal. §§† tn: Heb "fill up the life of." §§§ tn: The verse is difficult, making some suspect that a line has dropped out. The little birds in the nest hardly go wandering about looking for food. Dhorme suggest "and stagger for lack of food." 18 tn: The text uses the infinitive as the object: "do you know the giving birth of?" 19 tn: Or "ibex." 20 tn: Here the infinitive is again a substantive: "the time of their giving birth." 21 tc: The Hebrew verb used here means "to cleave," and this would not have the object "their young." Olshausen and others after him change the n ו

22 tn: Heb "they cast forth their labor pains." This word usually means "birth pangs" but here can mean what caused the pains (metonymy of effect). This fits better with the parallelism, and the verb ("cast forth"). The words "their offspring" are supplied in the translation for clarity; direct objects were often omitted when clear from the context, although English expects them to be included. 23 tn: The idea is that of the open countryside. The Aramaism is found only here. 24 sn: The animal is happier in open countryside than in a busy town, and on its own rather than being driven by a herdsman. 25 tn: Some commentators think that the addition of the "wild ox" here is a copyist's error, making the stich too long. They therefore delete it. Also, binding an animal to the furrow with ropes is unusual. So with a slight emendation Kissane came up with "Will you bind him with a halter of cord?" While the MT is unusual, the sense is understandable, and no changes, even slight ones, are absolutely necessary. † tn: Heb "leave." †† tn: The word is normally translated "believe" in the Bible. The idea is that of considering something dependable and acting on it. The idea of reliability is found also in the Niphal stem usages. ‡ tc: There is a textual problem here: ‡‡נָשִׁיב

‡† tn: Heb "your seed"; this must be interpreted figuratively for what the seed produces. ‡‡ tn: Heb "gather it"; the referent (the grain) has been specified in the translation for clarity. ‡‡† tn: Simply, the MT has "and your threshing floor gather." The "threshing floor" has to be an adverbial accusative of place. ‡‡‡ tc: This whole section on the ostrich is not included in the LXX. Many feel it is an interpolation and should therefore be deleted. The pattern of the chapter changes from the questions being asked to observations being made. § tn: The word occurs only here and means "shrill cries." If the MT is correct, this is a poetic name for the ostrich (see Lam 4:3). §† tn: Many proposals have been made here. The MT has a verb, "exult." Strahan had "flap joyously," a rendering followed by the NIV. The RSV uses "wave proudly." §†† tn: The point of this statement would be that the ostrich cannot compare to the stork. But there are many other proposals for this line - just about every commentator has a different explanation for it. Of the three words here, the first means "pinion," the third "plumage," and the second probably "stork," although the LXX has "heron." The point of this whole section is that the ostrich is totally lacking in parental care, whereas the stork is characterized by it. The Hebrew word for "stork" is the same word for "love": ‡‡אָהַב

§† tn: The meaning may have the connotation of "lays; places," rather than simply abandoning (see M. Dahood, "The Root 'zb II in Job," JBL 78 [1959]: 307f.). §†† tn: Heb "an animal of the field." §† sn: This verb, "to deal harshly; to harden; to treat cruelly," is used for hardening the heart elsewhere (see Isa 63:17). §† tn: The colon poses a slight problem here. The literal meaning of the Hebrew verb translated "springs up" (i.e., "lifts herself on high") might suggest flight. But some of the proposals involve a reading about readying herself to run.

19 "Do you give the horse its strength?
 Do you clothe its neck with a mane? §§†
 20 Do you make it leap§§† like a locust?
 Its proud neighing§§§ is terrifying!
 21 It<sup>18</sup> paws the ground in the valley, exulting mightily,<sup>20</sup>
 it goes out to meet the weapons.
 22 It laughs at fear and is not dismayed;
 it does not shy away from the sword.
 23 On it the quiver rattles;
 the lance and javelin<sup>21</sup> flash.
 24 In excitement and impatience it consumes the ground;<sup>22</sup>
 it cannot stand still<sup>23</sup> when the trumpet is blown.
 25 At the sound of the trumpet, it says, 'Aha!
 And from a distance it catches the scent of battle,
 the thunderous shouting of commanders,
 and the battle cries.
 26 "Is it by your understanding that the hawk soars,<sup>24</sup> and spreads its wings toward the south?
 27 Is it at your command<sup>25</sup> that the eagle soars, and builds its nest on high?
 28 It lives on a rock and spends the night there, on a rocky crag<sup>26</sup> and a fortress.<sup>27</sup> 29 From there it spots<sup>28</sup> its prey,<sup>29</sup> its eyes gaze intently from a distance.
 30 And its young ones devour the blood, and where the dead carcasses<sup>30</sup> are,

§§† tn: The second half of the verse contains this hapax legomenon, which is usually connected with the word ‡‡נָשִׁיב

§§† sn: The same ideas are found in Joel 2:4. The leaping motion is compared to the galloping of the horse. §§§ tn: The word could mean "snorting" as well (see Jer 8:16). It comes from the root "to blow." If the horse is running and breathing hard, this could be the sense here. 18 tc: The Hebrew text has a plural verb, "they paw." For consistency and for stylistic reasons this is translated as a singular. 19 tn: The armies would prepare for battles that were usually fought in the valleys, and so the horse was ready to charge. But in Ugaritic the word 'mk means "force" as well as "valley." The idea of "force" would fit the parallelism here well (see M. Dahood, "Value of Ugaritic for textual criticism," Bib 40 [1959]: 166). 20 tn: Or "in strength." 21 tn: This may be the scimitar (see G. Molin, "What is a kidon?" JSS 1 [1956]: 334-37). 22 tn: "Swallow the ground" is a metaphor for the horse's running. Gray renders the line: "quivering and excited he dashes into the fray." 23 tn: The use of ‡‡נָשִׁיב

24 tn: This word occurs only here. It is connected to "pinions" in v. 13. Dhorme suggests "clad with feathers," but the line suggests more the use of the wings. 25 tn: Heb "your mouth." 26 tn: Heb "upon the tooth of a rock." 27 tn: The word could be taken as the predicate, but because of the conjunction it seems to be adding another description of the place of its nest. 28 tn: The word means "search," but can be used for a wide range of matters, including spying. 29 tn: Heb "food." 30 tn: The word ‡‡אָהַב

40 Then the LORD answered Job:

 I put‡† my hand over my mouth to silence myself. ‡
 5 I have spoken once, but I cannot answer, twice, but I will say no more." ‡‡

The Lord's Second Speech ‡‡

6 Then the LORD answered Job from the whirlwind:
 7 "Get ready for a difficult task§ like a man. I will question you and you will inform me!
 8 Would you indeed annu§† my justice? Would you declare me guilty so that you might be right?
 9 Do you have an arm as powerful as God's, §†† and can you thunder with a voice like his?
 10 Adorn yourself, then, with majesty and excellency, and clothe yourself with glory and honor!
 12 Look at every proud man and abase him; crush the wicked on the spot!§‡

 14 Then I myself will acknowledge<sup>19</sup> to you that your own right hand can save you. <sup>20</sup>

The Description of Behemoth <sup>21</sup>

15 "Look now at Behemoth, <sup>22</sup> which I made as<sup>23</sup> I made you;
 it eats grass like the ox.
 16 Look<sup>24</sup> at its strength in its loins, and its power in the muscles of its belly.
 17 It makes its tail stiff<sup>25</sup> like a cedar, the sinews of its thighs are tightly wound.
 18 Its bones are tubes of bronze, its limbs like bars of iron.
 19 It ranks first among the works of God, <sup>26</sup> the One who made it has furnished it with a sword. <sup>27</sup>

§§† tn: The word "dust" can mean "ground" here, or more likely, "grave." §§‡ tn: The verb שָׁבַח

§§§ tn: Heb "their faces." 18 tn: The word is "secret place," the place where he is to hide them, i.e., the grave. The text uses the word "secret place" as a metonymy for the grave. 19 tn: The verb is usually translated "praise," but with the sense of a public declaration or acknowledgment. It is from הָיָה

20 tn: The imperfect verb has the nuance of potential imperfect: "can save; is able to save." 21 sn: The next ten verses are devoted to a portrayal of Behemoth (the name means "beast" in Hebrew). It does not fit any of the present material very well, and so many think the section is a later addition. Its style is more like that of a textbook. Moreover, if the animal is a real animal (the usual suggestion is the hippopotamus), then the location of such an animal is Egypt and not Palestine. Some have identified these creatures Behemoth and Leviathan as mythological creatures (Gunkel, Pope). Others point out that these creatures could have been dinosaurs (P. J. Maarten, NIDOTTE, 2:780; H. M. Morris, The Remarkable Record of Job, 115-22). Most would say they are real animals, but probably mythologized by the pagans. So the pagan reader would receive an additional impact from this point about God's sovereignty over all nature. 22 sn: By form the word is the feminine plural of the Hebrew word for "beast." Here it is an abstract word – a title. 23 tn: Heb "with you." The meaning could be temporal ("when I made you") – perhaps a reference to the sixth day of creation ( Gen 1:24). 24 tn: In both of these verses הָגָה

§†††† tn: Heb "do you have an arm like God?" The words "as powerful as" have been supplied in the translation to clarify the metaphor. §‡†††† tn: The verb was used for scattering lightning ( Job 37:11). God is challenging Job to unleash his power and judge wickedness in the world. §‡††††† tn: Heb "the overflowings." §†††††† tn: The word was just used in the positive sense of excellence or majesty; now the exalted nature of the person refers to self-exaltation, or pride. §‡†††††††† tn: The expression translated "on the spot" is the prepositional phrase תַּחַת

26 tn: Heb "the ways of God." sn: This may be a reference to Gen 1:24, where the first of the animal creation was the cattle – bȳhemah ( 27 הַבְּהֵמָה tc: The literal reading of the MT is "let the one who made him draw near [with] his sword." The sword is apparently a reference to the teeth or tusks of the animal, which cut vegetation like a sword. But the idea of a weapon is easier to see, and so the people who favor the mythological background see here a reference to God's slaying the Beast. There are again many suggestions on how to read the line. The RV probably has the safest: "He that made him has furnished him with his sword"

 ‡ tn: The word ordinarily means “to oppress.” So many commentators have proposed suitable changes: “overflows” (Beer), “gushes” (Duhm), “swells violently” (Dhorme, from a word that means “be strong”). †† tn: Or “he remains calm.” ‡‡ tn: The idea would be either (1) catch it while it is watching, or (2) in some way disabling its eyes before the attack. But others change the reading; Ball suggested “with hooks” and this has been adopted by some modern English versions (e.g., NRSV). ‡‡† tn: Ehrlich altered the MT slightly to get “with thorns,” a view accepted by Driver, Dhorme and Pope. ‡‡‡ sn: Beginning with 41:1

 The poem is portraying the creature as powerful and insensitive.

 the sense of selling the dead body (see Exod 21:35). This will be between them and the merchants (מְבַרְכִים) 19 tn: The verse uses two imperatives which can be interpreted in sequence:
 do this, and then this will happen. 20 sn: Job 41:9

41:10 41:2 41:11 41:3
 41:1 21 tn: The line is difficult. “His hope [= expectation]” must refer to any assailant who hopes or expects to capture the creature. Because there is no antecedent, Dhorme and others transpose it with the next verse. The point is that the man who thought he was sufficient to confront Leviathan soon finds his hope – his expectation – false (a derivative from the verb יָזַח 22 tn: There is an interrogative particle in this line, which most commentators ignore. But others freely emend the MT. Gunkel, following the mythological approach, has “his appearance casts down even a god.” Cheyne likewise has: “even divine beings the fear of him brings low” (JQR 9 [1896/97]: 579). Pope has,
 “Were not the gods cast down at the sight of him?” There is no need to bring in this mythological element. 23 sn: The description is of the animal, not the hunter (or fisherman). Leviathan is so fierce that no one can take him on alone. 24 tc: MT has “before me” and can best be rendered as “Who then is he that can stand before me?” (ESV, NASB, NIV, NLT, NJPS). The following verse (11) favors the MT since both express the lesson to be learned from Leviathan: If a man cannot stand up to Leviathan, how can he stand up to its creator? The translation above has chosen to read the text as “before him” (cf. NRSV, NJB). 25 tn: The verb מְבַרְכִים 26 sn:
 The verse seems an intrusion (and so E. Dhorme, H. H. Rowley, and many others change the pronouns to make it refer to the animal).
 But what the text is saying is that it is more dangerous to confront God than to confront this animal. 27 tn: This line also focuses on the sovereign God rather than Leviathan. H. H. Rowley, however, wants to change לֹא הוּא לֹא הוּא

28 tn: Dhorme changes the noun into a verb, “I will tell,” and the last two words into אֵין מְבַרְכִים 29 tn: Heb “the face of his garment,” referring to the outer garment or covering.
 Some take it to be the front as opposed to the back. 30 tc: The

The language is hyperbolic, probably to reflect the pagan ideas of the dragon of the deep in a polemical way – they feared it as a fire breathing monster, but in reality it might have been a steamy crocodile. ‡††††† tn: The word "burning" is supplied. The Syriac and Vulgate have "a seething and boiling pot" (reading אֲגַמְגַמֵּן אֲגַמְגַמֵּן ‡††††† tn: This word, דְּאֲבָרָה

But this part will function adverbially in the sentence. ‡††††† tn: The description of his heart being "hard" means that he is cruel and fearless. The word for "hard" is the word encountered before for molten or cast metal. ‡††††† tc: This verse has created all kinds of problems for the commentators. The first part is workable: "when he raises himself up, the mighty [the gods] are terrified." The mythological approach would render אֵלִים

אֵלִים ‡†††††

‡††††† tn: This is the clearest reading, following A. B. Davidson, Job, 285. The versions took different readings of the construction. ‡††††† tn: The verb קוּם ‡††††† tn: Heb "the son of the bow." ‡††††† tn: The verb is plural, but since there is no expressed subject it is translated as a passive here. 18 tn: Heb "under him." 19 tn: Here only the word "sharp" is present, but in passages like Isa 41:15 it is joined with "threshing sledge." Here and in Amos 1:3 and Isa 28:27 the word stands alone, but represents the "sledge." 20 sn: The idea is either that the sea is stirred up like the foam from beating the ingredients together, or it is the musk-smell that is the point of comparison. 21 tn: Heb "one who was made." 22 tn: Heb "the sons of pride." Dhorme repoints the last word to get "all the wild beasts," but this misses the point of the verse. This animal looks over every proud creature – but he is king of them all in that department. 23 tn: The expression "you asked" is added here to clarify the presence of the line to follow. Many commentators delete it as a gloss from Job 38:2. If it is retained, then Job has to be recalling God's question before he answers it. 24 tn: The word לֹכֵן ‡††††† tn: Heb "and I do not understand." The expression serves here in an adverbial capacity. It also could be subordinated as a complement: "I have declared [things that] I do not understand." 26 tn: The last clause is "and I do not know." This is also subordinated to become a dependent clause. 27 tn: This phrase, "you said," is supplied in the translation to introduce the recollection of God's words. 28 sn: This statement does not imply there was a vision. He is simply saying that this experience of God was real and personal. In the past his knowledge of God was what he had heard – hearsay. This was real.

VII. The Epilogue (42:7-17)

<sup>9</sup> So they went, Eliphaz the Temanite, Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite, and did just as the LORD had told them; and the LORD had respect for Job.§††

<sup>29</sup> tn: Or “despise what I said.” There is no object on the verb; Job could be despising himself or the things he said (see L. J. Kuyper, “Repentance of Job,” VT 9 [1959]: 91-94). † tn: Heb “the LORD

כֹּן †† tn: The imperatives in this verse are plural, so all three had to do this together. †† tn: The verb “pray” is the Hitpael from the root פָּלַח

††† tn: Heb “I will lift up his face,” meaning, “I will regard him.” ††† tn: This clause is a result clause, using the negated infinitive construct. § tn: The word “folly” can also be taken in the sense of “disgrace.” If the latter is chosen, the word serves as the direct object. If the former, then it is an adverbial accusative. §† sn: The difference between what they said and what Job said, therefore, has to do with truth. Job was honest, spoke the truth, poured out his complaints, but never blasphemed God. For his words God said he told the truth. He did so with incomplete understanding, and with all the impatience and frustration one might expect. Now the friends, however, did not tell what was right about God. They were not honest; rather, they were self-righteous and condescending. They were saying what they thought should be said, but it was wrong. §†† tn: The expression “had respect for Job” means God his brothers and sisters and all who had known him before, and they dined§§† with him in his house. They comforted him and consoled him for all the trouble the LORD had brought on him, and each one gave him a piece of silver§§† and a gold ring.§§§

<sup>12</sup> So the LORD blessed the second part of Job's life more than the first. He had 14,000 sheep, 6,000 camels, 1,000 yoke of oxen, and 1,000 female donkeys.

<sup>13</sup> And he also had seven sons<sup>18</sup> and three daughters.

answered his prayer. §† tn: The paragraph begins with the disjunctive vav, “Now as for the LORD §†† sn: The expression here is interesting: “he returned the captivity of Job,” a clause used elsewhere in the Bible of Israel (see e.g., Ps 126). Here it must mean “the fortunes of Job,” i.e., what he had lost. There is a good deal of literature on this; for example, see R. Borger, “Zu sub sb(i)t,” ZAW 25 (1954): 315-16; and E. Baumann, ZAW 6 (1929): 17ff. §† tn: This is a temporal clause, using the infinitive construct with the subject genitive suffix. By this it seems that this act of Job was also something of a prerequisite for restoration – to pray for them. §† tn: The construction uses the verb “and he added” with the word “re-peat” (or “twice”). §§† tn: Heb “ate bread.” §§† tn: The Hebrew word קָשַׁח

§§§ sn: This gold ring was worn by women in the nose, or men and women in the ear. <sup>18</sup> tn: The word for “seven” is spelled in an unusual way. From this some have thought it means “twice seven,” or fourteen sons. Several commentators take this view; but it is probably not warranted. <sup>19</sup> sn: The Hebrew name Jemimah means “dove.” <sup>20</sup> sn: The Hebrew name Keziah means “cassia.” <sup>21</sup> sn: The Hebrew name Keren-Happuch means “horn of eye-paint.” <sup>22</sup> sn: Psalm 1. In this wisdom psalm the author advises his audience to reject the lifestyle of the wicked and to be loyal to God. The psalmist contrasts the destiny of the wicked with that of the righteous, emphasizing that the wicked are eventually destroyed while the godly prosper under the Lord's protective care.

Book 1 (Psalms 1-41) Psalm 1

† tn: The Hebrew noun is an abstract plural. The word often refers metonymically to the happiness that God-given security and prosperity produce (see v. 3; Pss 2:12; 34:9; 41:1; 65:4; 84:12; 89:15; 106:3; 112:1; 127:5; 128:1; 144:15). †† tn: Heb "[Oh] the happiness [of] the man." Hebrew wisdom literature often assumes and reflects the male-oriented perspective of ancient Israelite society. The principle of the psalm is certainly applicable to all people, regardless of their gender or age. To facilitate modern application, we translate the gender and age specific "man" with the more neutral "one." (Generic "he" is employed in vv. 2-3). Since the godly man described in the psalm is representative of followers of God (note the plural form מְדַבְּרֵי־טוֹב)

‡ tn: Heb "walk in." The three perfect verbal forms in v. 1 refer in this context to characteristic behavior. The sequence "walk-stand-sit" envisions a progression from relatively casual association with the wicked to complete identification with them. †† tn: The Hebrew noun translated "advice" most often refers to the "counsel" or "advice" one receives from others. To "walk in the advice of the wicked" means to allow their evil advice to impact and determine one's behavior. ‡† tn: In the psalms the Hebrew term נִשְׁעֵם

‡†† tn: "Pathway" here refers to the lifestyle of sinners. To "stand in the pathway of/with sinners" means to closely associate with them in their sinful behavior. ‡†† tn: Here the Hebrew term מוֹשֵׁב

קָהָל § tn: The Hebrew word refers to arrogant individuals ( Prov 21:24) who love conflict ( Prov 22:10) and vociferously reject wisdom and correction ( Prov 1:22; 9:7-8; 13:1; 15:12). To "sit in the assembly" of such people means to completely identify with them in their proud, sinful plans and behavior. §† tn: Here the Hebrew expression מֵאֵי־יָד

In the immediate context this probably does not refer to the “final judgment” described in later biblical revelation, but to a temporal/historical judgment which the author anticipates. The idiom reflects ancient Near Eastern adoption language associated with covenants of grant, by which a lord would reward a faithful subject by elevating him to special status, referred to as “sonship.” Like a son, the faithful subject received an “inheritance,” viewed as an unconditional, eternal gift. Such gifts usually took the form of land and/or an enduring dynasty. See M. The function of the Hebrew perfect verbal form here is uncertain. The translation above assumes that the psalmist is expressing his certitude and confidence that God will intervene. The psalmist is so confident of God's positive response to his prayer, he can describe God's deliverance as if it had already happened. Such confidence is consistent with the mood of the psalm (vv. 3, 8). Another option is to take the perfects as precatives, expressing a wish or request ("lead me"). See IBHS 494-95 §30.5.4c, d. In his effort to elicit a positive divine response, the psalmist reminds God that he will receive no praise or glory if he allows the psalmist to die. The singular is also used in vv. 4-5, but the psalmist returns to the plural in v. 6. The singular is probably collective, emphasizing the united front that the psalmist's enemies present. This same alternation between a collective singular and a plural referring to enemies appears in Pss 9:3, 6; 13:4; 31:4, 8; 41:6, 10-11; 42:9-10; 55:3; 64:1-2; 74:3-4; 89:22-23; 106:10-11; 143:3, 6, 9. ‡† tn: Heb "my life." The vocalization of the verb form seems to be a mixture of Qal and Piel (see GKC 168 §63. n). The translation assumes the Piel, which would emphasize the repetitive nature of the action. The translation assumes the prefixed verbal form is a jussive. The psalmist is so certain that he is innocent of the sins mentioned in vv. 3-4, he pronounces an imprecation on himself for rhetorical effect. §‡† tn:

The “pure of heart” are God’s faithful followers who trust in and love the Lord and, as a result, experience his deliverance (see Pss 11:2; 32:11; 36:10; 64:10; 94:15; 97:11). § tn: Heb “God (the divine name <sup>אֱלֹהִים</sup>)”

The subject of the first verb is understood as the sinner who fails to repent of his ways and becomes the target of God’s judgment (vv. 9, 14-16). §†† tn: Heb “if he does not return, his sword he sharpens.” The referent (God) of the pronominal subject of the second verb (“sharpens”) has been specified in the translation for clarity. §‡ tn: Heb “his bow he treads and prepares it.” “Treading the bow” involved stepping on one end of it in order to string it and thus prepare it for battle. §†† tn: Heb “and for him he prepares the weapons of death.” §† tn: Heb “his arrows into flaming [things] he makes.” §‡ tn: Heb “and he conceives harm and gives birth to a lie.” sn: Pregnant with wickedness...gives birth to harmful lies. The psalmist metaphorically pictures the typical sinner as a pregnant woman, who is ready to give birth to wicked, destructive schemes and actions. §§† tn: Heb “a pit he digs and he excavates it.” Apparently the imagery of hunting is employed; the wicked sinner digs this pit to entrap and destroy his intended victim. The phrase "height of his nose" probably refers to an arrogant or snooty attitude; it likely pictures one with his nose turned upward toward the sky in pride. One could take the "wicked" as the subject of the negated verb "seek," in which case the point is that the wicked do not "seek" God. The translation assumes that this statement, along with "there is no God," is what the wicked man thinks to himself. In this case God is the subject of the verb "seek," and the point is that God will not hold the wicked man accountable for his actions. Verse 13 strongly favors this interpretation. The language may picture a lion (see v. 9) peering out from its hiding place in anticipation that an unsuspecting victim will soon come strolling along. <sup>22</sup> tn: Or "in its den." <sup>23</sup> tn: The verb, which also appears in the next line, occurs only here and in Judg 21:21. <sup>24</sup> tn: The singular form is collective (see v. 10) or refers to the typical or representative oppressed individual. <sup>25</sup> tn: Or "when he [i.e., the wicked man] pulls in his net." <sup>sn</sup>: The background of the imagery is hunting, where the hunter uses a net to entrap an unsuspecting bird or wild animal. <sup>26</sup> tn: Heb "he crushes, he is bowed down, and he falls into his strong [ones], [the] unfortunate [ones]."  ‡† tn: Heb “lift up your hand.” Usually the expression “lifting the hand” refers to praying ( Pss 28:2; 134:2) or making an oath ( Ps 106:26), but here it probably refers to “striking a blow” (see 2 Sam 18:28; 20:21). Note v. 15, where the psalmist asks the LORD

It is uncertain who or what is being given into God’s hand. Elsewhere the idiom “give into the hand” means to deliver into one’s possession. If “to give” goes with what precedes (as the accentuation of the Hebrew text suggests), then this may refer to the wicked man being

 19 tn: Heb “the LORD 20 tn: Or “the nations perish from his land.” The perfect verb form may express what is typical or it may express rhetorically the psalmist’s certitude that God’s deliverance is “as good as done.” sn: The nations may be the underlying reality behind the psalmist’s references to the “wicked” in the earlier verses. This reference to the nations may have motivated the combining of Ps 10 with Ps 9 (see Ps 9:5, 15, 19). 21 sn: You have heard. The psalmist is confident that God has responded positively to his earlier petitions for divine intervention. The psalmist apparently prayed the words of vv. 16-18 after the reception of an oracle of deliverance (given in response to the confident petition of vv. 12-15) or after the Lord actually delivered him from his enemies. 22 tn: Heb “desire.” 23 tn: Heb “you make firm their heart, you cause your ear to listen.” 24 tn: Heb “to judge (on behalf of),” or “by judging (on behalf of).” 25 tn: Heb “crushed.” See v. 10. 26 tn: Heb “he will not add again [i.e., “he will no longer”] to terrify, man from the earth.” The Hebrew term שָׁחַח

The Kethib (consonantal text) reads: “flee [masculine plural!] to your [masculine plural!] mountain, bird.” The Qere (marginal reading) has “flee” in a feminine singular form, agreeing grammatically with the addressee, the feminine noun “bird.” Rather than being a second masculine plural pronominal suffix, the ending ׀פּג

The enemies’ attack, the precise form of which is not indicated, is compared here to a night ambush by archers; the psalmist is defenseless against this deadly attack. ‡††† tn: Heb “pure of heart.” The “heart” is here viewed as the seat of one’s moral character and motives. The “pure of heart” are God’s faithful followers who trust in and love the Lord and, as a result, experience his deliverance (see Pss 7:10; 32:11; 36:10; 64:10; 94:15; 97:11). ‡† tn: The precise meaning of this rare word is uncertain. An Ugaritic cognate is used of the “bottom” or “base” of a cliff or mountain (see G. R. Driver, Canaanite Myths and Legends, 47, 159). The noun appears in postbiblical Hebrew with the meaning “foundation” (see Jastrow 1636 s.v. ׀פּג ‡† tn: The singular form is used here in a collective or representative sense. They advise the psalmist to flee because the enemy is poised to launch a deadly attack. The imperfect verb forms in v. 2 describe what is typical in the psalmist's experience. ‡‡ tn: Heb "[with] a lip of smoothness, with a heart and a heart they speak." Speaking a "smooth" word refers to deceptive flattery (cf. Ps 5:9; 55:21; Prov 2:16; 5:3; 7:5, 21; 26:28; 28:23; Isa 30:10). "Heart" here refers to their mind, from which their motives and intentions originate. The repetition of the noun indicates diversity (see GKC 396 §123. f, IBHS 116 §7.2.3c, and Deut 25:13, where the phrase "weight and a weight" refers to two different measuring weights). These people have two different types of "hearts." Their flattering words seem to express kind motives and intentions, but this outward display does not really reflect their true motives. Their real "heart" is filled with evil thoughts and destructive intentions. The "heart" that is seemingly displayed through their words is far different from the real "heart" they keep disguised. (For the idea see Ps 28:3.) In 1 Chr 12:33 the phrase "without a heart and a heart" means "undivided loyalty." ‡‡† tn: The verb form is a jussive, indicating that the statement is imprecatory ("May the LORD LORD

The related verb is used of the painful groaning of those wounded in combat ( Jer 51:52; Ezek 26:15) and of the mournful sighing of those in grief ( Ezek 9:4; 24:17). §‡ tn: Heb "I will rise up." §§† tn: Heb "I will place in deliverance, he pants for it." The verbs describe the typical behavior of the wicked. The subject of the plural verbs is "sons of man" (v. 2). The entire human race is characterized by sinful behavior. The rhetorical question (rendered in the translation as a positive affirmation) expresses the psalmist's amazement at their apparent lack of understanding. This may refer to their lack of moral understanding, but it more likely refers to their failure to anticipate God's defense of his people (see vv. 5-7). 22 tn: Heb "there they are afraid [with] fear." The Kethib (consonantal text) has "surround me," while the Qere (marginal reading) has "surround us," harmonizing the pronoun to the preceding "our steps." The first person plural pronoun does not fit the context, where the psalmist speaks as an individual. In the preceding verses the psalmist uses a first person singular verbal or pronominal form twenty times. For this reason it is preferable to emend "our steps" to אֶשְׂרוּנִי

When the wicked are ungrateful for God's blessings, they become even more culpable and deserving of judgment. So this description of the wicked actually supports the psalmist's appeal for deliverance. God should rescue

Psalm 18. In this long song of thanks, the psalmist (a Davidic king, traditionally understood as David himself) affirms that God is his faithful protector. He recalls in highly poetic fashion how God intervened in awesome power and delivered him from death. The psalmist's experience demonstrates that God vindicates those who are blameless and remain loyal to him. True to his promises, God gives the king victory on the battlefield and enables him to subdue nations. A parallel version of the psalm appears in 2 Sam 22:1-51. 21 tn: Heb "spoke." 22 tn: Heb "in the day," or "at the time." 23 tn: Heb "hand." 24 tn: Heb "and from the hand of Saul." 25 tn: A number of translations (e.g., NASB, NIV, NRSV) assign the words "he said" to the superscription, in which case the entire psalm is in first person. Other translations (e.g., NAB) include the introductory "he said" at the beginning of v. 1. 26 tn: The verb כָּחַם

27 tn: Heb "my strength." "Strength" is metonymic here, referring to the Lord as the one who bestows strength to the psalmist; thus the translation "my source of strength." 28 sn: My high ridge. This metaphor pictures God as a rocky, relatively inaccessible summit, where one would be able to find protection from enemies. See 1 Sam 23:25, 28. 29 sn: My stronghold. David often found safety in such strongholds. See 1 Sam 22:4-5; 24:22; 2 Sam 5:9, 17; 23:14. 30 tn: Or "in whom." † sn: Take shelter. "Taking shelter" in the Lord is an idiom for seeking his protection. Seeking his protection presupposes and even demonstrates the subject's loyalty to the Lord. In the psalms those who "take shelter" in the Lord are contrasted with the wicked and equated with those who love, fear and serve the Lord ( Pss 5:11-12; 31:17-20; 34:21-22). †† tn: Heb "the horn of my salvation"; or "my saving horn." sn: Though some see "horn" as referring to a horn-shaped peak of a hill, or to the "horns" of an altar where one could find refuge, it is more likely that the horn of an ox underlies the metaphor (cf. Deut 33:17; 1 Kgs 22:11; Ps 92:10). The horn of the wild ox is frequently a metaphor for military strength; the idiom "exalt the horn" signifies military victory (see 1 Sam 2:10; Pss 89:17, 24; 92:10; Lam 2:17). In the ancient Near East powerful warrior-kings would sometimes compare themselves to a goring bull that uses its horns to kill its enemies. For examples, see P. Miller, "El the Warrior," HTR 60 (1967): 422-25, and R. B. Chisholm, "An Exegetical and Theological Study of Psalm 18/ 2 Samuel 22" (Th.D. diss., Dallas Theological Seminary, 1983), 135-36. Ps 18:2 uses the metaphor of the horn in a slightly different manner. Here the Lord himself is compared to a horn. He is to the psalmist what the horn is to the ox, a source of defense and victory. ‡ tn: Or "my elevated place." The parallel version of this psalm in 2 Sam 22:3 adds at this point, "my refuge, my savior, [you who] save me from violence." ‡† tn: In this song of thanksgiving, where the psalmist recalls how the Lord delivered him, the prefixed verbal form is best understood as a preterite indicating past tense, not an imperfect. ‡‡ tn: Heb "worthy of praise, I cried out [to] the LORD מלל מלל

Verse 10, which pictures God descending from the sky, indicates that the heavenly temple is in view, not the earthly one. ‡† tc: Heb "and my cry for help before him came into his ears." 2 Sam 22:7 has a shorter reading, "my cry for help, in his ears." It is likely that Ps 18:6 MT as it now stands represents a conflation of two readings: (1) "my cry for help came before him," (2) "my cry for help came into his ears." See F. M. Cross and D. N. Freedman, Studies in Ancient Yahwistic Poetry (SBLDS), 144, n. 13. ‡†† sn: The earth heaved and shook. The imagery pictures an earthquake in which the earth's surface rises and falls. The earthquake motif is common in OT theophanies of God as warrior and in ancient Near Eastern literary descriptions of warring gods and kings. See R. B. Cherubs, as depicted in the OT, possess both human and animal (lion, ox, and eagle) characteristics (see Ezek 1:10; 10:14, 21; 41:18). They are pictured as winged creatures ( Exod 25:20; 37:9; 1 Kgs 6:24-27; Ezek 10:8, 19) and serve as the very throne of God when the ark of the covenant is in view ( Pss 80:1; 99:1; see Num 7:89; 1 Sam 4:4; 2 Sam 6:2; 2 Kgs 19:15). For other examples of unreduced Hiphil preterites, see Pss 55:14a; 68:9a, 10b; 80:8a; 89:43a; 107:38b; 116:6b. § tn: Heb "according to the purity of my hands he repaid to me." §†† tn: Heb "and his rules I do not turn aside from me." 2 Sam 22:23 reads, "and his rules, I do not turn aside from it." The prefixed verbal form is probably an imperfect; the psalmist here generalizes about his loyalty to God's commands. The Lord's "rules" are the stipulations of the covenant which the king was responsible to obey (see Ps 89:31; cf. v. 30 and Deut 17:18-20). §† tn: Heb "from my sin," that is, from making it my own in any way. sn: Kept myself from sinning. The verbal repetition (compare vv. 20 and 24) sets off vv. 20-24 as a distinct sub-unit within the psalm. §‡‡ tn: The imperfect verbal forms in vv. 25-29 draw attention to God's characteristic actions. Based on his experience, the psalmist generalizes about God's just dealings with people (vv. 25-27) and about the way in which God typically empowers him on the battlefield (vv. 28-29). The Hitpael stem is used in vv. 26-27 in a reflexive resultative (or causative) sense. God makes himself loyal, etc. in the sense that he conducts or reveals himself as such. On this use of the Hitpael stem, see GKC 149-50 §54. e. §‡‡‡ tn: Or "to a faithful follower." A "faithful follower" ( פֶּתִיל ) seems to attribute eternal life to the king (see Pss 61:6-7; 72:5 as

<sup>27</sup> tn: Heb “like a lion, my hands and my feet.” This reading is often emended because it is grammatically awkward, but perhaps its awkwardness is by rhetorical design. Its broken syntax may be intended to convey the panic and terror felt by the psalmist. The psalmist may envision a lion pinning the hands and feet of its victim to the ground with its paws (a scene depicted in ancient Near Eastern art), or a lion biting the hands and feet. The line has been traditionally translated, “they pierce my hands and feet,” and then taken as foreshadowing the crucifixion of Christ. Though Jesus does appropriate the language of this psalm while on the cross (compare v. 1 with Matt 27:46 and Mark 15:34), the NT does not cite this verse in describing the death of Jesus. (It does refer to vv. 7-8 and 18, however. See Matt 27:35, 39, 43; Mark 15:24, 29; Luke 23:34; John 19:23-24.) If one were to insist on an emendation of נִצְּרִי

†† tn: Heb "and from the horns of the wild oxen you answer me." Most take the final verb with the preceding prepositional phrase. Some understand the verb form as a relatively rare precat- utive perfect, expressing a wish or request (see IBHS 494-95 §30.5.4c, d). However, not all grammarians are convinced that the perfect is used as a precative in biblical Hebrew. (See the discussion at Ps 3:7.) Others prefer to take the perfect in its usual indicative sense. The psalmist, perhaps in response to an oracle of salvation, affirms con- fidently that God has answered him, assuring him that deliverance is on the way. The present translation takes the prepositional phrase as parallel to the preceding "from the mouth of the lion" and as col- located with the verb "rescue" at the beginning of the verse. "You have answered me" is understood as a triumphant shout which marks a sudden shift in tone and introduces the next major section of the psalm. By isolating the statement syntactically, the psalmist highlights the declaration. ‡ tn: Or "brothers," but here the term does not carry a literal familial sense. The verb "draw near" (that is, "attack") is understood by ellipsis; see the previous line. 31 tn: The Hebrew verbal forms are perfects. He describes the Lord's devastating power as revealed in the thunderstorm and affirms that the Lord exerts this awesome might on behalf of his people. In its original context the psalm was a bold polemic against the Canaanite storm god Baal, for it affirms that the Lord is the real king who controls the elements of the storm, contrary to pagan belief. The psalmist describes a powerful storm moving in from the sea and sweeping over the mountainous areas north of Israel. The "surging waters" may symbolize the hostile enemies of God who seek to destroy his people (see Pss 18:17; 32:6; 77:20; 93:4; 144:7; Isa 17:13; Jer 51:55; Ezek 26:19; Hab 3:15). In Hos 6:5 it seems to mean "cut in pieces," "knock down," or perhaps "hack" (see F. I. Andersen and D. N. Freedman, Hosea [AB], 428). The Ugaritic cognate can mean "assault." In v. 7 the verb seems to have a similar meaning, perhaps "attack, strike." The phrase "flames of fire" is an adverbial accusative; the LORD

The perfect verbal form is understood here as anticipatory, indicating rhetorically the psalmist's certitude and confidence that God will intervene. Another option is to take the perfect as precative, expressing a wish or request ("rescue me"; cf. NIV). See IBHS 494-95 §30.5.4c, d. 19 tn: The meaning of the Hebrew term מְנַחֵחַ
 20 tn: The Hebrew noun is an abstract plural. The word often refers metonymically to the happiness that God-given security and prosperity produce (see Pss 1:1, 3; 2:12; 34:9; 41:1; 65:4; 84:12; 89:15; 106:3; 112:1; 127:5; 128:1; 144:15). Here it refers to the relief that one experiences when one’s sins are forgiven. 21 tn: Heb “lifted up.” 22 tn: Heb “covered over.” 23 tn: Heb “man.” The word choice reflects the perspective of the psalmist, who is male. The principle of the psalm is certainly applicable to all people, regardless of their gender or age. To facilitate modern application, the gender and age specific “man” has been translated with the more neutral “one.” 24 tn: Heb “blessed [is] the man to whom the LORD 25 sn: In whose spirit there is no deceit. The point is not that the individual is sinless and pure. In this context, which focuses on confession and forgiveness of sin, the psalmist refers to one who refuses to deny or hide his sin, but instead honestly confesses it to God. 26 tn: Heb “when I was silent.” 27 tn: Heb “my bones became brittle.” The psalmist pictures himself as aging and growing physically weak. Trying to cover up his sin brought severe physical consequences. 28 tn: Heb “your hand was heavy upon me.” 29 tc: Heb “my [?] was turned.” The meaning of the Hebrew term מְנַחֵחַ
 30 tn: The translation assumes that the plural form indicates degree. If one understands the form as a true plural, then one might translate, “in the times of drought.” 31 sn: Summer. Perhaps the psalmist suffered during the hot season and perceived the very weather as being an instrument of divine judgment. Another option is that he compares his time of suffering to the uncomfortable and oppressive heat of summer. 32 tn: The Hiphil of נָדַח letters of the Hebrew alphabet. (Verse 6 begins with the letter he ( ה

 21:10-15 which tells how David, fearful that King Achish of Gath might kill him, pretended to be insane in hopes that the king would simply send him away. The psalm heading names the king Abimelech, not Achish, suggesting that the tradition is confused on this point. However, perhaps "Abimelech" was a royal title, rather than a proper name. See P. C. Craigie, Psalms 1-50 (WBC), 278. 20 tn: Heb verse are best taken as jussives, for the psalmist is calling his audiimperatives, "look to him and be radiant" (cf. NEB, NRSV). Some meon the cross (see John 19:31-37), for the Roman soldiers, when they saw that Jesus was already dead, did not break his legs as was cus-tomarily done to speed the death of crucified individuals. John's use of the psalm seems strange, for the statement in its original context suggests that the Lord protects the godly from physical harm. Jesus' legs may have remained unbroken, but he was brutally and unjustly executed by his enemies. John seems to give the statement a literal sense that is foreign to its original literary context by applying a promise of divine protection to a man who was seemingly not saved by God. However, John saw in this incident a foreshadowing of Jesus' ultimate deliverance and vindication. His unbroken bones were a re-

Ezek 38:4. Many modern translations render the first term (translated here "small shield") as "buckler" (cf. NASB "buckler and shield"; the order is often reversed in the translation, apparently for stylistic reasons: cf. NEB, NIV, NRSV "shield and buckler"). The English term "buckler," referring to a small round shield held on the arm to protect the upper body, is unfamiliar to many modern readers, so the term "small shield" was used in the present translation for clarity.

have been transposed. "Net" goes with the verb "hid" in the first line (see v. 8, as well as Pss 9:15; 31:4), while "pit" goes with the verb
"dug" in the second line (see Ps 7:15).

† tn: Heb "let destruction [which] he does not know come to him." The singular is used of the enemy in v. 8, probably in a representative or collective sense. The psalmist has more than one enemy, as vv. 1-7 make clear. †† tn: The psalmist's prayer for his enemies' demise continues. See vv. 4-6. ‡ tn: Heb "then my soul will rejoice in the LORD ‡† tn: Heb "all my bones will say." ‡‡ tn: Heb "[the one who] rescues." The substantival participle in the Hebrew text characterizes God as one who typically rescues the oppressed. ‡‡† tn: Heb "from [the one who is] too strong for him." The singular forms are used in a representative sense. The typical oppressed individual and typical oppressor are in view. ‡‡‡ tn: Heb "the oppressed [one] and needy [one] from [the one who] robs him." As in the previous line, the singular forms are used in a representative sense. § tn: Heb "witnesses of violence rise up." §† tn: Heb "[that] which I do not know they ask me." §†† tn: Heb "they repay me evil instead of good." §‡ tn: Heb "[there is] bereavement to my soul." §†† tn: Heb "as for me, when they were sick, my clothing was sackcloth." Sackcloth was worn by mourners. When the psalmist's enemies were sick, he was sorry for their misfortune and mourned for them. §† sn: Fasting was also a practice of mourners. By refraining from normal activities, such as eating food, the mourner demonstrated the sincerity of his sorrow. §‡ tn: Heb "and my prayer upon my chest will return." One could translate, "but my prayer was returning upon my chest," but the use of the imperfect verbal form sets this line apart from the preceding and following lines (vv. 13a, 14), which use the perfect to describe the psalmist's past actions. §§† tn: Heb "like a friend, like a brother to me I walked about." §§‡ sn: I bowed down. §§§ tn: Heb "for it causes to be smooth to him in his eyes to find his sin to hate." The meaning of the Hebrew text is unclear. Perhaps the point is this: His rebellious attitude makes him reject any notion that God will hold him accountable. His attitude also prevents him from recognizing and repudiating his sinful ways. 18 tn: Heb "he ceases to exhibit wisdom to do good." The Hiphil forms are exhibitive, indicating the outward expression of an inner attitude. 19 tn:
 Heb "he takes a stand in a way [that is] not good." The word "way" here refers metaphorically to behavior or life style. 20 tn: The three imperfect verbal forms in v. 4 highlight the characteristic behavior of the typical evildoer. 21 tn: Heb "[is] in the heavens."

 highest mountains and as abundant as the water in the deepest sea. The psalmist uses a legal metaphor to describe God's preservation of his creation. Like a just judge who vindicates the innocent, God protects his creation from destructive forces. 26 tn: Or your wings find shelter." The preservation of physical life is in view, as the next verse makes clear. 28 tn: Heb "for with you is the seat of one's moral character and motives. The "pure of heart" are God's faithful followers who trust in and love the Lord and, as a re-

The psalmist urges his audience not to envy the wicked, but to trust in and obey the Lord, for he will destroy sinners and preserve the godly. When the smoke of judgment clears, the wicked will be gone, but the godly will remain and inherit God's promised blessings. The psalm is an acrostic; every other verse begins with a successive letter of the Hebrew alphabet. †† tn: The verb form is singular (see vv. 3-10 as well, where the second person verbs and pronouns are also singular). The psalmist's exhortation has a wisdom flavor to it; it is personalized for each member of his audience. ‡ tn: Heb "over sinners." The singular is used here in a representative sense; the typical evildoer and the typical godly individual are in view. 22 tn: Heb "and gnashes at him with his teeth" (see Ps 35:16). The language may picture the evil men as wild animals. The active participles in v. 12 are used for purposes of dramatic description. 23 tn: Heb "laughs." As the next line indicates, this refers to derisive laughter (see 2:4). The Hebrew imperfect verbal form describes the action from the perspective of an eye-witness who is watching the divine response as it unfolds before his eyes. 24 tn: Heb "for he sees that his day is coming." As the following context makes clear (vv. 15, 17, 19-20), "his day" refers to the time when God will destroy evildoers. 25 tn: Heb "to cause to fall." 26 tn: Heb "the upright in way," i.e., those who lead godly lives. 27 tn: Heb "enter into." 28 tn: Heb "Better [is] a little to the godly one than the wealth of many evil ones." The following verses explain why this is true. Though a godly individual may seem to have only meager possessions, he always has what he needs and will eventually possess the land. The wicked may prosper for a brief time, but will eventually be destroyed by divine judgment and lose everything. 29 tn: Heb "for the arms of the evil ones will be broken." 30 tn: The active participle here indicates this is characteristically true. 31 tn: Heb "the LORD

tn: The Hebrew noun is an abstract plural. The word often refers metonymically to the happiness that God-given security and prosperity produce (see Pss 1:1, 3; 2:12; 34:9; 41:1; 65:4; 84:12; 89:15; 106:3; 112:1; 127:5; 128:1; 144:15). § tn: Heb "man." The present translation assumes that the cohortatives are used in a hypothetical manner in a formally unmarked conditional sentence, "Should I try to declare [them] and speak [of them]..." (cf. NEB, NIV, NRSV). For other examples of cohortatives in the protasis ("if" clause) of a conditional sentence, see GKC

320 §108. e. (It should be noted, however, that GKC understands this particular verse in a different manner. See GKC 320 §108. f, where it is suggested that the cohortatives are part of an apodosis with the protasis being suppressed.) Another option is to take the cohortatives as a declaration of the psalmist's resolve to announce the truth expressed in the next line. In this case one might translate: "I will declare and speak [the truth]: They are too numerous to recount." §§† tn: Heb "sacrifice and offering you do not desire." The statement is exaggerated for the sake of emphasis (see Ps 51:16 as well). God is pleased with sacrifices, but his first priority is obedience and loyalty (see 1 Sam 15:22). Sacrifices and offerings apart from genuine allegiance are meaningless (see Isa 1:11-20). §§‡ tn: Heb "ears you hollowed out for me." The meaning of this odd expression is debated (this is the only collocation of "hollowed out" and "ears" in the OT). It may have been an idiomatic expression referring to making a point clear to a listener. The LXX has "but a body you have prepared for me," a reading which is followed in Heb 10:5. §§§ tn: Heb "in the roll of the scroll it is written concerning me." Apparently the psalmist refers to the law of God (see v. 8), which contains the commandments God desires him to obey. If this is a distinctly royal psalm, then the psalmist/king may be referring specifically to the regulations of kingship prescribed in Deut 17:14-20. See P. C. Craigie, Psalms 1-50 (WBC), 315. 18 tn: Or "your will."<sup>19</sup> tn: Heb "your law [is] in the midst of my inner parts." The "inner parts" are viewed here as the seat of the psalmist's thought life and moral decision making. 20 sn: The great assembly is also mentioned in Pss 22:25 and 35:18. 21 tn: Heb "I proclaim justice in the great assembly." Though "justice" appears without a pronoun here, the LORD

Since the prefixed verbal form in the preceding line is imperfect/indicative, one could take the verb in this line as imperfect as well and translate, "your loyal love and faithfulness continually protect me" (cf. NEB). However, the יָ

‡† tn: Or "sinful deeds." The Hebrew term used here can have a nonmoral nuance ("dangers") or a moral one ("sinful deeds") depending on the context. The next line (see "my sins") seems to favor the moral sense, but the psalmist also speaks of enemies shortly after this (v. 14). †† tn: Heb "and my heart abandons me." The "heart" is here viewed as the seat of emotional strength and courage. For a similar idea see Ps 38:10. ‡ tn: Heb "hurry to my help." See Pss 22:19; 38:22. †† tn: Heb "may they be embarrassed and ashamed together, the ones seeking my life to snatch it away." ‡‡† tn: The four prefixed verbal forms in this verse ("may those...be...embarrassed and ashamed...may those...be turned back and ashamed") are understood as jussives. The psalmist is calling judgment down on his enemies. sn: See Ps 35:4 for a similar prayer. ‡‡†† tn: The prefixed verbal form is understood as a jussive in this imprecation. ‡‡†† tn: Heb "May they be humiliated according to their shame, those who say to me, 'Aha! heard his request to be healed (vv. 4-10), and he anticipates the joy he will experience when the Lord intervenes (vv. 1-3). One must assume that the psalmist is responding to a divine oracle of assurance (see P. C. Craigie, Psalms 1-50 [WBC], 319-20). The final verse is a fitting conclusion to this psalm, but it also serves as a fitting conclusion to the first "book" (or major editorial division) of the Psalter. Similar statements appear at or near the end of each of the second, third, and fourth "books" of the Psalter (see Pss 72:19, 89:52, and 106:48 respectively). §†† tn: The Hebrew noun is an abstract plural. The word often refers metonymically to the happiness that God-given security and prosperity produce (see Pss 1:1, 3; 2:12; 34:9; 65:4; 84:12; 89:15; 106:3; 112:1; 127:5; 128:1; 144:15). §††† sn: One who treats the poor properly. The psalmist is characterizing himself as such an individual and supplying a reason why God has responded favorably to his prayer. The Lord's attitude toward the merciful mirrors their treatment of the poor. §§†† tn: Heb "in the day of trouble" (see Ps 27:5). §§§†† tn: That is, the one who has been kind to the poor. The prefixed verbal form could be taken as jussive of prayer ("may the LORD

18 tn: The prefixed verbal forms are taken as jussives in the translation because the jussive is clearly used in the final line of the verse, suggesting that this is a prayer. The psalmist stops to pronounce a prayer of blessing on the godly individual envisioned in v. 1. Of course, he actually has himself primarily in view. He mixes confidence (vv. 1, 3) with petition (v. 2) because he stands in the interval between the word of assurance and the actual intervention by God. 19 tc: The translation follows the consonantal Hebrew text (Kethib), which has a Pual (passive) prefixed form, regarded here as a jussive. The Pual of the verb אָשַׁר

The imperfect can be understood as future or as generalizing (see v. 1). 23 tn: Heb "all his bed you turn in his illness." The perfect is used here in a generalizing sense (see v. 1) or in a rhetorical manner to emphasize that the healing is as good as done. 24 sn: In vv. 4-10 the psalmist recites the prayer of petition and lament he offered to the Lord.

§ sn: Psalm 44. The speakers in this psalm (the worshiping community within the nation Israel) were disappointed with God. The psalm begins on a positive note, praising God for leading Israel to past military victories. Verses 1-8 appear to be a song of confidence and petition which the people recited prior to battle. But suddenly the mood changes as the nation laments a recent defeat. The stark contrast between the present and the past only heightens the nation's confusion. Israel trusted in God for victory, but the Lord rejected them and allowed them to be humiliated in battle. If Israel had been unfaithful to God, their defeat would make sense, but the nation was loyal to the Lord. Comparing the Lord to a careless shepherd, the nation urges God to wake up and to extend his compassion to his suffering people. §† tn: The meaning of the Hebrew term מְשַׁכֵּל

18 tn: Heb "and you sent them out." The translation assumes that the third masculine plural pronoun "them" refers to the fathers (v. 1), as in the preceding parallel line. See Ps 80:11, where Israel, likened to a vine, "spreads out" its tendrils to the west and east. Another option is to take the "peoples" as the referent of the pronoun and translate, "and you sent them away," though this does not provide as tight a parallel with the corresponding line. 19 tn: Or "take possession of." 20 tn: Heb "and their arm did not save them." The "arm" here symbolizes military strength. 21 tn: Heb "your right hand." The LORD

In this case one might translate, "you [always] drive back...you [always] trample down." sn: The Hebrew verb translated "drive back" is literally "gore"; the imagery is that of a powerful wild ox that "gores" its enemies and tramples them underfoot. 30 tn: Heb "in your name." "Lilies" may be a tune title or musical style, suggestive of romantic love. The imagery of a "lily" appears frequently in the Song of Solomon in a variety of contexts (see 2:1-2, 16; 4:5; 5:13; 6:2-3; 7:2). ‡ tn: The meaning of the Hebrew term מְשֻׁכָּלִים

The choppy style reflects the poet's excitement. 18 sn: The king's throne here symbolizes his rule. 19 tn: Or "forever and ever." sn: O God. The king is clearly the addressee here, as in vv. 2-5 and 7-9. Rather than taking the statement at face value, many prefer to emend the text because the concept of deifying the earthly king is foreign to ancient Israelite thinking (cf. NEB "your throne is like God's throne, eternal"). However, it is preferable to retain the text and take this statement as another instance of the royal hyperbole that permeates the royal psalms. Because the Davidic king is God's vice-regent on earth, the psalmist addresses him as if he were God incarnate. God energizes the king for battle and accomplishes justice through him. A similar use of hyperbole appears in Isa 9:6, where the ideal Davidic king of the eschaton is given the title "Mighty God" (see the note on this phrase there). Ancient Near Eastern art and literature picture gods training kings for battle, bestowing special weapons, and intervening in battle. According to Egyptian propaganda, the Hittites described Rameses II as follows: "No man is he who is among us, It is Seth great-of-strength, Baal in person; Not deeds of man are these his doings, They are of one who is unique" (see Miriam Lichtheim, Ancient Egyptian Literature, 2:67). Ps 45:6 and Isa 9:6 probably envision a similar kind of response when friends and foes alike look at the Davidic king in full battle regalia. When the king's enemies oppose him on the battlefield, they are, as it were, fighting against God himself. 20 sn: The king's scepter symbolizes his royal authority. 21 sn: To love justice means to actively promote it. 22 sn: To hate evil means to actively oppose it. 23 tn: For other examples of the repetition of Elohim, "God," see Pss 43:4; 48:8, 14; 50:7; 51:14; 67:7. However, the following context (vv. 8-9) focuses on the wedding ceremony, so some prefer to see this anointing as part of the king's preparations for the wedding celebration. Perhaps the reference to his anointing at his coronation facilitates the transition to the description of the wedding, for the king was also anointed on this occasion. 25 sn: The phrase oil of joy alludes to the fact that the coronation of the king, which was ritually accomplished by anointing his head with olive oil, was a time of great celebration and renewed hope. (If one understands the anointing in conjunction with the wedding ceremony, the "joy" would be that associated with the marriage.) The phrase "oil of joy" also appears in Isa 61:3, where mourners are granted "oil of joy" in conjunction with their deliverance from oppression. 26 tn: Heb "from your companions." The “companions” are most naturally understood as others in the royal family or, more generally, as the king’s countrymen. sn: Verses 6-7 are quoted in Heb 1:8-9, where they are applied to Jesus. † tn: The words “perfumed with” are supplied in the translation for clarification. †† tn: Heb “the palaces of ivory.” The phrase “palaces of ivory” refers to palaces that had ivory panels and furniture decorated with ivory inlays. Such decoration with ivory was characteristic of a high level of luxury. See 1 Kgs 22:39 and Amos 3:15. ‡ tn: Heb “from the palaces of ivory stringed instrument[s] make you happy.” ‡† tn: Heb “daughters of kings.” ‡‡ tn: Heb “valuable ones.” The form is feminine plural. ‡‡† tn: This rare Hebrew noun apparently refers to the king’s bride, who will soon be queen (see Neh 2:6). The Aramaic cognate is used of royal wives in Dan 5:2-3, 23. ‡‡‡ tn: Heb “a consort stands at your right hand, gold of Ophir.” sn: Gold from Ophir is also mentioned in Isa 13:12 and Job 28:16. The precise location of Ophir is uncertain; Arabia, India, East Africa, and South Africa have all been suggested as options. ‡ tn: Heb “daughter.” The Hebrew noun בַּת

Perhaps the marriage was arranged as part of a political alliance between Israel (or Judah) and a neighboring state. The poet here makes the point that the young bride is obligated to bring pleasure to her new husband. Though a foreign concept to modern western culture, this was accepted as the cultural norm in the psalmist’s day. ‡‡† map: For location see . ‡‡‡ tn: Heb “and a daughter of Tyre with a gift, your face they will appease, the rich of people.” The phrase “daughter of Tyre” occurs only here in the OT. It could be understood as addressed to the bride, indicating she was a Phoenician (cf. NEB). However, often in the OT the word “daughter,” when collocated with the name of a city or country, is used to personify the referent (see, for example, “Daughter Zion” in Ps 9:14, and “Daughter Babylon” in Ps 137:8). If that is the case here, then “Daughter Tyre” identifies the city-state of Tyre as the place from which the rich people come (cf. NRSV). The idiom “appease the face” refers to seeking one’s favor (see Exod 32:11; 1 Sam 13:12; 1 Kgs 13:6; 2 Kgs 13:4; 2 Chr 33:12; Job 11:19; Ps 119:58; Prov 19:6; Jer 26:19; Dan 9:13; Zech 7:2; 8:21-22; Mal 1:9). <sup>18</sup> tn: Heb “[the] daughter of a king.”

The king’s “name” stands here for his reputation and character, which the poet praised in vv. 2-7. <sup>27</sup> sn: The nations will praise you. As God’s vice-regent on earth, the king is deserving of such honor and praise. <sup>28</sup> sn: Psalm 46. The covenant community characteristically responds with confidence, not fear. Another option is to take the situation described as purely hypothetical. The Hebrew word often means "pride." If the sea is symbolic of hostile nations, then this may be a case of double entendre. The surging, swelling sea symbolizes the proud, hostile nations. On the surface the psalmist appears to be depicting a major natural catastrophe, perhaps a tidal wave. If so, then the situation would be hypothetical. However, the repetition of the verbs הָמָה

‡‡‡ tn: Heb "A river, its channels cause the city of God to be glad." sn: The city of God is Jerusalem (see Pss 48:1-2; 87:2-3). The river's "channels" are probably irrigation ditches vital to growing crops. Some relate the imagery to the "waters of Shiloah" (see Isa 8:6), which flowed from the Gihon spring to the pool of Siloam. In Isa 8:6-8 these waters are contrasted with the flood waters symbolizing Assyria. Even if this is the reality behind the imagery, the picture of a river flowing through Jerusalem is idealized and exaggerated. The river and irrigation ditches symbolize the peace and prosperity that the Lord provides for Jerusalem, in contrast to the havoc produced by the turbulent waters (symbolic of the nations) outside the city. Some see here an adaptation of Canaanite (or, more specifically, Jebusite) mythical traditions of rivers/springs flowing from the high god El's dwelling place. The Songs of Zion do utilize such imagery at times (see Ps 48:2). The image of a river flowing through Zion may have inspired prophetic visions of an eschatological river flowing from the temple (see Ezek 47:1-12; Joel 3:18). § tn: Heb "the holy [place] of the dwelling places of." There may be an allusion here to Exod 14:27 (where the Lord destroyed the Egyptians at the "break of dawn") or, more likely, to the miraculous deliverance of Jerusalem from the Assyrian siege, when the people discovered the dead bodies of the Assyrian army in the morning ( Isa 37:36). §† tn: Heb "nations roar, kingdoms shake." That event is here described metaphorically in terms of a typical coronation ceremony for an earthly king (see 2 Sam 15:10; 2 Kgs 9:13). Psalm 49. In this so-called wisdom psalm (see v. 3) the psalmist states that he will not fear the rich enemies who threaten him, for despite their wealth, they are mere men who will die like everyone else. The psalmist is confident the Lord will vindicate the godly and protect them from the attacks of their oppressors. †† tn: The rare noun נָלַד

Elsewhere the Hebrew word pair מִשְׁלַח חִידָה

The following verses explain why this is so. § tc: The MT has, "the iniquity of my heels surrounds me." The clause is best understood as temporal and as elaborating on the preceding phrase "times of trouble." If the MT is retained, the genitive "of my §‡† tn: Heb "he cannot pay to God his ransom price." Num 35:31 may supply the legal background for the metaphorical language used here. The psalmist pictures God as having a claim on the soul of the individual. When God comes to claim the life that ultimately belongs to him, he demands a ransom price that is beyond the capability of anyone to pay. The psalmist's point is that God has ultimate authority over life and death; all the money in the world cannot buy anyone a single day of life beyond what God has decreed. §† tn: Heb "their life." Some emend the text to "his life," understanding the antecedent of the pronoun as "brother" in v. 7. However, the man and brother of v. 7 are representative of the human race in general, perhaps explaining why a plural pronoun appears in v. 8. Of course, the plural pronoun could refer back to "the rich" mentioned in v. 6. Another option (the one assumed in the translation) is that the suffixed mem is enclitic. In this case the "ransom price for human life" is referred to an abstract, general way. §‡ tn: Heb "and one ceases forever." The translation assumes an indefinite subject which in turn is representative of the entire human race ("one," that refers to human beings without exception). The verb נָדַל more likely that the psalmist here expresses his hope that God will rescue him from premature death at the hands of the rich oppressors denounced in the psalm. The psalmist is well aware that all (the wise and foolish) die (see vv. 7-12), but he is confident God will lead him safely through the present "times of trouble" (v. 5) and sweep the wicked away to their final destiny. The theme is a common one in the so-called wisdom psalms (see Pss 1, 34, 37, 112). For a fuller discussion of the psalmists' view of the afterlife, see R. B. Chisholm, Jr., "A Theology of the Psalms," A Biblical Theology of the Old Testament, 284-88. † sn: When a man becomes rich. Why would people fear such a development? However, their understanding of the essence of their relationship with God was confused. Apparently they believed that he needed/desired such sacrifices and that offering them would ensure their prosperity. But the Lord owns all the animals of the world and did not need Israel's meager sacrifices (vv. 9-13). Other aspects of the relationship were more important to the Lord. He desired Israel to be thankful for his blessings (v. 14a), to demonstrate gratitude for his intervention by repaying the vows they made to him (v. 14b), and to acknowledge their absolute dependence on him (v. 15a). Rather than viewing their sacrifices as somehow essential to God's well-being, they needed to understand their dependence on him. †††† tn: Heb "evil [one]." 23 sn: Psalm 51. The psalmist confesses his sinfulness to God and begs for forgiveness and a transformation of his inner character. According to the psalm superscription, David offered this prayer when Nathan confronted him with his sin following the king's affair with Bathsheba (see 2 Sam 11-12). However, the final two verses of the psalm hardly fit this situation, for they assume the walls of Jerusalem have been destroyed and that the sacrificial system has been temporarily suspended. These verses are probably an addition to the psalm made during the period of exile following the fall of Jerusalem in 586 B.C.

24 tn: Heb "a psalm by David, when Nathan the prophet came to him when he had gone to Bathsheba." 25 tn: Or "according to." 26 tn: Or "according to." 27 tn: Traditionally "blot out my transgressions." Because of the reference to washing and cleansing in the following verse, it is likely that the psalmist is comparing forgiveness to wiping an object clean (note the use of the verb נָקָה)

28 tn: Heb "Thoroughly wash me from my wrongdoing."

3 For I am aware of† my rebellious acts;
I am forever conscious of my sin. ††
4 Against you – you above all ‡ – I have sinned;
I have done what is evil in your sight.
So ‡† you are just when you confront me; ‡‡
you are right when you condemn me. ‡‡†

a sinner the moment my mother conceived me. ‡‡†

you want me to possess wisdom. §‡ 7 Sprinkle me§‡† with water §† and I will be pure; §‡ wash me§‡† and I will be whiter than snow. §‡†
8 Grant me the ultimate joy of being forgiven! <sup>§‡‡‡</sup>

† sn: In vv. 1b-2 the psalmist uses three different words to emphasize the multifaceted character and degree of his sin. Whatever one wants to call it (“rebellious acts,” “wrongdoing,” “sin”), he has done it and stands morally polluted in God’s sight. The same three words appear in Exod 34:7, which emphasizes that God is willing to forgive sin in all of its many dimensions. In v. 2 the psalmist compares forgiveness and restoration to physical cleansing. Perhaps he likens spiritual cleansing to the purification rites of priestly law. †† tn: Heb “know.” ‡ tn: Heb “and my sin [is] in front of me continually.” ‡† tn: Heb “only you,” as if the psalmist had sinned exclusively against God and no other. §‡ tn: The imperfect verbal form is used here to express the psalmist’s wish or request. §‡‡ sn: I will be whiter than snow. Whiteness here symbolizes the moral purity resulting from forgiveness (see Isa 1:18). <sup>18</sup> tn: Heb “cause me to hear happiness and joy.” The language is metonymic: the effect of forgiveness (joy) has been substituted for its cause. The psalmist probably alludes here to an assuring word from God announcing that his sins are forgiven (a so-called oracle of forgiveness). The imperfect verbal form is used here to express the psalmist’s wish or request. The synonyms “happiness” and “joy” are joined together as a hendiadys to emphasize the degree of joy he anticipates. <sup>19</sup> sn: May the bones you crushed rejoice. The psalmist compares his sinful condition to that of a person who has been physically battered and crushed. Within this metaphorical framework, his “bones” are the seat of his emotional strength. <sup>20</sup> tn: In this context of petitionary prayer, the prefixed verbal form is understood as a jussive, expressing the psalmist’s wish or request. <sup>21</sup> sn: In this context Hide your face from my sins means “Do not hold me accountable for my sins.” <sup>22</sup> tn: See the note on the similar expression “wipe away my rebellious acts” in v. 1. <sup>23</sup> sn: The heart is viewed here as the seat of the psalmist’s motives and moral character. <sup>24</sup> tn: Heb “and a reliable spirit renew in my inner being.” <sup>25</sup> tn: Heb “do not cast me away from before you.” <sup>26</sup> sn: Your Holy Spirit. The personal Spirit of God is mentioned frequently in the OT, but only here and in Isa 63:10-11 is he called “your/his Holy Spirit.” <sup>27</sup> sn: Do not take...away. The psalmist expresses his fear that, due to his sin, God will take away the Holy Spirit from him. NT believers enjoy the permanent gift of the Holy Spirit and need not make such a request nor fear such a consequence. However, in the OT God’s Spirit empowered certain individuals for special tasks and only temporarily resided in them. For example, when God rejected Saul as king and chose David to replace him, the divine Spirit left Saul and came upon David ( 1 Sam 16:13-14). <sup>28</sup> tn: Heb “and [with] a willing spirit sustain me.” The psalmist asks that God make him the kind of person who willingly obeys the divine commandments. The imperfect verbal form is used here to express the psalmist’s wish or request. <sup>29</sup> tn: The cohortative expresses the psalmist’s resolve. This may be a vow or promise. If forgiven, the psalmist will “repay” the Lord by declaring God’s mercy and motivating other sinners to repent. <sup>30</sup> tn: Heb “your ways.” The word “merciful” is added for clarification. God’s “ways” are sometimes his commands, but in this context, where the teaching of God’s ways motivates repentance (see the next line), it is more likely that God’s merciful and compassionate way of dealing with sinners is in view. Thanksgiving songs praising God for his deliverance typically focus on these divine attributes (see Pss 34, 41, 116, 138). <sup>31</sup> tn: Or “return,” i.e., in repentance. <sup>32</sup> tn: Heb “from bloodshed.” “Bloodshed” here stands by metonymy for the guilt which it produces. <sup>33</sup> tn: Heb “my tongue will shout for joy your deliverance.” Another option is to take the prefixed verbal form as a jussive, “may my tongue shout for joy.” However, the pattern in vv. 12-15 appears to be prayer/request (see vv. 12, 14a, 15a) followed by promise/vow (see vv. 13, 14b, 15b). † tn: Heb “open my lips.” The imperfect verbal form is used here to express the psalmist’s wish or request. †† tn: Heb “and my mouth will declare your praise.” ‡ tn: Or “For.” The translation assumes the particle is asseverative (i.e., emphasizing: “certainly”). (Some translations that consider the particle asseverative leave it untranslated.) If taken as causal or explanatory (“for”, cf. NRSV), the verse would explain why the psalmist is pleading for forgiveness, rather than merely offering a sacrifice. †† tn: The translation assumes that the cohortative is used in a hypothetical manner in a formally unmarked conditional sentence, “You do not want a sacrifice, should I offer [it]” (cf. NEB). For other examples of cohortatives in the protasis (“if” clause) of a conditional sentence, see GKC 320 §108. e. (It should be noted, however, that GKC understands this particular verse in a different manner. See GKC 320 §108. f, where it is suggested that the cohortative is part of an apodosis with the protasis being suppressed.) ‡‡ sn: You do not desire a burnt sacrifice. The terminology used in v. 16 does not refer to expiatory sacrifices, but to dedication and communion offerings. This is not a categorical denial of the sacrificial system in general or of the importance of such offerings. The psalmist is talking about his specific situation. Dedication and communion offerings have their proper place in worship (see v. 19), but God requires something more fundamental, a repentant and humble attitude (see v. 17), before these offerings can have real meaning. ‡‡‡ tn: Heb “a broken spirit.” ‡‡‡ tn: Heb “a broken and crushed heart.” § tn: Or “despise.” §† tn: Heb “do what is good for Zion in your favor.” §†† tn: Or “Build.” The imperfect verbal form is used here to express the psalmist’s wish or request. §† map: For location see . §†† tn: Or “desire, take delight in.” §† tn: Heb “then they will offer up bulls.” The third plural subject is indefinite. §† sn: Verses 18-19 appear to reflect the exilic period, when the city’s walls lay in ruins and the sacrificial system had been disrupted. §§† sn: Psalm 52. This may refer to their lack of moral understanding, but it more likely refers to their failure to anticipate God's defense of his people (see vv. 5-6). <sup>21</sup> tn: Heb "there they are afraid [with] fear." The perfect verbal form is probably used in a rhetorical manner; the psalmist describes the future demise of the oppressors as if it were already occurring. The adverb ׀

<sup>22</sup> tn: Heb "there is no fear." Apparently this means the evildoers are so traumatized with panic (see v. 5b) that they now jump with fear at everything, even those things that would not normally cause fear. Ps 14:5 omits this line. <sup>23</sup> tn: Heb "scatters the bones." The perfect is used in a rhetorical manner, describing this future judgment as if it were already accomplished. Scattering the bones alludes to the aftermath of a battle. God annihilates his enemies, leaving their carcasses spread all over the battlefield. As the bodies are devoured by wild animals and decay, the bones of God's dead enemies are exposed. See Ps 141:7. <sup>24</sup> tn: Heb "[those who] encamp [against] you." The second person masculine singular pronominal suffix probably refers to God's people viewed as a collective whole. Instead of "for God scatters the bones of those who encamp against you," Ps 14:5 reads, "for God is with a godly generation." <sup>25</sup> tn: Once again the perfect is used in a rhetorical manner, describing this future judgment as if it were already accomplished. As in the previous line, God's people are probably addressed. The second person singular verb form is apparently collective, suggesting that the people are viewed here as a unified whole. Ps 14:6 reads here "the counsel of the oppressed you put to shame, even though God is his shelter," the words being addressed to the wicked. <sup>26</sup> tn: This refers metonymically to God, the one who lives in Zion and provides deliverance for Israel. <sup>27</sup> tn: Heb "turns with a turning [toward] his people." ‡† sn: According to the superscription, David wrote this psalm when the Philistines seized him and took him to King Achish of Gath (see 1 Sam 21:11-15). ‡‡ tn: According to BDB 983 s.v. §‡† tn: Heb “[in] a day.” §†† tn: Heb “in God I boast, his word.” The syntax in the Hebrew text is difficult. (1) The line could be translated, “in God I boast, [in] his word.” Such a translation assumes that the prepositional phrase “in God” goes with the following verb “I boast” (see Ps 44:8) and that “his word” is appositional to “in God” and more specifically identifies the basis for the psalmist’s confidence. God’s “word” is here understood as an assuring promise of protection. Another option (2) is to translate, “in God I will boast [with] a word.” In this case, the “word” is a song of praise. (In this view the pronominal suffix “his” must be omitted as in v. 10.) The present translation reflects yet another option (3): In this case “I praise his word” is a parenthetical statement, with “his word” being the object of the verb. The sentence begun with the prepositional phrase “in God” is then completed in the next line, with the prepositional phrase being repeated after the parenthesis. §† tn: Heb “flesh,” which refers by metonymy to human beings (see v. 11, where “man” is used in this same question), envisioned here as mortal and powerless before God. §‡ tn: The rhetorical question assumes the answer, “Nothing!” The imperfect is used in a modal sense here, indicating capability or potential. §‡† tn: Heb “my affairs they disturb.” For other instances of נִדְבָּרִים

tn: Heb “this I know, that God is for me.” 30 tn: Heb “in God I praise a word.” The syntax of the Hebrew text is difficult. The statement is similar to that of v. 4, except that the third person pronominal suffix is omitted here, where the text has simply “a word” instead of “his word.” (1) One could translate, “in God I will boast [with] a word.” In this case, the “word” refers to a song of praise. (2) If one assumes that God’s word is in view, as in v. 4, then one option is to translate, “in God I boast, [in] his word.” In this case the prepositional phrase “in God” goes with the following verb “I boast” (see Ps 44:8) and “[his] word” is appositional to “in God” and more specifically identifies the basis for the psalmist’s confidence. God’s “word” is here understood as an assuring promise of protection. (3) The present translation reflects another option: In this case “I praise [his] word” is a parenthetical statement, with “[his] word” being the object of the verb. The sentence begun with the prepositional phrase “in God” is then completed in v. 11, with the prepositional phrase being repeated after the parenthesis. 31 tn: The phrase “in the LORD

32 tn: The statement is similar to that of v. 4, except "flesh" is used there instead of "man." † tn: The rhetorical question assumes the answer, "Nothing!" The imperfect is used in a modal sense here, indicating capability or potential. †† tn: Heb "upon me, O God, [are] your vows." ‡ tn: Heb "I will repay thank-offerings to you." †† tn: The perfect verbal form is probably future perfect; the psalmist promises to make good on his vows once God has delivered him (see Pss 13:5; 52:9). (2) Another option is to understand the final two verses as being added later, after the LORD

††† tn: Heb "are not my feet [kept] from stumbling?" The rhetorical question expects the answer, "Of course they are!" The question has been translated as an affirmation for the sake of clarification of meaning. †††† tn: Heb "walk before." For a helpful discussion of the background and meaning of this Hebrew idiom, see M. Cogan and H. Tadmor, II Kings (AB), 254; cf. the same idiom in 2 Kgs 20:3; Isa 38:3. †††† tn: Heb "in the light of life." The phrase is used here and in Job 33:30. § sn: Psalm 57. The psalmist asks for God's protection and expresses his confidence that his ferocious enemies will be destroyed by their own schemes. §† tn: Heb "do not destroy." Perhaps this refers to a particular style of music, a tune title, or a musical instrument. These words also appear in the heading to Pss 58-59, 75. §††† tn: The precise meaning of the Hebrew word מְכַתֵּם

§† sn: According to the superscription, David wrote this psalm on the occasion when he fled from Saul and hid in "the cave." This probably refers to either the incident recorded in 1 Sam 22:1 or to the one recorded in 1 Sam 24:3. §††† tn: Heb "my life has taken shelter." The Hebrew perfect verbal form probably refers here to a completed action with continuing results. §† sn: In the shadow of your wings. The metaphor likens God to a protective mother bird (see also Pss 17:8; 36:7). §†† tn: Heb "to God Most High." The divine title "Most High" ( מְלִיּוֹן )

§§†† tn: Or "avenges in favor of." §§†† tn: Heb "may he send from heaven and deliver me." The prefixed verbal forms are understood as jussives expressing the psalmist's prayer. The second verb, which has a vav ( ו )

I lie down‡‡‡ among those who want to devour me;‡‡‡ men whose teeth are spears and arrows, whose tongues are a sharp sword. 19
 5 Rise up‡‡ above the sky, O God !

§§§† tn: Heb "he hurls insults, one who crushes me." The translation assumes that this line identifies those from whom the psalmist seeks deliverance. (The singular is representative; the psalmist is surrounded by enemies, see v. 4.) Another option is to understand God as the subject of the verb חָרַף

20 tn: Heb "my life, in the midst of lions, I lie down, devouring ones, sons of mankind, their teeth are spears and arrows and their tongue a sharp sword." The syntax of the verse is difficult. Another option is to take "my life" with the preceding verse. For this to make sense, one must add a verb, perhaps "and may he deliver" (cf. the LXX), before the phrase. One might then translate, "May God send his loyal love and faithfulness and deliver my life." If one does take "my life" with v. 4, then the parallelism of v. 5 is altered and one might translate: "in the midst of lions I lie down, [among] men who want to devour me, whose teeth...." 21 tn: Or "be exalted." 22 tn: Heb "over all the earth [be] your splendor." Though no verb appears, the tone of the statement is a prayer or wish. (Note the imperative form in the preceding line.) 23 tn: Heb "for my feet." 24 tn: Heb "my life bends low." The Hebrew term נָפַשׁ

נָפַשׁ 25 tn: Heb "before me." 26 tn: The perfect form is used rhetorically here to express the psalmist's certitude. The demise of the enemies is so certain that he can speak of it as already accomplished. 27 tn: Or perhaps "confident"; Heb "my heart is steadfast." The "heart" is viewed here as the seat of the psalmist's volition and/or emotions. 28 tn: Heb "glory," but that makes little sense in the context. Some view כְּבוֹד

Another option is to take the form as an imperfect (indicative) and translate, "they will scatter" (see v. 9). מְחַסְּרִים

20 tn: Heb "like water, they go about for themselves." The translation assumes that the phrase "they go about for themselves" is an implied relative clause modifying "water." The jussive mood is implied from the preceding context, and "like" is understood by ellipsis (see the previous line). 25 tn: This rare word also appears in Job 3:16 and Eccles 6:3. 26 tn: Heb "before your pots perceive thorns." 27 tn: Apparently God (v. 6) is the subject of the verb here. 28 tn: Heb "like living, like burning anger he will sweep it away." Perhaps the enemies are depicted as dangerous, like a leaning wall or broken fence that is in danger of falling on someone (see C. A. Briggs and E. G. The phrases "sons of mankind" and "sons of man" also appear together in Ps 49:2. A psalm of David, written when he was in the Judean wilderness.‡‡

63 O God, you are my God! I long for you.‡‡‡

My soul thirsts§ for you,
my flesh yearns for you,
in a dry and parched§† land where there is no water.

2 Yes,§†† in the sanctuary I have seen you,§† and witnessed§†† your power and splendor.

3 Because§† experiencing§† your loyal love is better than life itself, my lips will praise you.

4 For this reason§§† I will praise you while I live;
in your name I will lift up my hands.§§†

† tn: Heb "[as for] wealth, when it bears fruit, do not set [your] heart [on it]." †† tn: Heb "one God spoke, two which I heard." This is a numerical saying utilizing the "x" followed by "x + 1" pattern to facilitate poetic parallelism. (See W. M. W. Roth, Numerical Sayings in the Old Testament [VTSup], 55-56.) As is typical in such sayings, a list corresponding to the second number (in this case "two") follows. Another option is to translate, "God has spoken once, twice [he has spoken] that which I have heard." The terms נָחַדּוּ

Another option is to understand vv. 11b and 12a as the first principle and v. 12b as the second. In this case one might translate, "God has declared one principle, two principles I have heard, namely, that God is strong, and you, O Lord, demonstrate loyal love, and that you repay men for what they do." sn: You repay men for what they do. The psalmist views God's justice as a demonstration of both his power (see v. 11c) and his loyal love (see v. 12a). When God judges evildoers, he demonstrates loyal love to his people. ‡‡† sn: Psalm 63. The psalmist expresses his intense desire to be in God's presence and confidently affirms that God will judge his enemies. ‡‡‡ sn: According to the psalm superscription David wrote the psalm while in the "wilderness of Judah." Perhaps this refers to the period described in 1 Sam 23-24 or to the incident mentioned in 2 Sam 15:23. § tn: Or "I will seek you." §† tn: Or "I thirst." §†† tn: Heb "faint" or "weary." This may picture the land as "faint" or "weary," or it may allude to the effect this dry desert has on those who are forced to live in it. §‡ tn: The Hebrew particle יָ

Another option is to take the perfect as indicating the psalmist's certitude that he will again stand in God's presence in the sanctuary. In this case one can translate, "I will see you." §† tn: Heb "seeing." The preposition with the infinitive construct here indicates an accompanying circumstance. §‡ tn: This line is understood as giving the basis for the praise promised in the following line. Another option is to take the Hebrew particle יָ

25 tn: Heb "clings after." The expression means "to pursue with determination" (see Judg 20:45; 1 Sam 14:22; 1 Chr 10:2; Jer 42:16). 26 tn: Heb "but they for destruction seek my life." The pronoun "they" must refer here to the psalmist's enemies, referred to at this point for the first time in the psalm. 27 sn: The depths of the earth refers here to the underworld dwelling place of the dead (see Ezek 26:20; 31:14, 16, 18; 32:18, 24). See L. I. J. Stadelmann, The Hebrew Conception of the World, 167. 28 tn: Heb "they will deliver him over to the sword." The third masculine plural subject must be indefinite (see GKC 460 §144. f) and the singular pronominal suffix either representative or distributive (emphasizing that each one will be so treated). Active verbs with indefinite subjects may be translated as passives with the object (in the Hebrew text) as subject (in the translation). 29 tn: Heb "they will be [the] portion of jackals"; traditionally, "of foxes." 30 sn: The psalmist probably refers to himself in the third person here. 31 tn: Heb "who swears [an oath] by him." 32 tn: The Niphal of this verb occurs only here and in Gen 8:2, where it is used of God "stopping" or "damming up" the great deep as he brought the flood to an end. 33 sn: Psalm 64. The psalmist asks God to protect him from his dangerous enemies and then confidently affirms that God will destroy his enemies and demonstrate his justice in the sight of all observers. 34 tn: Heb "my voice." 35 tn: The imperfect verbal form is used here to express the psalmist's request. 36 tn: Heb "from the terror of [the] enemy." "Terror" is used here metonymically for the enemy's attacks that produce fear because they threaten the psalmist's life. 37 tn: Heb "workers of wickedness." 38 tn: Heb "who." A new sentence was started here in the translation for stylistic reasons. 39 tn: Heb "a bitter word."

They shoot at him suddenly and are unafraid of retaliation. †

5 They encourage one another to carry out their evil deed. ††

They plan how to hide‡ snares, and boast, †† "Who will see them?" ††

7 But God will shoot§†† at them; suddenly they will be§† wounded by an arrow. §††

8 Their slander will bring about their demise. §† All who see them will shudder, §†

9 and all people will fear. §††

† tn: The psalmist uses the singular because he is referring to himself here as representative of a larger group. †† tn: Heb "and are unafraid." The words "of retaliation" are supplied in the translation for clarification. ‡ tn: Heb "they give strength to themselves, an evil matter [or "word"]." ‡‡ tn: Heb "they report about hiding." ‡‡‡ tn: Heb "they say." ‡‡‡† tn: If this is a direct quotation (cf. NASB, NIV), the pronoun "them" refers to the snares mentioned in the previous line. If it is an indirect quotation, then the pronoun may refer to the enemies themselves (cf. NEB, which is ambiguous). Some translations retain the direct quotation but alter the pronoun to "us," referring clearly to the enemies (cf. NRSV). ‡‡‡† tn: Heb "search out, examine," which here means (by metonymy) "devise."

The point seems to be that a man's inner thoughts are incapable of being discovered. No one is a mind reader! Consequently the psalmist is vulnerable to his enemies' well-disguised plots. §†† tn: The prefixed verb with vav ( ו )

§†† tn: The perfect verbal form here expresses the psalmist's certitude about the coming demise of the wicked. §† tn: The translation follows the traditional accentuation of the MT. Another option is to translate, "But God will shoot them down with an arrow, suddenly they will be wounded" (cf. NIV, NRSV). §† tc: The MT reads literally, "and they caused him to stumble, upon them, their tongue." Perhaps the third plural subject of the verb is indefinite with the third singular pronominal suffix on the verb being distributive (see Ps 63:10). In this case one may translate, "each one will be made to stumble." The preposition לַ

The Hebrew idiom "go out before" is used here in a militaristic sense of leading troops into battle (see Judg 4:14; 9:39; 2 Sam 5:24). †††† sn: When you march through the desert. Some interpreters think that v. 7 alludes to Israel's exodus from Egypt and its subsequent travels in the desert. Another option is that v. 7, like v. 8, echoes Judg 5:4, which describes how the God of Sinai marched across the desert regions to do battle with Sisera and his Canaanite army. †††† tn: Heb "this one of Sinai." The phrase is a divine title, perhaps indicating that the LORD § sn: The language of vv. 7-8 is reminiscent of Judg 5:4-5, which tells how the God of Sinai came in the storm and annihilated the Canaanite forces led by Sisera. The presence of allusion does not mean, however, that this is a purely historical reference. The psalmist is describing God's typical appearance as a warrior in terms of his prior self-revelation as ancient events are reactualized in the psalmist's experience. (For a similar literary technique, see Hab 3.) §† tn: The verb נוף

tains a prayer for the Davidic king (note the imperatival form in v. 1 and the jussive forms in vv. 16-17). It is not entirely clear if vv. 2-15 express a prayer or anticipate a future reign. The translation assumes a blend of petition and vision: (I) opening prayer (v. 1), followed by anticipated results if prayer is answered (vv. 2-7); (II) prayer (v. 8), followed by anticipated results if prayer is answered (vv. 9-14); (III) closing prayer (vv. 15-17). Whether a prayer, vision, or combination of the two, the psalm depicts the king's universal rule of peace and prosperity. As such it is indirectly messianic, for the ideal it expresses will only be fully realized during the Messiah's earthly reign. Verses 18-19 are a conclusion for Book 2 of the Psalter ( Pss 42-72; cf. Ps 41:13, which contains a similar conclusion for Book 1), while v. 20 appears to be a remnant of an earlier collection of psalms or an earlier edition of the Psalter. §†† tn: The preposition could be understood as indicating authorship ("Of Solomon"), but since the psalm is a prayer for a king, it may be that the superscription reflects a tradition that understood this as a prayer for Solomon. §††† tn: Heb "O God, your judgments to [the] king give." §§§ sn: Grant the king...Grant the king's son. It is not entirely clear whether v. 1 envisions one individual or two. The phrase "the king's son" in the second line may simply refer to "the king" of the first line, drawing attention to the fact that he has inherited his dynastic rule. Another option is that v. 1 envisions a co-regency between father and son (a common phenomenon in ancient Israel) or simply expresses a hope for a dynasty that champions justice. 18 tn: Heb "and your justice to [the] son of [the] king." 19 tn: The prefixed verbal form appears to be an imperfect, not a jussive. 20 sn: These people are called God's oppressed ones because he is their defender (see Pss 9:12, 18; 10:12; 12:5). 21 tn: Heb "[the] mountains will bear peace to the people, and [the] hills with justice." The personified mountains and hills probably represent messengers who will sweep over the land announcing the king's just decrees and policies. See Isa 52:7 and C. A. Briggs and E. G. Briggs, Psalms (ICC), 2:133. 22 tn: Heb "judge [for]." 23 tn: The prefixed verbal form appears to be an imperfect, not a jussive. 24 tn: Heb "sons." 25 tn: In this context "fear" probably means "to demonstrate respect for the LORD

If one follows the MT, then it would appear that the "fruit" of the third line is a metaphorical reference to the king's people, who flow out from the cities to populate the land (see line 4). Elsewhere in the OT people are sometimes compared to grass that sprouts up from the land (see v. 7, as well as Isa 27:6; Pss 92:7; 103:15). The translation understands a different poetic structural arrangement and, assuming the emendations mentioned in earlier notes, interprets each line of the verse to be a prayer for agricultural

§† tn: Heb "the prayers of David, son of Jesse, are concluded." As noted earlier, v. 20 appears to be a remnant of an earlier collection of psalms or an earlier edition of the Psalter. In the present arrangement of the Book of Psalms, not all psalms prior to this are attributed to David (see Pss 1-2, 10, 33, 42-50, 66-67, 71-72) and several psalms attributed to David appear after this (see Pss 86, 101, 103, 108-110, 122, 124, 131, 138-145). §†† sn: Psalm 73. In this wisdom psalm the psalmist offers a personal testimony of his struggle with the age-old problem of the prosperity of the wicked. As he observed evil men prosper, he wondered if a godly lifestyle really pays off. In the midst of his discouragement, he reflected upon spiritual truths and realities. He was reminded that the prosperity of the wicked is only temporary. God will eventually vindicate his people. §† tn: Since the psalm appears to focus on an individual's concerns, not the situation of Israel, this introduction may be a later addition designed to apply the psalm's message to the entire community. To provide a better parallel with the next line, some emend the Hebrew phrase לִישָׁבְרָאֵל אֱלֹהִים

אֵל לִישֶׁר §†† tn: Heb "to the pure of heart." §† tn: The Hebrew verb normally means "to pour out," but here it must have the nuance "to slide." sn: My feet almost slid out from under me. The language is metaphorical. As the following context makes clear, the psalmist almost "slipped" in a spiritual sense. As he began to question God's justice, the psalmist came close to abandoning his faith. §† tn: The imperfect verbal form here depicts the action as continuing in a past time frame. §§† tn: Heb "peace" ( שָׁלוֹם ) §§§† tn: In Isa 58:6, the only other occurrence of this word in the OT, the term refers to "bonds" or "ropes." In Ps 73:4 it is used metaphorically of pain and suffering that restricts one's enjoyment of life. §§§ tn: Or "bellies." 18 tc: Or "fat." The MT of v. 4 reads as follows: "for there are no pains at their death, and fat [is] their body." Since a reference to the death of the wicked seems incongruous in the immediate context (note v. 5) and premature in the argument of the psalm (see vv. 18-20, 27), some prefer to emend the text by redividing it. The metaphor suggests that their arrogance is something the wicked "wear" proudly. It draws attention to them, just as a beautiful necklace does to its owner. †† tn: Heb "a garment of violence covers them." The metaphor suggests that violence is habitual for the wicked. They "wear" it like clothing; when one looks at them, violence is what one sees. ‡ tc: The MT reads "it goes out from fatness their eye," which might be paraphrased, "their eye protrudes [or "bulges"] because of fatness." This in turn might refer to their greed; their eyes "bug out" when they see rich food or produce (the noun חֶלֶב

The traditional accentuation of the MT places "oppression" with the preceding line. In this case, one might translate, "they mock and speak with evil [of] oppression, from an elevated place [i.e., "proudly"] they speak." By placing "oppression" with what follows, one achieves better poetic balance in the parallelism. § tn: Heb "they set in heaven their mouth, and their tongue walks through the earth." The meaning of the text is uncertain. Perhaps the idea is that they lay claim to heaven (i.e., speak as if they were ruling in heaven) and move through the earth declaring their superiority and exerting their influence. Some take the preposition - בְּ

§† tc: Heb "therefore his people return [so Qere (marginal reading); Kethib (consonantal text) has "he brings back"] to here, and waters of abundance are sucked up by them." The traditional Hebrew text (MT) defies explanation. The present translation reflects M. The psalmist uses an image from cultic ritual to picture his moral lifestyle. The reference to "hands" suggests actions. §§§ tn: Heb "If I had said, 'I will speak out like this.'" §§§ tn: Heb "look, the generation of your sons I would have betrayed." The phrase "generation of your [i.e., God's] sons" occurs only here in the OT. Some equate the phrase with "generation of the godly" ( Ps 14:5), "generation of the ones seeking him" ( Ps 24:6), and "generation of the upright" ( Ps 112:2). In Deut 14:1 the Israelites are referred to as God's "sons." Perhaps the psalmist refers here to those who are "Israelites" in the true sense because of their loyalty to God (note the juxtaposition of "Israel" with "the pure in heart" in v. 1). 18 tn: Heb "and [when] I pondered to understand this, troubling it [was] in my eyes." 19 tn: The plural of the term מִקְדָּוֶשׁ

 †† tn: Heb "our signs we do not see." Because of the reference to a prophet in the next line, it is likely that the "signs" in view here include the evidence of God's presence as typically revealed through the prophets. These could include miraculous acts performed by the prophets (see, for example, Isa 38:7-8) or object lessons which they acted out (see, for example, Isa 20:3). ‡ tn: Heb "there is not still a prophet." ‡† tn: Heb "and [there is] not with us one who knows how long." ‡‡ tn: Heb "Why do you draw back your hand, even your right hand? From the midst of your chest, destroy!" The psalmist pictures God as having placed his right hand (symbolic of activity and strength) inside his robe against his chest. He prays that God would pull his hand out from under his robe and use it to destroy the enemy. ‡‡† tn: The psalmist speaks as Israel's representative here. ‡‡‡ tn: Heb "in the midst of the earth." § tn: The derivation and meaning of the Polel verb form פּוֹרֵץ

The imagery of the mythological sea monster is utilized here. See the note on "Leviathan" in v. 14. §†† sn: You crushed the heads of Leviathan. The imagery of vv. 13-14 originates in West Semitic mythology. The description of Leviathan should be compared with the following excerpts from Ugaritic mythological texts: (1) "Was not the dragon [Ugaritic tnn, cognate with Hebrew תַּנִּין

This pictures the fragments of Leviathan's dead corpse washing up on shore and being devoured by those who find them. If the exodus is in view, then it may allude to the bodies of the dead Egyptians which washed up on the shore of the Red Sea (see Exod 14:30). §† sn: You broke open the spring and the stream. Perhaps this alludes to the way in which God provided water for the Israelites as they traveled in the wilderness following the exodus (see Ps 78:15-16, 20; 105:41). §† sn: Perpetually flowing rivers are rivers that contain water year round, unlike the seasonal streams that flow only during the rainy season. Perhaps the psalmist here alludes to the drying up of the Jordan River when the Israelites entered the land of Canaan under Joshua (see Josh 3-4). §†† tn: Heb "To you [is] day, also to you [is] night." §§† tn: Heb "[the] light." Following the reference to "day and night" and in combination with "sun," it is likely that the Hebrew term נְאוֹר and [the] sun." 18 tn: This would appear to refer to geographical boundaries, such as mountains, rivers, and seacoasts. However, since the day-night cycle has just been mentioned (v. 16) and the next line speaks of the seasons, it is possible that "boundaries" here refers to the divisions of the seasons. See C. A. Briggs and E. G. Briggs, Psalms (ICC), 2:156. 19 tn: Heb "summer and winter, you, you formed them." 20 tn: Heb "remember this." 21 tn: Or "[how] the enemy insults the LORD 22 sn: Your dove. The psalmist compares weak and vulnerable Israel to a helpless dove. 23 tn: Heb "do not forget forever." 24 tc: Heb "look at the covenant." The LXX reads "your covenant," which seems to assume a second person pronominal suffix. The suffix may have been accidentally omitted by haplography. Note that the following word ( כִּי 25 כ tn: Heb "for the dark places of the earth are full of dwelling places of violence." The "dark regions" are probably the lands where the people have been exiled (see C. A. Briggs and E. G. Briggs, Psalms [ICC], 2:157). In some contexts "dark regions" refers to Sheol ( Ps 88:6) or to hiding places likened to Sheol ( Ps 143:3; Lam 3:6). 26 sn: Let the oppressed and poor praise your name! The statement is metonymic. The point is this: May the oppressed be delivered from their enemies! Then they will have ample reason to praise God's name.

The horn of the wild ox is frequently a metaphor for military strength; the idiom "exalt/lift up the horn" signifies military victory (see 1 Sam 2:10; Pss 89:17, 24; 92:10; Lam 2:17). Here the idiom seems to refer to an arrogant attitude that assumes victory has been achieved. §§† tn: Heb "do not lift up on high your horn." §§§ tn: Heb "[do not] speak with unrestrained neck."  this way in Ps 60:3; Isa 51:17-23; and Hab 2:16. <sup>24</sup> tn: Heb "I

† tn: Heb “they slept [in] their sleep.” “Sleep” here refers to the “sleep” of death. A number of modern translations take the phrase to refer to something less than death, however: NASB “cast into a deep sleep”; NEB “fall senseless”; NIV “lie still”; NRSV “lay stunned.”
 †† tn: Heb “and all the men of strength did not find their hands.”

The translation assumes that God’s anger is in view here (see v. 7) and that “men” is an objective genitive. God’s angry judgment against men brings him praise because it reveals his power and majesty (see vv. 1-4). †† tn: Heb “the rest of anger you put on.” The meaning of the statement is not entirely clear. Perhaps the idea is that God, as he prepares for battle, girds himself with every last ounce of his anger, as if it were a weapon. ††† tn: The phrase “all those who surround him” may refer to the surrounding nations (v. 12 may favor this), but in Ps 89:7 the phrase refers to God’s heavenly assembly. ††† tn: Heb “he reduces the spirit of princes.” According to HALOT 148 s.v. The psalmist seems to be saying that God would not bring him relief, which would have allowed him to shut his eyes and get some sleep (see v. 2). †† tn: The imperfect is used in the second clause to emphasize that this was an ongoing condition in the past. ††† tn: Heb “the years of antiquity.” ††† tn: Heb “I will remember my song in the night, with my heart I will reflect. 27 He rained down meat on them like dust,

28 He caused them to fall right in the middle of their

29 They ate until they were stuffed; 22

30 They were not yet filled up, 23 their food was still in their mouths,

He killed some of the strongest of them;

he brought the young men of Israel to their knees.

32 Despite all this, they continued to sin, and did not trust him to do amazing things. 24

33 So he caused them to die unsatisfied<sup>25</sup> and filled with terror. 26

34 When he struck them down,<sup>27</sup> they sought his fa-they turned back and longed for God.

35 They remembered that God was their protector, 29 and lied to him. 32

37 They were not really committed to him,<sup>33</sup>

Verse 38 steps back briefly from the narrational summary of Israel's history and lays the theological basis for v. 39, which focuses on God's mercy toward sinful Israel.

is commonplace, special, unique." The Lord's holiness is first and foremost his transcendent sovereignty as the ruler of the world. He is "set apart" from the world over which he rules. At the same time his holiness encompasses his moral authority, which derives from his royal position. As king he has the right to dictate to his subjects how they are to live; indeed his very own character sets the stan-

The picture of the Lord seated on the cherubs suggests they might be used by him as a vehicle, a function they carry out in Ezek 1:22-28 (the "living creatures" mentioned here are identified as cherubs in Ezek 10:20). the defendants, God now speaks to those who are observing the trial, referring to the gods in the third person. † † † tn: Heb “walk.” The Hitpael stem indicates iterative action, picturing these ignorant “judges” as stumbling around in the darkness. † † † † † sn: These gods, though responsible for justice, neglect their duty. Their self-imposed ignorance (which the psalmist compares to stumbling around in the dark) results in widespread injustice, which threatens the social order of the world (the meaning of the phrase all the foundations of the earth crumble). † † † † † tn: Heb “said.” † † † † † sn: Normally in the OT the title Most High belongs to the God of Israel, but in this context, where the mythological overtones are so strong, it probably refers to the Canaanite high god El (see v. 1, as well as Isa 14:13). <sup>18</sup> † † † tn: Heb “men.” The point in the context is mortality, however, not maleness. sn: You will die like mortals. For the concept of a god losing immortality and dying, see Isa 14:12-15, which alludes to a pagan myth in which the petty god “Shining One, son of the Dawn,” is hurled into Sheol for his hubris. <sup>19</sup> † † † tn: Heb “like one of the rulers.” The comparison does not necessarily imply that they are not rulers. The expression “like one of” can sometimes mean “as one of” ( Gen 49:16; Obad 11) or “as any other of” ( Judg 16:7, 11). <sup>20</sup> † † † tn: The translation assumes that the Qal of לְאֵלֵּי

The descendants of Lot were the Moabites and Ammonites. ‡‡† to Gideon’s victory over the Midianites (see Judg 7-8) and to Barak’s victory over Jabin’s army, which was led by his general Sisera (Judg 4-5). §† sn: Endor is not mentioned in the accounts of Gideon’s or Barak’s victories, but both battles took place in the general vicinity of the town. (See Y. Aharoni and M. Avi-Yonah, The Macmillan Bible Atlas, 46, 54.) Because Sisera and Jabin are mentioned in v. 9b, many understand them to be the subject of the verbs in v. 10, though they relate v. 10 to Gideon’s victory, which is referred to in v.

9a, 11. (See, for example, Y. Aharoni, The Land of the Bible, 263.)
§†† tn: Heb “they were manure.” In addition to this passage, corpses are compared to manure in 2 Kgs 9:37; Jer 8:2; 9:21; 16:4; 25:33. §† sn: Oreb and Zeeb were the generals of the Midianite army that was defeated by Gideon. The Ephraimites captured and executed both of them and sent their heads to Gideon (Judg 7:24-25). §†† sn: Zebah and Zalmunna were the Midianite kings.
Gideon captured them and executed them (Judg 8:1-21). §† tn:
The translation assumes that “Zebah and Zalmunna” are the an-

23 tn: Heb “may they be ashamed and perish.” The four prefixed verbal forms in this verse are understood as jussives. The psalmist concludes his prayer with an imprecation, calling severe judgment down on his enemies. The strong language of the imprecation seems to run contrary to the positive outcome of divine judgment envisioned in v. 16b. Perhaps the language of v. 17 is overstated for effect. Another option is that v. 16b expresses an ideal, while the strong imprecation of vv. 17-18 anticipates reality. It would be nice if the defeated nations actually pursued a relationship with God, but if judgment does not bring them to that point, the psalmist asks that they be annihilated so that they might at least be forced to acknowledge God’s power. 24 tn: After the preceding jussives (v. 17), the nesting near its roof, he envisions them finding protection in God’s presence. 36 tn: The Hebrew noun is an abstract plural. The fied "heavens" here stand by metonymy for the angelic beings that surround God's heavenly throne. 25 tn: Heb "in the assembly of the holy ones." The phrase "holy ones" sometimes refers to God's people (Ps 34:9) or to their priestly leaders (2 Chr 35:3), but here it refers to God's heavenly assembly and the angels that surround his throne (see vv. 6-7). 26 tn: Heb "sons of gods"; or "sons of God."

 Traditionally "God of hosts." The title here pictures the LORD
 31 tn: Heb
 "the majesty of the sea." 32 tn: Heb "rise up." 33 tn: Heb "Rahab." The name "Rahab" means "proud one." Since it is sometimes used of Egypt (see Ps 87:4; Isa 30:7), the passage may allude to the exodus. However, the name is also used of the sea (or the mythological sea creature) which symbolizes the disruptive forces of the world that seek to replace order with chaos (see Job 9:13; 26:12). Isa 51:9 appears to combine the mythological and historical referents.
 The association of Rahab with the sea in Ps 89 (see v. 9) suggests that the name carries symbolic force in this context. In this case the passage may allude to creation (see vv. 11-12), when God overcame the great deep and brought order out of chaos.

The idiom "the right hand is lifted up" refers to victorious military deeds (see Pss 89:42; 118:16). †††† sn: The Lord's throne symbolizes his kingship. †††† tn: Heb "are in front of your face." The idiom can mean "confront" (Ps 17:13) or "meet, enter the presence of" (Ps 95:2). § tn: Heb "who know the shout." "Shout" here refers to the shouts of the LORD §† tn: Heb "in the light of your face they walk." The idiom "light of your face" probably refers to a smile (see Eccl 8:1), which in turn suggests favor and blessing (see Num 6:25; Pss 4:6; 31:16; 44:3; 67:1; 80:3, 7, 19; Dan 9:17). §†† tn: Heb "are lifted up." §††† tn: Heb "for the splendor of their strength [is] you." §†††† tn: Heb "you lift up our horn," or if one follows the marginal reading (Qere), "our horn is lifted up." The horn of an ox underlies the metaphor (see Deut 33:17; 1 Kgs 22:11; Ps 92:10). The horn of the wild ox is frequently a metaphor for military strength; the idiom "exalt/lift up the horn" signifies military victory (see 1 Sam 2:10; Pss 75:10; 89:24; 92:10; Lam 2:17). §† tn: The phrase "our shield" refers metaphorically to the Davidic king, who, as God's vice-regent, was the human protector of the people. Note the parallelism with "our king" here and with "your anointed one" in Ps 84:9. §†† sn: The basic sense of the word "holy" is "set apart from that which is commonplace, special, unique." The Lord's holiness is first and foremost his transcendent sovereignty as the ruler of the world. He is "set apart" from the world over which he rules. At the same time his holiness encompasses his moral authority, which derives from his royal position. As king he has the right to dictate to his subjects how they are to live; indeed his very own character sets the standard for proper behavior. This expression is a common title for the LORD

23 tn: Heb "and a son of violence will not oppress him." The imperfect is understood in a modal sense, indicating capability or potential. The reference to a "son of violence" echoes the language of God's promise to David in 2 Sam 7:10 (see also 1 Chr 17:9). 24 tn: Heb "and my faithfulness and my loyal love [will be] with him." 25 tn: Heb "and by my name his horn will be lifted up." The horn of an ox underlies the metaphor (see Deut 33:17; 1 Kgs 22:11; Ps 92:10). The horn of the wild ox is frequently a metaphor for military strength; the idiom "exalt/lift up the horn" signifies military victory (see 1 Sam 2:10; Pss 75:10; 92:10; Lam 2:17). 26 tn: Some identify "the sea" as the Mediterranean and "the rivers" as the Euphrates and its tributaries. However, it is more likely that "the sea" and "the rivers" are symbols for hostile powers that oppose God and the king (see v. 9, as well as Ps 93:3-4). 27 sn: You are my father. The Davidic king was viewed as God's "son" (see 2 Sam 7:14; Ps 2:7). The idiom reflects ancient Near Eastern adoption language associated with covenants of grant, by which a lord would reward a faithful subject by elevating him to special status, referred to as "sonship." Like a son, the faithful subject received an "inheritance," viewed as an unconditional, eternal gift. Such gifts usually took the form of land and/or an enduring dynasty. See M. Weinfeld, "The Covenant of Grant in the Old Testament and in the Ancient Near East," JAOS 90 (1970): 184-203, for general discussion and some striking extra-biblical parallels. 28 tn: Heb "the rocky summit of my deliverance." 29 sn: The firstborn son typically had special status and received special privileges. 30 tn: Heb "forever I will keep for him my loyal love and will make my covenant secure for him." 31 tn: Heb "and I will set in place forever his offspring."

They are pictured as winged creatures ( Exod 25:20; 37:9; 1 Kgs 6:24-27; Ezek 10:8, 19) and serve as the very throne of God when the ark of the covenant is in view ( Ps 99:1; see Num 7:89; 1 Sam 4:4; 2 Sam 6:2; 2 Kgs 19:15). The picture of the Lord seated on the cherubs suggests they might be used by him as a vehicle, a function they carry out in Ezek 1:22-28 (the "living creatures" mentioned here are identified as cherubs in Ezek 10:20). The idiom "to hide the face" can mean "to ignore" (see Pss 10:11; 13:1; 51:9) or carry the stronger idea of "to reject" (see Pss 29:7; 30:7; 88:14). 24 tn: Heb "turn toward me your ear." 25 tn: Heb "for my days come to an end in smoke." 26 tn: The Hebrew noun מִן־עוֹשׁ

In the following verse he describes metaphorically the physical effects of fasting. 30 tn: Heb "from the sound of my groaning my bone[s] stick to my flesh." The preposition at the beginning of the verse is causal; the phrase "sound of my groaning" is metonymic for the anxiety that causes the groaning. The point seems to be this: Anxiety (which causes the psalmist to groan) keeps him from eating (v. 4). This physical deprivation in turn makes him emaciated - he is turned to "skin and bones," so to speak. 31 tn: The Hebrew term מַחֲזֵק

104 Praise the LORD, O my soul!

O LORD my God, you are magnificent. 30

You are robed in splendor and majesty.

2 He covers himself with light as if it were a garment.

He stretches out the skies like a tent curtain,

3 and lays the beams of the upper rooms of his palace on the rain clouds. 31

He makes the clouds his chariot, and travels along on the wings of the wind. 32

4 He makes the winds his messengers, and the flaming fire his attendant. 33

5 He established the earth on its foundations;
 it will never be upended.

6 The watery deep covered it<sup>34</sup> like a garment;
 the waters reached<sup>35</sup> above the mountains. 36

7 Your shout made the waters retreat;
 at the sound of your thunderous voice they hurried off –

8 as the mountains rose up, and the valleys went down – to the place you appointed for them. 37

9 You set up a boundary for them that they could not cross,

so that they would not cover the earth again. 38

 psalmist praises God as the ruler of the world who sustains all life.
 31 tn: Heb "very great." 32 tn: Heb "one who lays the beams on sponds to the "waters above" mentioned in Gen 1:7. For a discussion of the picture envisioned by the psalmist, see L. I. J. Stadelmann, The Hebrew Conception of the World, 44-45. 33 sn: Verse 3 may depict the Lord riding a cherub, which is in turn propelled by the wind current. Another option is that the wind is personified as a cherub.

 See Ps 18:10 and the discussion of ancient Near Eastern parallels to the imagery in M. Weinfeld, "Rider of the Clouds" and 'Gatherer of the Clouds,'" JANESCU 5 (1973): 422-24. 34 tc: Heb "and his atten-

 "fire" and plural "attendants" has prompted various emendations.
 Some read "fire and flame." The present translation assumes an emendation to "his attendant" ( וְ )

 The masculine suffix is problematic if the grammatically feminine noun "earth" is the antecedent. For this reason some emend the multiheaded sea monster that symbolizes forces hostile to God (see Ps 74:14; Isa 27:1), but here it appears to be an actual marine creature created by God, probably some type of whale. 26 tn: Heb “All of them.” The pronoun “them” refers not just to the sea creatures mentioned in vv. 25-26, but to all living things (see v. 24). This has been specified in the translation as “all of your creatures” for clarity. 27 tn: Heb “to give their food in its time.” 28 tn: Heb

Without such clarification, one might think that v. 39 refers to those just mentioned in v. 38 as objects of divine blessing, which would contradict the point just emphasized by the psalmist. The structure of vv. 33-42 is paneled (A-B-A-B). In vv. 33-34 the psalmist describes God's judgment upon his enemies (perhaps those who had enslaved his people). In vv. 35-38 he contrasts this judgment with the divine blessing poured out on God's people. (See the note on the word "people" in v. 35.) In vv. 39-40 he contrasts this blessing with the judgment experienced by enemies, before returning in vv. 41-42 to the blessing experienced by God's people. 18 tn: Heb "from the oppression of calamity." 19 tn: The active participle is understood as past durative here, drawing attention to typical action in a past time frame. However, it could be taken as generalizing (in which case one should translate using the English present tense), in which case the psalmist moves from narrative to present reality. Perhaps the participial form appears because the statement is lifted from Job 12:21. 20 tn: Heb "set on high." 21 tn: Heb "all evil," which stands metonymically for those who do evil. 22 sn: Psalm 108. Some attribute this curse-list to the psalmist's enemies rather than the psalmist. In this case one should paraphrase v. 6: "They say about me, 'Appoint an evil man, etc.'" Those supporting this line of interpretation point out that vv. 2-5 and 20 refer to the enemies' attack on the psalmist being a verbal one. Furthermore in vv. 1-5, 20 the psalmist speaks of his enemies in the plural, while vv. 6-19 refer to an individual. This use of the singular in vv. 6-19 could be readily explained if this is the psalmist's enemies' curse on him. However, it is much more natural to understand vv. 6-19 as the psalmist's prayer against his enemies. There is no introductory quotation formula in v. 6 to indicate that the psalmist is quoting anyone, and the statement "may the LORD Curses were sometimes justified (such as the one spoken by the psalmist here in vv. 6-19), but when they were not, the one pronouncing the curse was in danger of bringing the anticipated judgment down upon himself. §§‡ tn: Heb "and he loved a curse and it came [upon] him." A reference to the evil man experiencing a curse seems premature here, for the psalmist is asking God to bring judgment on his enemies. For this reason some (cf. 19 tn: Heb "and it came like water into his inner being, and like oil into his bones." This may refer to this individual's appetite for cursing. For him cursing was as refreshing as drinking water or massaging oneself with oil. Another option is that the destructive effects of a curse are in view. In this case a destructive curse invades his very being, like water or oil. Some who interpret the verse this way prefer to repoint the vav ( ו ) psalmist announces God's oracle to the Davidic king. The first part of the oracle appears in v. 1, the second in v. 4. In vv. 2-3 the psalmist addresses the king, while in vv. 5-7 he appears to address God.

the psalm's original context the speaker is an unidentified prophetic voice in the royal court. In the course of time the psalm is applied to each successive king in the dynasty and ultimately to the ideal Da-vidic king. NT references to the psalm understand David to be speaking about his "lord," the Messiah. (See Matt 22:43-45; Mark 12:36-37; Luke 20:42-44; Acts 2:34-35). § tn: To sit at the "right sitting at the right hand of the storm god Baal. See G. R. Driver, Canaanite Myths and Legends, 61-62. sn: The Lord's invitation to the Davidic king to sit down at his right hand reflects the king's position as the Lord's vice-regent. §† sn: When the Lord made his covenant non-Levitical priestly role. The king superintended Judah's cultic ritu-ship. David himself instructed the Levites to bring the ark of the covenant to Jerusalem ( 1 Chr 15:11-15), joined the procession, offered sacrifices, wore a priestly ephod, and blessed the people ( 2 Sam 6:12-19). At the dedication of the temple Solomon led the ceremony, offering sacrifices and praying on behalf of the people ( 1 Kgs

Melchizedek, who was both "king of Salem" (i.e., Jerusalem) and a

Like Melchizedek, the Davidic king was a royal priest, distinct from the Aaronic line (see Heb 7). The analogy focuses on the king's priestly role; the language need not imply that Melchizedek himself was "an eternal priest." 24 tn: As pointed in the Hebrew text, this Heb "good sense [is] to all who do them." The third masculine plural pronominal suffix must refer back to the "precepts" mentioned in v. 7. In the translation the referent has been specified for clarity. The phrase שְׂכָל טוֹב

20 tn: Heb "his praise stands forever." 21 sn: Psalm 112.
This wisdom psalm lists some of the benefits of living a godly life.
The psalm is an acrostic. After the introductory call to praise, every poetic line (twenty-two in all) begins with a successive letter of the Hebrew alphabet. 22 tn: Heb "[Oh] the happiness [of] the man."
Hebrew wisdom literature often assumes and reflects the male-oriented perspective of ancient Israelite society. The individual is representative of a larger group, called the "godly" in vv. 3-4. The principle of the psalm is certainly applicable to all people, regardless of their gender. To facilitate modern application, we translate the gender specific "man" with the more neutral "one." The generic masculine pronoun is used in the following verses. 23 tn: Heb "fears." 24 tn: Heb "in his commands he delights very much." The words "in keeping" are supplied in the translation for clarification. Taking delight in the law is metonymic here for obeying God's moral will.
See Ps 1:2. 25 tn: Or "offspring"; Heb "seed." 26 tn: Heb "His seed will be mighty on the earth, the generation of the godly." The Hebrew term דֹר

"stands forever." 28 tn: In this context "light" symbolizes divine blessing in its various forms (see v. 2), including material prosperity and stability. 29 tn: Heb "merciful and compassionate and just."
The Hebrew text has three singular adjectives, which are probably substantival and in apposition to the "godly" (which is plural, however). By switching to the singular, the psalmist focuses on each individual member of the group known as the "godly." Note how vv. 5-9, like vv. 1-2a, use the singular to describe the representative godly individual who typifies the whole group. 30 tn: Heb "man."
31 tn: Heb "he sustains his matters with justice." 32 tn: Heb
"for an eternal memorial a just [one] will be." 33 tn: Heb "his 108:1). 34 tn: The passive participle נִבְטַח נִבְטַח

35 tn: Heb "his heart," viewed here as the seat of the voli-tion. 36 tn: Heb "he scatters, he gives." 37 tn: Heb "stands † tn: Heb “his horn will be lifted up in honor.” The horn of an ox underlies the metaphor (see Deut 33:17; 1 Kgs 22:11; Ps 92:10). The horn of the wild ox is frequently a metaphor for military strength; the idiom “exalt/lift up the horn” signifies military victory (see 1 Sam 2:10; Pss 89:17, 24; 92:10; Lam 2:17). †† tn: The Hebrew text uses the singular; the representative wicked individual is in view as typifying the group (note the use of the plural form in v. 10). ‡ tn: Heb “his teeth he will gnash.” In Pss 35:16 and 37:12 this action is associated with a vicious attack. ‡† tn: This could mean that the desires of the wicked will go unfulfilled. In this case the point is that the wicked will lose what they desired so badly and acquired by evil means (see Ps 10:3). ‡‡ sn: Psalm 113. It is possible that the point of the metaphor is vulnerability: The psalmist, who is threatened by his enemies, feels as vulnerable as a straying, lost sheep. This would not suggest, however, that he has wandered from God's path (see the second half of the verse, as well as v. 110). 21 sn: Psalm 120. The genre and structure of this psalm are uncertain. It begins like a thanksgiving psalm, with a brief notice that God has heard the psalmist's prayer for help and has intervened. But v. 2 is a petition for help, followed by a taunt directed toward enemies (vv. 3-4) and a lament (vv. 5-7). Perhaps vv. 2-7 recall the psalmist's prayer when he cried out to the Lord. 22 sn: The precise significance of this title, which appears in Pss 120-134, is unclear. Perhaps worshipers recited these psalms when they ascended the road to Jerusalem to celebrate annual religious festivals. For a discussion of their background see L. C. Gen 10:23, which reads "Mash," not Meshech.) It is, of course, impossible that the psalmist could have been living in both the far north and the east at the same time. For this reason one must assume that he is recalling his experience as a wanderer among the nations or that he is using the geographical terms metaphorically and sarcastically to suggest that the enemies who surround him are like the barbarians who live in these distant regions. For a discussion of the problem, see L. C. Allen, Psalms 101-150 (WBC), 146.

The psalm affirms that the Lord protects his people Israel. Unless the psalmist addresses an observer (note the second person singular forms in vv. 3-8), it appears there are two or three speakers represented in the psalm, depending on how one takes v. 3. The translation assumes that speaker one talks in vv. 1-2, that speaker two responds to him with a prayer in v. 3 (this assumes the verbs are true jussives of prayer), and that speaker three responds with words of assurance in vv. 4-8. If the verbs in v. 3 are taken as a rhetorical use of the jussive, then there are two speakers. Verses 3-8 are speaker two's response to the words of speaker one. able experiences in their sleep (see Isa 29:7-8). Since dreams are more commonly associated in the OT with prophetic visions, the community may be comparing their experience of God's renewed favor to a prophet's receiving divine visions. Just as a prophetic dream sweeps the individual into a different dimension and sometimes brings one face-to-face with God himself (see Gen 28:11-15; 1 Kgs 3:5-15), so the community was aware of God's presence in a special way in the day of Zion's restoration. Though the MT as it stands makes good sense, some choose to understand a homonymic root here meaning “to be healthy; to be strong” (see BDB 321 s.v. I םלך

Aharoni writes of the streams in the Negev: “These usually dry wadis collect water on rainy days from vast areas. The situation is also aggravated by floods from the desert mountains and southern Judah. For a day or two or, more frequently, for only a few hours they turn into dangerous torrents” (Y. Aharoni, The Land of the Bible, 26). God's people were experiencing a “dry season” after a time of past blessing; they pray here for a “flash flood” of his renewed blessing. This does not imply that they are requesting only a brief display of God's blessing. Rather the point of comparison is the suddenness with which the wadis swell during a rain, as well as the depth and power of these raging waters. The community desires a sudden display of divine favor in which God overwhelms them with blessings. †† sn: O. Borowski says regarding this passage: “The dependence on rain for watering plants, the uncertainty of the quantity and timing of the rains, and the possibility of crop failure due to pests and diseases appear to have kept the farmer in a gloomy mood during sowing” (Agriculture in Iron Age Israel, 54). Perhaps the people were experiencing a literal drought, the effects of which cause them to lament their plight as they plant their seed in hopes that the rain would come. However, most take the language as metaphorical. Like a farmer sowing his seed, the covenant community was enduring hardship as they waited for a new outpouring of divine blessing. Yet they are confident that a time of restoration will come and relieve their anxiety, just as the harvest brings relief and joy to the farmer. †† tn: The noun occurs only here and in Job 28:18 in the OT. Psalms 127. In this wisdom psalm the psalmist teaches that one does not find security by one's own efforts, for God alone gives stability and security.

 If the LORD does not guard a city, †

 them!

§ sn: The precise significance of this title, which appears in Pss 120-134, is unclear. Perhaps worshipers recited these psalms when they ascended the road to Jerusalem to celebrate annual religious festivals. For a discussion of their background see L. C. Allen, Psalms 101-150 (WBC), 219-21. †† sn: The expression build a house may have a double meaning here. It may refer on the surface level to a literal physical structure in which a family lives, but at a deeper, metaphorical level it refers to building, perpetuating, and maintaining a family line. See Deut 25:9; Ruth 4:11; 1 Sam 2:35; 2 Sam 7:27; 1 Kgs 11:38; 1 Chr 17:10, 25. Having a family line provided security in ancient Israel. ††† sn: The city symbolizes community security, which is the necessary framework for family security. †† tn: Heb “[it is] vain for you, you who are early to rise, who delay sitting, who eat the food of hard work.” The three substantival participles are parallel and stand in apposition to the pronominal suffix on the preposition. Daughters are certainly wonderful additions to a family, but in ancient Israelite culture sons were the “arrows” that gave a man security in his old age, for they could defend the family interests at the city gate, where the legal and economic issues of the community were settled. ††† tn: Heb “like arrows in the hand of a warrior, so [are] sons of youth.” Arrows are used in combat to defend oneself against enemies; sons are viewed here as providing social security and protection (see v. 5). The phrase “sons of youth” is elliptical, meaning “sons [born during the father's] youth.” Such sons will have grown up to be mature adults and will have children of their own by the time the father reaches old age and becomes vulnerable to enemies. Contrast the phrase “son of old age” in Gen 37:3 (see also 44:20), which refers to Jacob's age when Joseph was born. ††† tn: Being “put to shame” is here metonymic for being defeated, probably in a legal context, as the reference to the city gate suggests. One could be humiliated (

Perhaps the "ropes" are those used to harness the ox for plowing (see Job 39:10). Verse 3 pictures the wicked plowing God's people as if they were a field. But when God "cut the ropes" of their ox, as it were, they could no longer plow. The point of the metaphor seems to be that God took away the enemies' ability to oppress his people. See L. C. 21 sn: Some understand Ephrathah as a reference to Kiriath-jearim because of the apparent allusion to this site in the next line (see the note on "Jaar"). The ark was kept in Kiriath-jearim after the Philistines released it (see 1 Sam 6:21-7:2). However, the switch in verbs from "heard about" to "found" suggests that Ephrathah not be equated with Jair. The group who is speaking heard about the ark while they were in Ephrath. They then went to retrieve it from Kiriath-jearim ("Jaar"). It is more likely that Ephrathah refers to a site near Bethel ( Gen 35:16, 19; 48:7) or to Bethlehem ( Ruth 4:11; Mic 5:2). 22 tn: Heb "fields of the forest." Deut 33:17; 1 Kgs 22:11; Pss 18:2; 92:10). The horn of the wild ox is frequently a metaphor for military strength; the idiom "exalt the horn" signifies military victory (see 1 Sam 2:10; Pss 89:17, 24; 92:10; Lam 2:17). In the ancient Near East powerful warrior-kings would sometimes compare themselves to a goring bull that used its horns to kill its enemies. For examples, see P. reads, "for you have made great over all your name your word." If retained, this must mean that God's mighty intervention, in fulfillment of his word of promise, surpassed anything he had done prior to this. However, the statement is odd and several emendations have been proposed. Some read, "for you have exalted over everything your name and your word," while others suggest, "for you have exalted over all the heavens your name and your word." The translation assumes an emendation of "your name" to "your heavens" (a construction that appears in Pss 8:3 and 144:5). The point is that God has been faithful to his promise and the reliability of that promise is apparent to all. For a fuller discussion of these options, see L. C. Allen, Psalms 101-150 (WBC), 244. §†† tn: Heb "in the §‡† tn: The prefixed verbal forms here and in the following verse are understood as jussives, for the psalmist appears to be calling upon the kings to praise God. Another option is to take them as imperfects and translate, "the kings of the earth will give thanks...and will sing." In this case the psalmist anticipates a universal response to his thanksgiving song. §† tn: Heb "the words of your mouth."

† sn: Psalm 140. The psalmist asks God to deliver him from his deadly enemies, calls judgment down upon them, and affirms his confidence in God's justice. †† tn: Heb "from a wicked man." The Hebrew uses the singular in a representative or collective sense (note the plural verbs in v. 2). ‡ tn: Heb "a man of violent acts." The Hebrew uses the singular in a representative or collective sense (note the plural verbs in v. 2). ‡† tn: Heb "they devise wicked [plans] in [their] mind." ‡‡ tc: Heb "they attack [for] war." Some revocalize the verb (which is a Qal imperfect from גור גָּוַר יָגִיר יָגִיר)

‡‡† tn: Heb "they sharpen their tongue like a serpent." Ps 64:3 reads, "they sharpen their tongues like sword." Perhaps Ps 140:3 uses a mixed metaphor, the point being that "they sharpen their tongues [like a sword]," as it were, so that when they speak, their words wound like a serpent's bite. Another option is that the language refers to the pointed or forked nature of a serpent's tongue, which is viewed metaphorically as "sharpened." ‡‡‡ tn: The Hebrew term is used only here in the OT. § tn: Heb "under." §† tn: Heb "hands." §†† tn: Heb "to push down my steps." §‡ tn: Heb "and ropes," but many prefer to revocalize the noun as a participle (חֲבָלִים חָבַל) §†† tn: Heb "the strength of my deliverance." §† tn: Heb "cover." §‡ tn: Heb "do not grant the desires of the wicked." §§† tn: Heb "his." The singular is used in a representative sense (see v. 1). §§‡ tn: Heb "his plot do not promote, they rise up." The translation understands the final verb as being an unmarked temporal clause. Another option is to revocalize the verb as a Hiphil and take the verb with the next verse, "those who surround me lift up [their] head," which could refer to their proud attitude as they anticipate victory (see Ps 27:6). §§§ tn: Heb "harm of their lips." The genitive here indicates the source or agent of the harm. 18 tn: The verb form in the Kethib (consonantal Hebrew text) appears to be a Hiphil imperfect from the root מוּט

derstood as rhetorical; the psalmist describes the anticipated downfall of the wicked as if it had already occurred. "Their judges" could be taken as the subject of the verb, but this makes little, if any, sense. The translation assumes the judges are the agents and that the wicked, mentioned earlier in the psalm, are the subjects of the verb. † tn: It is unclear how this statement relates to the preceding sentence. Perhaps the judges are the referent of the pronominal subject ("they") of the verb "will listen," and "my words" are the referent of the pronominal subject ("they") of the phrase "are pleasant." The psalmist may be affirming here his confidence that he will be vindicated when he presents his case before the judges, while the wicked will be punished. †† tn: Heb "like splitting and breaking open in the earth." The meaning of the statement and the point of the comparison are not entirely clear. Perhaps the psalmist is suggesting that he and other godly individuals are as good as dead; their bones are scattered about like dirt that is dug up and tossed aside. ‡ tn: Heb "my eyes [are] toward you." ‡‡ tn: Heb "do not lay bare my life." Only here is the Piel form of the verb collocated with the term שָׁפַךְ

143 O LORD , hear my prayer !
Pay attention to my plea for help!
Because of your faithfulness and justice, answer me!
2 Do not sit in judgment on<sup>25</sup> your servant,

3 Certainly<sup>27</sup> my enemies<sup>28</sup> chase me.
They smash me into the ground.<sup>29</sup>
They force me to live<sup>30</sup> in dark regions,<sup>31</sup> like those who have been dead for ages.

I meditate on all you have done;
I reflect on your accomplishments.<sup>35</sup>

The singular is used in a representative sense to describe a typical member of the larger group of enemies (note the plural "enemies" in vv. 9, 12). 30 tn: Heb "he crushes on the ground my life." 31 tn: Or "sit." 32 sn: Dark regions refers to Sheol, which the psalmist views as a dark place located deep in the ground (see Ps 88:6). 33 tn: Heb "my spirit grows faint." 34 tn: Heb "in my midst my heart is shocked." For a similar use of the Hitpolel of שָׁפַךְ 35 tn: Or "ancient times"; Heb "days from before." 36 tn: Heb "the work of your hands." 37 tn: The words "in prayer" are supplied in the translation to clarify that the psalmist is referring to a posture of prayer. 38 tn: Heb "faint" or "weary." See Ps 63:1. 39 tc: Heb "my soul like a faint land for you." A verb (perhaps "thirsts") is implied (see Ps 63:1). The translation assumes an emendation of the preposition - ך

 Here "loyal love" probably stands metonymically for an oracle of assurance promising God's intervention as an expression of his loyal love. sn: The morning is sometimes viewed as the time of divine intervention (see Pss 30:5; 59:16; 90:14). †† sn: The way probably word "presence" in Ps 139:7) or to his personal Spirit (see Ps 51:10).

 "from the hand of the sons of foreignness." 34 tn: Heb "who metonymy for an oath. When making an oath, one would raise the hand as a solemn gesture. See Exod 6:8; Num 14:30; Deut 32:40. The

The horn of the wild ox is frequently a metaphor for military strength; the idiom “exalt/lift up the horn” signifies military victory (see 1 Sam 2:10; Pss 75:10; 89:17, 24; 92:10; Lam 2:17). Another option is to take the “horn” as a symbol for the Davidic king, through whom the LORD

§‡ tn: “[there is] praise for all his loyal followers, to the sons of Israel, the people near him.” Here “praise” stands by metonymy for the victory that prompts it. §§† sn: Psalm 149. The Psalter concludes with a resounding call for praise from everything that has breath. 29 tn: Heb “the sky of his strength.”

Introduction to the Book

"The Proverbs of Solomon" is a title for the entire book. The title does not imply that Solomon authored all the proverbs in this collection; some sections are collections from different authors: the sayings of the wise ( 22:17-24:22), more sayings of the wise ( 24:23-34), the words of Agur ( Prov 30:1-33) and Lemuel ( Prov 31:1-9). The title does not imply that the book was in its final canonical form in the days of Solomon; the men of Hezekiah added a collection of Solomonian proverbs to the existing form of the book ( 25:1-29:27). The original collection of Solomonian proverbs appears to be the collection of short pithy sayings in 10:1-22:16, and the title might have originally introduced only these. There is question whether chapters 1-9 were part of the original form of the book in the days of Solomon because they do not fit under the title; they are not "proverbs" per se (sentence sayings) but introductory admonitions (longer wisdom speeches). Chapters 1-9 could have been written by Solomon and perhaps added later by someone else. Or they could have been written by someone else and added later in the days of Hezekiah. ‡† tn: The designation "son of David" is in apposition to the name Solomon, as are the following nouns, further explaining the name. ‡‡ tn: The phrase "the king of Israel" is in apposition to the name Solomon. ‡‡† tn: The infinitive construct + ל

There are two purpose statements in 1:2 ("to know wisdom" and "to discern sayings"). The first is stated in detail in 1:3-4, first from the perspective of the student then the teacher. 1:6 will state the second purpose of 1:2. The two objects of the prepositions in this verse are actually personifications, as if they could be summoned. 25 tn: Heb "give your voice"; the expression is idiomatic for raising or lifting the voice to make a sound that carries further (e.g., Jer 2:15). This deliberate expression indicates that something significant is being uttered. J. H. Greenstone says, "If it [understanding] does not come at your first call, raise your voice to a higher pitch, put forth greater efforts" ( Proverbs, 17). 26 tn: The conditional particle now reiterates the initial conditional clause of this introductory section (1-4); the apodosis will follow in v. 5. 27 tn: The verb שָׁאַן

TEV, CEV, NLT), or (2) genitives of source: they derive their livelihood from the evil they do (C. H. Toy, Proverbs [ICC], 93). 22 tn: Heb “the wine of violence” (so KJV, NAB, NIV, NRSV). This is a genitive of source, meaning that the wine they drink was plundered from their violent crime. The Hebrew is structured in an AB:BA chiasm: “For they eat the bread of wickedness, and the wine of violence they drink.” The word order in the translation is reversed for the sake of smoothness and readability. 23 tn: Heb “like light of brightness.” This construction is an attributive genitive: “bright light.” The word “light” ( אֹר )

The ideas presented here are not out of harmony with Proverbs, but the section clearly shows an expansion by the translator. For a brief discussion of whether this addition is Jewish or early Christian, see C. H. Toy, Proverbs (ICC), 99. §§‡ sn: In this chapter the sage/father exhorts discretion (1, 2) then explains how to avoid seduction (3-6); this is followed by a second exhortation to prevention (7, 8) and an explanation that obedience will avoid ruin and regret (9-14); finally, he warns against sharing love with strangers (15-17) but to find it at home (18-23). For an analysis of the chapter, see J. E. Goldingay, "Proverbs V and IX," RB 84 (1977): 80-93. §§§ tn: The text again has "my son." In this passage perhaps "son" would be the most fitting because of the warning against going to the adulterous woman. However, since the image of the adulterous woman probably represents all kinds of folly (through personification), and since even in this particular folly the temptation works both ways, the general address to either young

The text was certainly not intended to convey that only women could seduce men. 18 tn: Heb "incline your ear" (so NAB, NRSV); NLT "listen carefully." 19 tn: Heb "keep, protect, guard." 20 sn: This "discretion" is the same word in 1:4; it is wise, prudential consideration, careful planning, or the ability to devise plans with a view to the best way to carry them out. If that ability is retained then temptations to digress will not interfere. 21 sn: "Lips" is a metonymy of cause, referring to her words. Dripping honey is an implied comparison between the product and her words, which are flattering and smooth (cf. Song 4:11). See M. Dahood, "Honey That Drips. Notes on Proverbs 5:2-3," Bib 54 (1973): 65-66. 22 tn: Heb "her palate." The word תַּךְ

25 tn: The Hebrew term translated "wormwood" refers to the aromatic plant that contrasts with the sweetness of honey. Some follow the LXX and translate it as "gall" (cf. NIV). The point is that there was sweetness when the tryst had alluring glamour, but afterward it had an ugly ring (W. G. Plaut, Proverbs, 74). 26 sn: The Hebrew has "like a sword of [two] mouths," meaning a double-edged sword that devours/cuts either way. There is no movement without damage. There may be a word-play here with this description of the "sword with two mouths," and the subject of the passage being the words of her mouth which also have two sides to them. The irony is cut by the idiom. 27 tn: The term שְׂאוֹל

It refers to a lion when it devours its prey, and to a sufferer in pain or remorse (e.g., Ezek 24:23). §† tn: Heb "in the finishing of your flesh and your body." The construction uses the Qal infinitive construct of הִלַּח. §†† tn: The vav that introduces this clause functions in an explanatory sense. §† tn: The Hebrew term מוֹכִיחַ

§†† tn: Heb "I was in all evil" (cf. KJV, ASV). §§† tn: The text uses the two words "congregation and assembly" to form a hendiadys, meaning the entire assembly. §§§ sn: Paul Kruger develops this section as an allegory consisting of a series of metaphors. He suggests that what is at issue is private versus common property. The images of the cistern, well, or fountain are used of a wife (e.g., Song 4:15) because she, like water, satisfies desires. Streams of water in the street would then mean sexual contact with a lewd woman. According to 7:12 she never stays home but is in the streets and is the property of many (P. Kruger, "Promiscuity and Marriage Fidelity? A Note on Prov 5:15-18," JNSL 13 [1987]: 61-68). 18 tn: The verb means "to be scattered; to be dispersed"; here the imperfect takes a deliberative nuance in a rhetorical question. 19 tn: The ל

 and may you rejoice<sup>21</sup> in your young wife<sup>22</sup> – may her breasts satisfy you at all times, may you be captivated<sup>24</sup> by her love always.

 20 But why should you be captivated, <sup>25</sup> my son, by an
 and embrace the bosom of a different woman? <sup>26</sup> 21 For the ways of a person<sup>27</sup> are in front of the LORD
 and the LORD <sup>28</sup> weighs<sup>29</sup> all that person's<sup>30</sup> paths.
 22 The wicked<sup>31</sup> will be captured by his<sup>32</sup> own iniquities, <sup>33</sup>
 and he will be held<sup>34</sup> by the cords of his own sin. <sup>35</sup>

לְבַדָּךְ <sup>20</sup> sn: The point is that what is private is not to be shared with strangers; it belongs in the home and in the marriage. The water from that cistern is not to be channeled to strangers or to the public. <sup>21</sup> sn: The positive instruction is now given: Find pleasure in a fulfilling marriage. The "fountain" is another in the series of implied comparisons with the sexual pleasure that must be fulfilled at home. That it should be blessed (the passive participle of בֵּרַךְ

23 tn: Or "in the wife you married when you were young" (cf. NCV, CEV); Heb "in the wife of your youth" (so NIV, NLT). The genitive functions as an attributive adjective: "young wife" or "youthful wife." Another possibility is that it refers to the age in which a man married his wife: "the wife you married in your youth." <sup>24</sup> tn: The construct expression "a doe of loves" is an attributive genitive, describing the doe with the word "loves." The plural noun may be an abstract plural of intensification (but this noun only occurs in the plural). The same construction follows with a "deer of grace" – a graceful deer. sn: The imagery for intimate love in marriage is now employed to stress the beauty of sexual fulfillment as it was intended. The doe and deer, both implied comparisons, exhibit the grace and love of the wife. <sup>25</sup> sn: The verb שָׁנָה

26 tn: In the interrogative clause the imperfect has a deliberative nuance. <sup>27</sup> tn: Heb "foreigner" (so ASV, NASB), but this does not mean that the woman is non-Israelite. This term describes a woman who is outside the moral boundaries of the covenant community – she is another man's wife, but since she acts with moral abandonment she is called "foreign." <sup>28</sup> tn: Heb "man." <sup>29</sup> tn: Heb "he"; the referent (the LORD <sup>30</sup> tn: BDB 814 s.v. פָּלַט קִפְלוּ

LORD <sup>31</sup> tn: Heb "all his"; the referent (the person mentioned in the first half of the verse) has been specified in the translation for clarity. <sup>32</sup> tn: The suffix on the verb is the direct object suffix; "the wicked" is a second object by apposition: They capture him, the wicked. Since "the wicked" is not found in the LXX, it could be an old scribal error; or the Greek translator may have simply smoothed out the sentence. C. H. Toy suggests turning the sentence into a passive idea: "The wicked will be caught in his iniquities" ( Proverbs [ICC], 117). <sup>33</sup> tn: The word is the subject of the clause, but the pronominal suffix has no clear referent. The suffix is proleptic, referring to the wicked. <sup>34</sup> tn:

The heart is capable of evil schemes (Gen 6:5); the heart that does this is deceitful (Prov 12:20; 14:22). §† tc: The MT reads “make omits “run,” that is, feet hastening to do evil. It must have appeared to the LXX translator that the verb was unnecessary; only one verb occurs in the other cola. sn: The word “feet” is here a synecdoche, a NASB, NRSV). 23 tn: The comparative “like” does not appear in the Hebrew text, but is implied by the metaphor; it is supplied in the translation for the sake of clarity. 24 sn: The terms “lamp,” “light,” and “way” are all metaphors. The positive teachings and commandments will illumine or reveal to the disciple the way to life;

the disciplinary correctives will provide guidance into fullness of life.

†† tn: The word “tongue” is not in construct; the word “foreign woman” is in apposition to “smooth of tongue,” specifying whose it is. The word “smooth” then is the object of the preposition, “tongue” is the genitive of specification, and “foreign woman” in apposition. ‡† sn: The description of the woman as a “strange woman” and now a “loose [Heb “foreign”] woman” is within the context of the people of Israel. She is a “foreigner” in the sense that she is a nonconformist, wayward, and loose. It does not necessarily mean that she is not ethnically an Israelite. ‡†† tn: The negated jussive gives the young person an immediate warning. The verb תִּקַּח

This term is a synecdoche of part (eyelids) for the whole (eyes) or a metonymy of association for painted eyes and the luring glances that are the symptoms of seduction (e.g., 2 Kgs 9:30). The term “alluring” is not in the Hebrew text, but is supplied in the translation for the sake of clarification. § tn: The word תִּקַּח

When a man goes to a prostitute, he lowers himself to become nothing more than a “meal ticket” to sustain the life of that woman; however, when a man commits adultery, he places his very life in jeopardy – the rage of the husband could very well kill him. §‡

tn: The Qal imperfect (with the interrogative) here has a potential nuance – “Is it possible to do this?” The sentence is obviously a rhetorical question making an affirmation that it is not possible. §†† sn: “Fire” provides the analogy for the sage’s warning: Fire represents the sinful woman (hypocatastasis) drawn close, and the burning of the clothes the inevitable consequences of the liaison. Kidner observes that in a morally healthy society the adulterer would be a social outcast ( Proverbs [TOTC], 75). †† tn: The word "kindles" was supplied in the translation; both "rage" and "jealousy" have meanings connected to heat. ††† tn: Heb "a man's." †††† tn: The verb חָקַק

Traditionally this Hebrew idiom is translated into English as "the apple of your eye" (so KJV, NAB, NIV, NRSV); a more contemporary rendering would be "as your most prized possession." The word for "man" has the diminutive ending on it. It refers to the pupil, where the object focused on – a man – is reflected in miniature. The point is that the teaching must be the central focus of the disciple's vision and attention. §§§† tn: Heb "fingers" (so KJV and many other English versions). Binding the teachings on the fingers and writing them on the tablets here are implied comparisons for preserving the teaching in memory so that it can be recalled and used with ease. <sup>19</sup> sn: The metaphor is meant to signify that the disciple will be closely related to and familiar with wisdom and understanding, as close as to a sibling. Wisdom will be personified in the next two chapters, and so referring to it as a sister in this chapter certainly prepares for that personification. <sup>20</sup> tn: The infinitive construct with the preposition shows the purpose of associating closely with wisdom: Wisdom will obviate temptations, the greatest being the sexual urge. <sup>21</sup> tn: Heb "strange" (so KJV, ASV). <sup>22</sup> tn: Heb "strange woman." This can be interpreted as a "wayward wife" (so NIV) or an "unfaithful wife" (so NCV). As discussed earlier, the designations "strange woman" and "foreign woman" could refer to Israelites who stood outside the community in their lawlessness and loose morals – an adulteress or wayward woman. H. Ringgren and W. Zimmerli, however, suggest that she is also a promoter of a pagan cult, but that is not entirely convincing ( Spruche/Prediger [ATD], 19). <sup>23</sup> tn: The term "you" does not appear in the Hebrew text, but is supplied in the translation for the sake of smoothness. <sup>24</sup> tn: Heb "she makes smooth her words." Apparently the sacrificial worship meant as little to this woman spiritually as does Christmas to modern hypocrites who follow in her pattern. By expressing that she has peace offerings, she could be saying nothing more than that she has fresh meat for a meal at home, or that she was ceremonially clean, perhaps after her period. At any rate, it is all probably a ruse for winning a customer. ‡††† tn: Heb "to look diligently for your face." ‡†††† tn: Heb "with spreads." The term "lips" is a metonymy of cause representing what she says. 21 tn: The verb means "to impel; to thrust; to banish," but in this stem in this context "to compel; to force" into some action. The imperfect tense has the nuance of progressive imperfect to parallel the characteristic perfect of the first colon. 22 tn: The participle with "suddenly" gives a more vivid picture, almost as if to say "there he goes." 23 tn: The present translation follows R. B. Y. Scott (Proverbs, Ecclesiastes [AB], 64). This third colon of the verse would usually be rendered, "fetters to the chastening of a fool" (KJV, ASV, and NASB are all similar). W. Wolff, Anthropology of the Old Testament). 25 tn: The expression that it is "for/about/over his life" means that it could cost him his life (e.g., Num 16:38). Alternatively, the line could refer to moral corruption and social disgrace rather than physical death – but this would not rule out physical death too. 26 tn: The literal translation "sons" works well here in view of the warning. Cf. KJV, NAB, NRSV "children." 27 tn: Heb "the words of my mouth." 28 tn: Heb "she has caused to fall." 29 tn: Heb "numerous" (so NAB, NASB, NRSV, NLT) or "countless." 30 tn: The noun "Sheol" in parallelism to "the chambers of death" probably means the grave. The noun is a genitive of location, indicating the goal of the road(s). Her house is not the grave; it is, however, the sure way to it. sn: Her house is the way to the grave. The young man's life is not destroyed in one instant; it is taken from him gradually as he enters into a course of life that will leave him as another victim of the wages of sin. The point of the warning is to prevent such a course from starting. Sin can certainly be forgiven, but the more involvement in this matter the greater the alienation from the healthy community. 31 tn: The Qal active participle modifies "ways" to Sheol. The "road," as it were, descends to the place of death. 32 tn: "Chambers" is a hypocatastasis, comparing the place of death or the grave with a bedroom in the house. It plays on the subtlety of the temptation. Cf. NLT "Her bedroom is the den of death." † sn: In this chapter wisdom is personified. In 1:20-33 wisdom proclaims her value, and in 3:19-26 wisdom is the agent of creation. Such a personification has affinities with the wisdom literature of the ancient Near East, and may have drawn on some of that literature, albeit with appropriate safeguards (Claudia V. Camp, Wisdom and the Feminine in the Book of Proverbs, 23-70). Wisdom in Proverbs 8, however, is not a deity like Egypt's Ma'at or the Assyrian-Babylonian Ishtar. It is simply presented as if it were a self-conscious divine being distinct but subordinate to God; but in reality it is the personification of the attribute of wisdom displayed by God (R. B. Y. Scott, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes [AB], 69-72; and R. Marcus, "On Biblical Hypostases of Wisdom," HUCA 23 [1950-1951]: 157-71). Many have equated wisdom in this chapter with Jesus Christ. This connection works only in so far as Jesus reveals the nature of the Father, just as Proverbs presents wisdom as an attribute of God. Jesus' claims included wisdom (Matt 12:42) and a unique knowledge of God (Matt 11:25-27). He even personified wisdom in a way that was similar to Proverbs (Matt 11:19). Paul saw the fulfillment of wisdom in Christ (Col 1:15-20; 2:3) and affirmed that Christ became our wisdom in the crucifixion (1 Cor 1:24, 30). So this personification in Proverbs provides a solid foundation for the similar revelation of wisdom in Christ. But because wisdom is a creation of God in Proverbs 8, it is unlikely that wisdom here is to be identified with Jesus Christ. The chapter unfolds in three cycles: After an introduction (1-3), wisdom makes an invitation (4, 5) and explains that she is noble, just, and true (6-9); she then makes another invitation (10) and explains that she is valuable (11-21); and finally, she tells how she preceded and delights in creation (22-31) before concluding with the third invitation (32-36). †† tn: Heb "head." 22 sn: Chapter 9 forms the conclusion of the lengthy introduction to the book. Both wisdom and folly will make their final appeals; and both appeal to the simpletons. Wisdom offers life with no mention of pleasure; folly offers pleasure with no mention of death. The first twelve verses concern accepting wisdom: the invitation of wisdom (1-6), the description of the responses (7-11), and the consequence (12). Verses 13-18 concern accepting folly: the invitation (13-17) and the consequence (18). 23 sn: Wisdom is personified as a wise woman. She has prepared a house and established it on seven pillars. This is a reference to the habitable world (e.g., 8:31). For the equation of the house and the world, e.g., 8:29; Job 38:6; and Psalm 104:5 (also G. Boström, Proverbiastudien [LUÅ], 1-14). The "seven pillars" have been variously interpreted, but since seven is a number for completeness and sacredness, the idea seems to be that wisdom produced a perfect world. 24 tn: Heb "she has killed her killing." Cf. KJV "hath killed her beasts"; NAB "has dressed her meat"; NASB "has prepared her food." 25 sn: Wisdom has prepared a sumptuous banquet in this house and sends out her maids to call the simple to come and eat (M. Lichtenstein, "The Banquet Motif in Keret and in Proverbs 9," JANESCU 1 [1968/69]: 19-31). The figures of meat and wine represent the good teaching of wisdom that will be palatable and profitable (implied comparisons). Compare Isaiah 55:1-2 and John 6:51, 55 for similar uses of the figures. The idea of mixing wine could refer to the practice of mixing wine with spices or with water (as the LXX text assumes; e.g., Prov 23:30; Isa 5:22). Mixed wine was the most intoxicating; thus, her wisdom is attractive. All the imagery lets the simple know that what wisdom has to offer is marvelous. 26 tn: The text uses two synonymous terms in construct to express the superlative degree. 27 tn: Heb "lacking of heart she says to him." 31 tn: The final verb actually stands in a relative clause although the relative pronoun is not present; it modifies "wine." sn: The expressions "eat" and "drink" carry the implied comparison forward; they mean that the simple are to appropriate the teachings of wisdom. 32 tn: There are two ways to take this word: either as "fools" or as "foolish ways." The spelling for "foolishness" in v. 13 differs from this spelling, and so some have taken that as an indicator that this should be "fools." But this could still be an abstract plural here as in 1:22. Either the message is to forsake fools (i.e., bad company; cf. KJV, TEV) or forsake foolishness (cf. NAB, NASB, NIV, NCV, NRSV, NLT). 33 tn: The two imperatives are joined with vav; this is a volitive sequence in which result or consequence is expressed.

down the antithetical condition – “if you mock,” or “if you are a mocker.” 20 tn: The use of the imperfect tense here could be the simple future tense (cf. NASB, NRSV “you...will bear it”), but the obligatory nuance is more appropriate – “you must bear it.” These words anticipate James’ warnings that the words we speak will haunt us through life (e.g., James 3:1-12). 21 tc: The LXX has an addition: “Forsake folly, that you may reign forever; and seek discretion and direct understanding in knowledge.” 22 tn: Heb “a woman of foolishness.” This could be translated as “foolish woman,” taking the genitive as attributive (cf. KJV, ASV, NRSV). But in view of the contrast with the personification of wisdom, this word probably also represents a personification and so can be taken as a genitive of apposition, the woman who is folly, or “the woman, Folly” (cf. NIV). For clarity and stylistic reasons the word “called” has been supplied in the translation. 23 tn: The meaning of the word comes close to “riotous.” W. McKane describes her as restless and rootless (Proverbs [OTL], 366). 24 tn: The noun means “foolishness” (cf. KJV “simple”; NAB “inane”). Here it could be classified as a metonymy of adjunct, or as a predictive apposition (when a substantive is used in place of a noun; see R. J. Williams, Hebrew Syntax, 15, §67). 25 tn: The ignorance here in Proverbs must be moral ignorance. But see D. W. Thomas for the idea that the verb means “become still,” “be at rest,” yielding here the idea of restless (“A Note on בָּלִיָּצָה 13 26 tc: The text of v. 13 has been difficult for translators. The MT has, “The foolish woman is boisterous, simplicity, and knows not what.” The LXX reads, “A foolish and impudent woman comes to lack a morsel, she who knows not shame.” The Syriac has, “a woman lacking in discretion, seductive.” Tg. Prov 9:13 translates it, “a foolish woman and a gadabout, ignorant, and she knows not good.” The Vulgate has, “a woman foolish and noisy, and full of wiles, and knowing nothing at all.” 27 tn: The infinitive construct “calling out” functions epexegetically in the sentence, explaining how the previous action was accomplished. 28 tn: The term “her” does not appear in the Hebrew text, but is supplied for the sake of clarity and smoothness. 29 tn: The noun is a genitive of location after the construct participle. Its parallel word is also an adverbial accusative of location. 30 tn: The participle modifies the participle in the first colon. To describe the passers-by in this context as those “who go straight” means that they are quiet and unwary. 31 tn: This expression is almost identical to v. 4, with the exception of the addition of conjunctions in the second colon: “and the lacking of understanding and she says to him.” The parallel is deliberate, of course, showing the competing appeals for those passing by. 32 sn: The offer is not wine and meat (which represented wisdom), but water that is stolen. The “water” will seem sweeter than wine because it is stolen – the idea of getting away with something exciting appeals to the baser instincts. In Proverbs the water imagery was introduced earlier in 5:15-19 as sexual activity with the adulteress, which would seem at the moment more enjoyable than learning wisdom. Likewise bread will be drawn into this analogy in 30:20. So the “calling out” is similar to that of wisdom, but what is being offered is very different. 33 tn: Heb “bread of secrecies.” It could mean “bread [eaten in] secret places,” a genitive of location; or it could mean “bread [gained through] secrets,” a genitive of source, the secrecies being

This approximates an "as-if" motif of wisdom literature: The ones ensnared in folly are as good as in Hell. See also Ptah-hotep's sayings (ANET 412-414). †† tc: The LXX adds to the end of v. 18: "But turn away, linger not in the place, neither set your eye on her: for thus will you go through alien water; but abstain from alien water, drink not from an alien fountain, that you may live long, that years of life may be added to you." sn: The text has "in the depths of Sheol" ( בְּעִמְקֵי שְׁאוֹל )

It is a long collection of approximately 400 proverbs. †† tn: Heb "son." ††† tn: The imperfect tense describes progressive or habitual action, translated here with an English present tense. These fit the nature of proverbs which are general maxims, and not necessarily absolutes or universal truths. One may normally expect to find what the proverb notes, and one should live according to its instructions in the light of those expectations; but one should not be surprised if from time to time there is an exception. The fact that there may be an exception does not diminish the need to live by the sayings. ††† tn: Heb "son." †††† tn: Heb "grief of his mother." Another option is "to his father." 23 sn: The word "blessings" has the sense of gifts, enrichments, that is, the rewards or the results of being righteous. Cf. NLT "a dwindling nation." 26 sn: The word means "ruin; destruction," but in this context it could be a metonymy of effect, the cause being an attack by more numerous people that will bring ruin to the ruler. The proverb is purely a practical and secular saying, unlike some of the faith teachings in salvation history passages. 27 tn: Heb "hasty of spirit" (so KJV, ASV); NRSV, NLT "a hasty temper." 34 sn: In the Piel this verb has the meaning of "to reproach; to taunt; to say sharp things against" someone (cf. NIV "shows contempt for"). By oppressing the poor one taunts or mistreats God because that person is in the image of God – hence the reference to the "Creator." To ridicule what God made is to ridicule God himself. 35 sn: The phrase "shows favor" is contrasted with the term "oppresses." To "show favor" means to be gracious to (or treat kindly) those who do not deserve it or cannot repay it. It is treatment that is gratis. This honors God because he commanded it to be done ( Prov 14:21; 17:5; 19:17).

23 tn: Heb “perversion in it.” The referent must be the tongue, so this has been supplied in the translation for clarity. A tongue that is twisted, perverse, or deceitful is a way of describing deceitful speech. Such words will crush the spirit (e.g., Isa 65:14). 24 tn: Heb “is prudent” (so KJV, NASB, NRSV); NCV, NLT “is wise.” Anyone who accepts correction or rebuke will become prudent in life. 25 tn: The term בֵּית

Greenstone notes that if God will accept the prayers of the upright, he will accept their sacrifices; for sacrifice is an outer ritual and easily performed even by the wicked, but prayer is a private and inward act and not usually fabricated by unbelievers ( Proverbs, 162). 34 tn: Heb "[is] his pleasure." The 3rd person masculine singular suffix functions as a subjective genitive: "he is pleased." God is pleased with the prayers of the upright. † tn: Heb "an abomination of the LORD יהוה! God loves those who pursue righteousness, the Piel verb signifying a persistent pursuit. W. G. Plaut says, "He who loves God will be moved to an active, persistent, and even dangerous search for justice" ( Proverbs, 170). ‡† tn: The two lines are parallel synonymously, so the "severe discipline" of the first colon is parallel to "will die" of the second. The expression כעורב נכח

TEV "happy people...enjoy life"). The figure is a hypocatstasis; among its several implications are joy, fulfillment, abundance, pleasure. 20 sn: One of the frequent characteristics of wisdom literature is the "better" saying; it is a comparison of different but similar things to determine which is to be preferred. These two verses focus on spiritual things being better than troubled material things. 21 sn: Turmoil refers to anxiety; the fear of the LORD

22 sn: Not all wealth has turmoil with it. But the proverb is focusing on the comparison of two things – fear of the LORD

23 tn: Heb "and love there." This clause is a circumstantial clause introduced with vav, that becomes "where there is love." The same construction is used in the second colon. 24 sn: Again the saying concerns troublesome wealth: Loving relationships with simple food are better than a feast where there is hatred. The ideal, of course, would be loving family and friends with a great meal in addition, but this proverb is only comparing two things. 25 tn: Heb "a man of wrath"; KJV, ASV "a wrathful man." The term "wrath" functions as an attributive genitive: "an angry person." He is contrasted with the "slow of anger," so he is a "quick-tempered person" (cf. NLT "a hot-head"). 26 tn: Heb "slow of anger." The LXX has "strewn with thorns." 30 tn: The comparative "like" does not appear in the Hebrew text, but is implied by the metaphor; it is supplied for the sake of clarity. 31 sn: The contrast to the "thorny way" is the highway, the Hebrew word signifying a well built-up road ( לָלַח ) say the right thing at the right time is useful; to say the right thing at the wrong time is counterproductive. §‡ tn: There is disagreement over the meaning of the term translated "upward." The verse is usually taken to mean that "upward" is a reference to physical life and well-being (cf. NCV), and "going down to Sheol" is a reference to physical death, that is, the grave, because the concept of immortality is said not to appear in the book of Proverbs. The proverb then would mean that the wise live long and healthy lives. But W. McKane argues (correctly) that "upwards" in contrast to Sheol, does not fit the ways of describing the worldly pattern of conduct and that it is only intelligible if taken as a reference to immortality ( Proverbs [OTL], 480). The translations "upwards" and "downwards" are not found in the LXX. This has led some commentators to speculate that these terms were not found in the original, but were added later, after the idea of immortality became prominent. However, this is mere speculation. §†† tn: Heb "to the wise [man]," because the form is

There may be an allusion to the Egyptian belief of weighing the heart after death to determine righteousness. But in Hebrew thought it is an ongoing evaluation as well, not merely an evaluation after death. 21 tn: Heb "spirits" (so KJV, ASV). This is a metonymy for the motives, the intentions of the heart (e.g., 21:2 and 24:2). sn: Humans deceive themselves rather easily and so appear righteous in their own eyes; but the proverb says that God evaluates motives and so he alone can determine if the person's ways are innocent. 22 tc: The MT reads גל

29 tn: Heb "every proud of heart"; NIV "all the proud of heart." "Heart" is the genitive of specification; the phrase is talking about people who have proud hearts, whose ideas are arrogant. These are people who set themselves presumptuously against God (e.g., 2 Chr 26:16; Ps 131:1; Prov 18:12). 30 tn: Heb "hand to hand." This idiom means "you can be assured" (e.g., Prov 11:21). 31 tc: The LXX has inserted two couplets here: "The beginning of a good way is to do justly, and it is more acceptable with God than to do sacrifices; he who seeks the LORD

§† tn: Heb "even his enemies he makes to be at peace with him." §†† sn: The lines contrast the modest income with the abundant income; but the real contrast is between righteousness and the lack of justice (or injustice). "Justice" is used for both legal justice and ethical conduct. It is contrasted with righteousness in 12:5 and 21:7; it describes ethical behavior in 21:3. Here the point is that unethical behavior tarnishes the great gain and will be judged by God. §‡ sn: This is another "better" saying; between these two things, the first is better. There are other options – such as righteousness with wealth – but the proverb is not concerned with that. A similar saying appears in Amenemope 8:19-20 (ANET 422). §†† tn: Heb "the heart of a man." This stresses that it is within the heart that plans are made. Only those plans that are approved by God will succeed. §† tn: Heb "his way" (so KJV, NASB). §‡ tn: The verb בָּוֶן

The term "mouth" is a metonymy of cause for what the king says: his pronouncements and legal decisions. 19 sn: The second line gives the effect of the first: If the king delivers such oracular sayings ( דִּקְוָה

20 tn: Heb "a scale and balances of justice." This is an attributive genitive, meaning "just scales and balances." The law required that scales and measures be accurate and fair ( Lev 19:36; Deut 25:13). Shrewd dishonest people kept light and heavy weights to make unfair transactions. 21 tn: Heb "stones." 22 sn: The "wickedness" mentioned here ( נָשָׂא

23 tn: The "throne" represents the administration, or the decisions made from the throne by the king, and so the word is a metonymy of adjunct (cf. NLT "his rule"). 24 tn: The MT has the plural, even though the verb "loves" is masculine singular. The ancient versions and two Hebrew MSS

25 tn: Heb "lips of righteousness"; cf. NAB, NIV "honest lips." The genitive "righteousness" functions as an attributive adjective. The term "lips" is a metonymy of cause for what is said: "righteous speech" or "righteous counsel." 26 tn: The MT has the singular participle followed by the plural adjective (which is here a substantive). The editors of BHS wish to follow the ancient versions in making the participle plural, "those who speak uprightly." 27 sn: The verse is talking about righteous kings, of course – they love righteousness and not flattery. In this proverb "righteous" and "upright" referring to what is said means "what is right and straight," i.e., the truth (cf. NCV). 28 sn: This proverb introduces the danger of becoming a victim of the king's wrath (cf. CEV "if the king becomes angry, someone may die"). A wise person knows how to pacify the unexpected and irrational behavior of a king. The proverb makes the statement, and then gives the response to the subject. 29 tn: The comparative "like" does not appear in the Hebrew text, but is implied by the metaphor; it is supplied for the sake of clarity. 30 tn: The expression uses an implied comparison, comparing "wrath" to a messenger because it will send a message. The qualification is "death," an objective genitive, meaning the messenger will bring death, or the message will be about death. E.g., 1 Kgs 2:25, 29-34 and 46. Some have suggested a comparison with the two messengers of Baal to the god Mot ("Death") in the Ugaritic tablets (H. L. Ginsberg, "Baal's Two Messengers," BASOR 95 [1944]: 25-30). If there is an allusion, it is a very slight one. The verse simply says that the king's wrath threatens death.

†† tn: Heb "the light of the face of the king." This expression is a way of describing the king's brightened face, his delight in what is taking place. This would mean life for those around him. sn: The proverb is the antithesis of 16:14.
 ‡ tn: Heb "cloud." †† tn: Heb "latter rain" (so KJV, ASV). The favor that this expression represents is now compared to the cloud of rain that comes with the "latter" rain or harvest rain. The point is that the rain cloud was necessary for the successful harvest; likewise the king's pleasure will ensure the success and the productivity of the people under him. E.g., also Psalm 72:15-17; the prosperity of the land is portrayed as a blessing on account of the ideal king.
 ‡‡ tn: The form קנה

קנה ה קנות

‡‡† tn: The form is a Niphal participle, masculine singular. If it is modifying "understanding" it should be a feminine form. If it is to be translated, it would have to be rendered "and to acquire understanding is to be chosen more than silver" (cf. KJV, ASV, NASB). Many commentaries consider it superfluous. NIV and NCV simply have "to choose understanding rather than silver!" ‡‡† sn: The point of righteous living is made with the image of a highway, a raised and well-graded road (a hypocaustasis, implying a comparison between a highway and the right way of living). § tn: The form סור

"Pride" is paired with "haughty spirit" ("spirit" being a genitive of specification); and "destruction" is matched with "a tottering, falling." §†† tn: Heb "[is] before destruction." §† sn: Many proverbs have been written in a similar way to warn against the inevitable disintegration and downfall of pride. W. McKane records an Arabic proverb: "The nose is in the heavens, the seat is in the mire" (Proverbs [OTL], 490). §† tn: Heb "low of spirit"; KJV "of an humble spirit." Whybray translates it with "loot" (Proverbs [CBC], 95). The proud are in rebellion against God, overbearing and oppressive. One should never share the "loot" with them. §†† tn: Heb "he who is prudent" or "he who deals wisely" (cf. KJV). The proverb seems to be referring to wise business concerns and the reward for the righteous. One who deals wisely in a matter will find good results. R. N. Whybray sees a contrast here: "The shrewd man of business will succeed well, but the happy man is he who trusts the LORD

§§§ tn: Or "he who gives heed to a word," that is, "who listens to instruction" (cf. NIV, NLT).
 18 tn: Heb "good" (so KJV, ASV). 19 tn: Although traditionally this word is translated "happy" (cf. KJV, ASV, NAB, NRSV, NLT), such a translation can be misleading because the word means far more than that. It describes the heavenly bliss that comes from knowing one is right with God and following God's precepts. The "blessed" could be at odds with the world (Ps 1:1-3). 20 tn: Heb "and the one who trusts in the LORD" 21 tn: Heb "wise of heart" (so NRSV). 22 tn: Heb "to the wise of heart it will be called discerning." This means that the wise of heart, those who make wise decisions ("heart" being the metonymy), will gain a reputation of being the discerning ones. 23 tn: Heb "sweetness of lips." The term "lips" is a metonymy of cause, meaning what is said. It is a genitive of specification. The idea of "sweetness" must be gracious and friendly words. The teaching will be well-received because it is both delightful and persuasive (cf. NIV "pleasant words promote instruction"). 24 tn: Heb "teaching" or "receptivity"; KJV "learning"; NIV "instruction." 25 tn: The Hebrew noun שָׂכַל

The proverb uses synthetic parallelism. The first line asserts that the wise heart ensures that what is said is wise, and the second line adds that such a person increases the reception of what is said. 32 tn: Heb "to his lips." The term "lips" functions as a metonymy of cause for what is said. 33 tn: The comparative "like" does not appear in the Hebrew text, but is implied by the metaphor; it is supplied in the translation for the sake of clarity. 34 sn: The metaphor of honey or the honeycomb is used elsewhere in scripture, notably Ps 19:10 [11]. Honey was used in Israel as a symbol of the delightful and healthy products of the land – “a land flowing with milk and honey” ( Deut 6:3). † sn: Two predicates are added to qualify the metaphor: The pleasant words are “sweet” and “healing.” “Soul” includes in it the appetites, physical and spiritual; and so sweet to the “soul” would summarize all the ways pleasant words give pleasure. “Bones” is a metonymy of subject, the boney framework representing the whole person, body and soul. Pleasant words, like honey, will enliven and encourage the whole person.

 One might recall, in line with the imagery here, how Jonathan's eyes brightened when he ate from the honeycomb ( 1 Sam 14:27). †† phrase includes deep depravity and wickedness (C. H. Toy, Proverbs scoundrel” finds out about evil and brings it to the surface ( Prov 26:27; Jer 18:20). What he digs up he spreads by speech. §‡ tn:

 Heb “on his lips” (so NAB) The term “lips” is a metonymy of cause. To say that “evil” is on his lips means that he talks about the evil he has dug up. §‡† sn: The simile stresses the devastating way that slander hurts people. W. McKane says that this one “digs for scandal and...propagates it with words which are ablaze with misanthropy” ( Proverbs [OTL], 494). §† tn: Heb “a man of perverse things”; NAB
 “an intriguer.” This refers to someone who destroys lives. The paral-lelism suggests that he is a “slanderer” or “gossip” – one who whispers and murmurs ( 18:8; 26:20, 22). §‡ tn: The term אָלוּץ perfect; the first is a habitual imperfect, and the second a gnomic perfect. The first verb, “to persuade, seduce, entice,” is the metonymy of cause; the second verb, “to lead,” is the metonymy of effect, the two together forming the whole process. §§§ tn: Heb “not good” (so KJV, NAB, NASB, NIV, NRSV); NLT “a harmful path.” The expression “a way that is not good” is an example of tapeinosis – a deliberate understatement for the sake of emphasis: It is terrible.

 This refers to crime and violence. The understatement is used to warn people away from villains and to remind them to follow a good path. 18 sn: The participle אָוַץ

21 tn: The verb is a Piel perfect; it means “complete, finish, bring to an end.” The two cola may form the whole process: The first line has “to devise” evil, and the second has “he completes” evil.
 BDB, however, classifies this use of the Piel as “to accomplish in thought” meaning “to determine” something (BDB 478 s.v. כָּלָה

22 tn: The comparative “like” does not appear in the Hebrew text, but is implied by the metaphor; it is supplied for the sake of clarity. 23 sn: The proverb presents the ideal, for it is not concerned with old people who may be evil. The KJV tried to qualify the interpretation by making the second half of the verse a conditional clause (“if it be found in the way of righteousness”). This is acceptable but unnecessary.
 The book of Proverbs is simply laying out the equity of longevity for righteousness and premature death for wicked people. In this line “gray hair” is a metonymy of adjunct/effect, representing old age; and the “glorious crown” (taking the genitive as attributive) provides a fitting metaphor to compare the hair on the head with a crown.
 24 tn: Heb “it is found” (so NASB) or “it will be found.” 25 sn: While the proverb presents a general observation, there is a commendable lesson about old people who can look back on a long walk with God through life and can anticipate unbroken fellowship with him in glory. 26 tn: One who is “slow to anger” is a patient person (cf. NAB, NIV, NLT). This is explained further in the parallel line by the description of “one who rules his spirit” ( וּמַשְׁלֵת בְּרוּחוֹ

27 tn: Heb “who rules his spirit” (so NASB). 28 tn: The phrase “is better than” does not appear in this line in the Hebrew text, but is implied by the parallelism. 29 sn: The saying would have had greater impact when military prowess was held in high regard. It is harder, and therefore better, to control one's passions than to do some great exploit on the battlefield. 30 tn:
 Heb “the lot is cast.” Because the ancient practice of “casting lots” is unfamiliar to many modern readers, the imagery has been updated to “throwing dice.” sn: The proverb concerns the practice of seeking divine leading through casting lots. For a similar lesson, see Amenemope (18, 19:16-17, in ANET 423).

It represents here a simple, humble meal. ‡† tn: Heb "and quietness in it"; the construction functions as a circumstantial clause: "in which there is quietness" or "with quietness." sn: The Hebrew word means "quietness" or "ease." It represents a place where there can be carefree ease because of the sense of peace and security. The Greek rendering suggests that those translators read it as "peace." Even if the fare is poor, this kind of setting is to be preferred. ‡‡ tn: The house is described as being full of "sacrifices of strife" (בְּתִירֵיב)

This proverb focuses on a servant who is wise, one who uses all his abilities effectively – a Joseph figure. ‡‡‡ sn: The parallelism indicates that "ruling over" and "sharing in the inheritance" means that the disgraceful son will be disinherited. § tn: Heb "son." §† tn: The form מְבִישׁ

The poverty is hereby explained as a disaster that came to some. The topic of the parable is the person who mocks others by making fun of their misfortune. <sup>21</sup> sn: The Hebrew word translated "insults" (חָרַף

As R. L. Alden comments, “Consider meeting a fool with a knife, or gun, or even behind the wheel of a car” ( Proverbs, 134). See also E. Loewenstamm, “Remarks on Proverbs 17:12 and 20:27,” VT 37 (1967): 221-24. For a slightly different nuance cf. proverb does not explain whether God will turn evil back on him directly or whether people will begin to treat him as he treated others. <sup>21</sup> tn: Heb “the beginning of a quarrel”; TEV, CEV “The start of an argument.” <sup>22</sup> tn: The verse simply begins with “letting out water.” This phrase is a metaphor, but most English versions have made it a simile (supplying “like” or “as”). R. N. Whybray takes it literally and makes it the subject of the clause: “stealing water starts a quarrel” ( Proverbs [CBC], 100). However, the verb more likely means “to let out, set free” and not “to steal,” for which there are clearer words. sn: The image involves a small leak in a container or cistern that starts to spurt out water. The problem will get worse if it is not stopped. Strife is like that. tc: The LXX has “The outpouring of words is the beginning of strife.” This would make it a warning against thoughtless talk. <sup>23</sup> tn: The temporal clause is formed with the prepositional “before,” the infinitive construct, and the following subjective genitive. The verse is a rhetorical question stating that money would be wasted on a fool. <sup>28</sup> tn: Heb “there is no heart”; NASB “he has no (+ common TEV) sense”; NLT “has no heart for wisdom.” <sup>29</sup> sn: W. McKane envisions a situation where the fool comes to a sage with a fee in hand, supposing that he can acquire a career as a sage, and this gives rise to the biting comment here: Why does the fool have money in his hands? To buy wisdom when he has no brains? ( Proverbs [OTL], 505). <sup>30</sup> sn: The verse uses synonymous parallelism, so “friend” and “relative” are equated. Others, however, will take the verse with antithetical parallelism: W. G. Plaut argues that friendship is a spiritual relation-

This is not referring to sibling rivalry but to the loyalty a brother shows during times of calamity. This is not to say that a brother only shows loyalty when there is trouble, nor that he always does in these times (e.g., 18:19, 24; 19:7; 27:10). The true friend is the same as a brotherly relation – in times of greatest need the loyal love is displayed. ‡ tn: Heb "heart"; KJV, ASV "a man void of understanding"; NIV "a man lacking in judgment." †† tn: The phrase "in pledge" is supplied for the sake of clarification. ‡‡ tn: The line uses the participle עָרַב

‡‡† sn: It is foolish to pledge security for someone's loans (e.g., Prov 6:1-5). ‡‡‡ tn: Heb "the one who loves transgression the one who loves a quarrel." There is some ambiguity in the first line. The meaning would not differ greatly if either were taken as the subject; but the parallelism suggests that the proverb is about a quarrelsome and arrogant person who loves sin and invites destruction. § tn: Some have taken this second line literally and interpreted it to mean he has built a pretentious house. Probably it is meant to be figurative: The gate is the mouth (the figure would be hypocatastasis) and so to make it high is to say lofty things – he brags too much (e.g., 1 Sam 2:3; Prov 18:12; 29:23); cf. NCV, TEV, NLT. C. H. Toy ( Proverbs [ICC], 348) wishes to emend פְּתָחוּ

†† tn: The verse parallels two descriptions of the wicked person: "crooked/perverse of heart" (genitive of specification), and "turned away in his tongue" (deceitful). The first phrase describes twisted intentions. The second, using the Niphal participle ("one turned away") with "tongue," the metonymy of cause, describes one who has turned away from speaking truth. Cf. NLT "the twisted tongue tumbles into trouble." §†† tn: The phrase "does not find good" is a figure (tapeinosis) meaning, "will experience calamity." The wicked person can expect trouble ahead. §‡ tn: Heb "tongue"; NIV "whose tongue is deceitful." §§† sn: Here the Hebrew terms נָכַל

NCV "It is sad to have a foolish child"). §‡ tn: The phrase "does so" is supplied for the sake of clarification. §§† sn: Parents of fools, who had hoped for children who would be a credit to the family, find only bitter disappointment (cf. "Crushed" is figurative (an implied comparison) for the idea that one's psyche or will to go on is beaten down by circumstances. 19 sn: The "bones" figuratively represent the whole body encased in a boney framework (metonymy of subject). "Fat bones" in scripture means a healthy body ( 3:8; 15:30; 16:24), but "dried up" bones signify unhealthiness and lifelessness (cf. The language is hyperbolic. Cf. NCV "the mind of a fool wanders everywhere." 25 sn: The Hebrew noun means "vexation, anger, grief." 26 tn: Heb "to the one who bore him." Because the participle is feminine singular in Hebrew, this has been translated as "the mother who bore him." sn: The proverb is similar to v. 21, 10:1, and 15:20. 27 tn: Heb "not good." This is an example of tapeinosis – an understatement that implies the worst-case scenario: "it is terrible." 28 tn: The verb עָנַשׁ

The expression may be rendered "contrary to what is right." sn: The two lines could be synonymous parallelism; but the second part is being used to show how wrong the first act would be – punishing the righteous makes about as much sense as beating an official of the court for doing what is just. 31 tn: Heb "the one knowing knowledge." The cognate accusative underscores the meaning of the participle – this is a truly knowledgeable person. 32 sn: The participle מְשַׁבֵּחַ

† tn: The Niphal participle is used in the declarative/estimative sense with stative verbs: "to be discerning" (Qal) becomes "to be declared discerning" (Niphal). The proverb is teaching that silence is one evidence of wisdom, and that even a fool can thereby appear wise. D. Kidner says that a fool who takes this advice is no longer a complete fool ( Proverbs [TOTC], 127). He does not, of course, become wise – he just hides his folly. †† tn: The Niphal participle functions substantively and has a reflexive nuance: "one who has separated himself" (cf. KJV, ASV, NASB). He is not merely anti-social; he is a problem for society since he will defy sound judgment. The Mishnah uses the verse to teach the necessity of being part of a community because people have social responsibilities and need each other ( m. Avot 2:4). ‡ tc: The MT has "seeks [his own] desire[s]." The translation in the LXX represents a Hebrew Vorlage of לְתַאֲנֵן

This kind of person is in love with his own ideas and enjoys spewing them out (W. McKane, Proverbs [OTL], 515). It is the kind of person who would ask a question, not to learn, but to show everyone how clever he is (cf. TEV). § tc: The MT has "a wicked [person]." Many commentators emend the text to קָשָׁה

21 sn: The "lips" is a metonymy of cause, meaning what the fool says. The "mouth" in the second colon is likewise a metonymy for speech, what comes out of the mouth. 22 sn: "Strife" is a metonymy of cause, it is the cause of the beating or flogging that follows; "flogging" in the second colon is a metonymy of effect, the flogging is the effect of the strife. The two together give the whole picture. 23 tn: Heb "calls for." This is personification: What the fool says "calls for" a beating or flogging. The fool deserves punishment, but does not actually request it. 24 tn: Heb "blows." This would probably be physical beatings, either administered by the father or by society (e.g., also 19:25; Ps 141:5; cf. NAB, NIV, TEV, NLT). Today, however, "a beating" could be associated with violent criminal assault, whereas the context suggests punishment. Therefore "a flogging" is used in the translation, since that term is normally associated with disciplinary action. 25 tn: Heb "his soul" (so KJV, NASB, NIV). sn: What a fool says can ruin him. Calamity and misfortune can come to a person who makes known his lack of wisdom by what he says. It may be that his words incite anger, or merely reveal stupidity; in either case, he is in trouble. 26 tn: Or "slanderer"; KJV, NAB "talebearer"; ASV, NRSV "whisperer." 27 tn: The word כַּמְתֵּלֵמִים

The term "heart" is a synecdoche of part (= heart) for the whole (= person); cf. TEV, NLT "intelligent people." By paralleling "heart" and "ear" the proverb stresses the full acquisition of knowledge. The "ear" listens to instruction, and the heart considers what is heard to acquire knowledge. §§§ tn: Heb "the ear of the wise." The term "ear" is a synecdoche of part (= ear) for the whole (= person): "wise person." sn: The wise continually seek more knowledge. D. Kidner says, "Those who know most know best how little they know" (Proverbs [TOTC], 129). 18 sn: This line features a mixed metaphor: The "ear" is pictured "seeking." The "ear of the wise" actually means the wise person's capacity to hear, and so the wise are seeking as they hear. 19 sn: The Hebrew term translated "gift" is a more general term than "bribe" ( שֹׁדָךְ

Because modern readers are not familiar with the ancient practice of casting lots, the image of the coin toss to decide an issue has been employed in the translation (cf. CEV "drawing straws"). Although the casting of lots is often compared to throwing dice, the translation "throwing dice ends disputes" in this context could be misunderstood to mean "participating in a game of dice ends disputes." 27 tn: The verb יִשְׁבֵּת

28 tn: Heb "makes a separation" or "decides." In the book of Proverbs this verb often has a negative connotation, such as separating close friends (e.g., 16:9). But here it has a positive nuance: Opponents are "separated" by settling the issue. 29 tn: The word is the adjective, "mighty" (so KJV, NAB, NASB) used here substantively as the object of the preposition. 30 tn: Heb "brother," but this is not limited to actual siblings (cf. NRSV "an ally"; CEV, NLT "friend"). 31 tn: The Niphal participle from פָּשַׁע

26 sn: The
“heart raging” is a metonymy of cause (or adjunct); it represents the emotions that will lead to blaming God for the frustration. Genesis 42:28 offers a calmer illustration of this as the brothers ask what God was doing to them. † tn: The Niphal imperfect probably should be taken in the passive sense (the poor person is deserted by his “friend,” cf. NAB, NIV) rather than as a direct middle (the poor person deserted his friend). †† sn: This proverb simply makes an observation on life: People pursue wealthy folk hoping that they can gain something from the rich, but the poor are deserted even by friends, who fear that the poor will try to gain something from them. ‡ tn: Heb “a witness of lies.” This expression is an attributive genitive: “a lying witness” (cf. CEV “dishonest witnesses”). This is paralleled by “the one who pours out lies.” ‡† tn: Heb “breathes out”; NAB “utters”; NIV “pours out.” ‡‡ tn: Heb “will not escape” (so NAB, NASB); NIV “will not go free.” Here “punishment” is implied, and has been supplied in the translation for clarity. sn: This proverb is a general statement, because on occasion there are false witnesses who go unpunished in this life (e.g., Prov 6:19; 14:5, 25; 19:9). The Talmud affirms, “False witnesses are contemptible even to those who hire them” ( b. Sanhedrin 29b). ‡‡† tn: The verb יזלזל!

The term “face” is a synecdoche of part (= face) for the whole (= per-reminds people of the value of gifts in life, especially in business or in politics. §† tn: Heb “a man of gifts.” This could be (1) attributive genitive: a man characterized by giving gifts or (2) objective genitive: a man who gives gifts (IBHS 146 §9.5.2b). §†† tn: Heb line of the verse is problematic. The preceding two lines are loosely synonymous in their parallelism, but the third adds something like:

“he pursues [them with] words, but they [do] not [respond].” Some simply say it is a corrupt remnant of a separate proverb and beyond restoration. The basic idea does make sense, though. The idea of his family and friends rejecting the poor person reveals how superficial they are, and how they make themselves scarce. Since they are far off, he has to look for them “with words” (adverbial accusative), that the process, showing evidence for that text. §‡ tn: Heb “heart.”

Most English versions translate as “wisdom,” but cf. NAB “intelli-is paying attention to his needs or taking care of his life (cf. NAB “is his own best friend”). This expression works with its parallel to provide the whole idea: “loving the soul” is the metonymy of the cause for prospering, and “prospering” is the metonymy of the effect (of loving). §§‡ tn: Heb “finds good” (similar KJV, NASB); NCV “will of the king with his “favor” by using two similes. The first simile presents the king at his most dangerous – his anger (e.g., 20:2; Amos 3:4). The second simile presents his favor as beneficial for life (e.g., 16:14-15; 28:15). <sup>27</sup> tn: Heb “is a roaring like a lion.” <sup>28</sup> sn:

The term "like" does not appear in the Hebrew but is supplied in the translation for the sake of clarity. The metaphor pictures water dropping (perhaps rain through the roof, cf. It is not based on the MT and attempts to reconstruct a text using this have been unsuccessful. ‡† tn: Heb "inheritance of fathers" (so KJV, ASV, NASB). ‡‡ sn: This statement describes a wife who has a skillful use of knowledge and discretion that proves to be successful. 21 sn: The Hebrew word means "indemnity, fine"; this suggests that the trouble could be legal, and the angry person has to pay for it. 22 tn: The second colon of the verse is very difficult, and there have been many proposals as to its meaning: (1) "If you save [your enemy], you will add [good to yourself]"; (2) "If you save [your son by chastening], you may continue [chastisement and so educate him]"; (3) "If you deliver [him by paying the fine for him once], you will have to do it again"; (4) "If you save [him this time], you will have to increase [the punishment later on]." ‡ tn: The verse is usually taken as antithetical parallelism: There may be gold and rubies but the true gem is knowledge. However, C. H. Toy arranges it differently: “store of gold and wealth of corals and precious vessels – all are wise lips” ( Proverbs [ICC], 388). But this uses the gems as metaphors for wise speech, and does not stress the contrast between wealth and wisdom. ‡† tn: Heb “lips of knowledge.” The term “lips” is a metonymy for speaking, and “knowledge” could be either an attributive genitive or objective genitive: “knowledgeable lips.” Lips that impart knowledge are the true jewel to be sought. ‡†† tn: The comparative “like” does not appear in the Hebrew text, but is implied by the metaphor; it is supplied in the translation for the sake of clarity. ‡† tn: Heb “his garment.” ‡†† sn: Taking a garment was the way of holding someone responsible to pay debts. In fact, the garment was the article normally taken for security ( Exod 22:24-26; Deut 24:10-13). Food taken by fraud seems sweet at first, but afterward it is not. To end up with a mouth full of gravel (a mass of small particles; e.g., Job 20:14-15; Lam 3:16) implies by comparison that what has been taken by fraud will be worthless and useless and certainly in the way (like food turning into sand and dirt). 19 tn: The noun form is plural, but the verb is singular, suggesting either an abstract plural or a collective plural is being used here. 20 tn: The clause begins with vav ( ו )

The word "hasty" has the idea of being pressed or pressured into quick actions. So the text contrasts calculated expeditiousness with unproductive haste. C. H.  tn: If this translation stands, then the construction is formed with an independent nominative absolute, resumed by the suffixed noun as the formal subject. It draws attention to the “pure” or “innocent” person in contrast to the previously mentioned wicked. †† tn: English versions which translate the Hebrew term as “roof” here sometimes produce amusing images for modern readers: TEV “Better to live on the roof”; CEV “It’s better to stay outside on the roof of your house.” sn: The reference is probably to a small room that would be built on the flat housetop primarily for guests (e.g., 1 Kgs 17:19; 2 Kgs 4:10). It would be cramped and lonely – but peaceful in avoiding strife. ‡ tn: The “house of company” has received numerous interpretations. The word “company” or “companionship” would qualify “house” as a place to be shared. The BHS editors propose “spacious house,” which would call for a transposition of letters (cf. NAB “a roomy house”; NLT “a lovely home”). Such an emendation makes good sense, but has no external support. ‡† tn: Heb “a wife of contentions”; KJV “a brawling woman”; TEV, CEV “a nagging wife.” The Greek version has no reference to a quarrelsome wife, but instead mentions justice in a common house. ‡‡ tn: Heb “soul.” The Hebrew text uses ‡‡נַפְשׁוֹ

The other – and more plausible – interpretation is that the judge considers the household of the wicked and then on the basis of what was observed judges them. §† tn: Heb “to evil” (i.e., catastrophe); cf. NLT “to disaster.” §‡ sn: The imagery means “pay no attention to” the cry for help or “refuse to help,” so it is a metonymy of cause for the effect. §§† sn: “Cry” here would be a metonymy of effect for the cause, the cause being the great needs of the poor. §§‡ sn: The proverb is teaching that those who show mercy will receive mercy. It involves the principle of talionic justice – those who refuse the needs of others will themselves be refused when they need help (so Luke 16:19-31). §§§ sn: The synonymous parallelism joins the more neutral term “gift” with the more specific “bribe.” D. Whenever justice prevails, whether in the courts or simply in society, the people who practice iniquity may be shaken into reality by fear (cf. The foundational clause states that ritual acts of worship brought by the wicked (thus a subjective genitive) are detestable to God. The "wicked" refers here to people who are not members of the covenant (no faith) and are not following after righteousness (no acceptable works). The NIV follows the suggestion of a homonym for the Hebrew word with the meaning "will perish/be destroyed": "will be destroyed forever." This suggests a synonymous pair of ideas rather than a contrast. Others accept antithetical parallelism. C. H. Toy suggested an idea like "be established" to contrast with "will perish" ( Proverbs [ICC], 411). W. McKane suggested it meant the truthful witness "will speak to the end" without being put down ( Proverbs [OTL], 556). It is simpler to interpret the words that are here in the sense of a contrast. This is a somewhat difficult expression. Some English versions render the phrase "favor is better than silver or gold" (so NASB, NRSV) making it parallel to the first colon. But if "good" is retained as an attributive modifier, then it would mean one was well thought of, or one had engaging qualities (cf. ASV "loving favor; NLT "high esteem"). This fits with the idea of the reputation in the first colon, for a good name would bring with it the favor of others. §§§ tn: The form of the verb is the Niphal perfect of יָדָן

The shrewd person knows where the dangers and pitfalls are in life and so can avoid them; the naive person is unwary, untrained, and gullible, unable to survive the dangers of the world and blundering into them. 20 tn: Heb "evil," a term that is broad enough to include (1) "sin" as well as (2) any form of "danger" (NIV, NCV, NRSV, NLT) or "trouble" (TEV, CEV). The second option is more likely what is meant here: The naive simpleton does not see the danger to be avoided and so suffers for it. 21 tn: Heb "go on"; the word "right" is supplied in the translation to clarify the meaning: The naive person, oblivious to impending danger, meets it head on (cf. One can anticipate positive results from careful child-training – but there may be an occasional exception. ‡‡ sn: The proverb is making an observation on life. The synonymous parallelism matches “rule over” with “servant” to show how poverty makes people dependent on, or obligated to, others. ‡†† tn: Or “slave” (so NAB, NASB, NRSV, TEV, CEV). This may refer to the practice in Israel of people selling themselves into slavery to pay off debts ( Exod 21:2-7). ‡‡‡ sn: The verse is making an implied comparison (a figure of speech known as hypocatastasis) between sowing and sinning. One who sins is like one who sows, for there will be a “harvest” or a return on the sin – trouble. ‡ tc: There is a variant reading in the LXX; instead of “the rod of his wrath” it reads “the punishment of his deeds.” C. H. Toy wishes to emend שָׂבֵר שָׂבֵר

‡† tn: Heb “good of eye.” This expression is an attributed genitive meaning “bountiful of eye” (cf. KJV, ASV “He that hath a bountiful eye”). This is the opposite of the “evil eye” which is covetous and wicked. The “eye” is a metonymy representing looking well to people’s needs. So this refers to the generous person (cf. NASB, NIV, NRSV, NLT). ‡†† tn: The form בָּרַךְ בָּרַךְ

The expression refers to someone who has honest and clear intentions. ‡†† tn: Heb “grace of his lips” (so KJV, ASV). The “lips” are a metonymy of cause representing what is said; it also functions as a genitive of specification. sn: This individual is gracious or kind in what he says; thus the verse is commending honest intentions and gracious words. ‡‡† tn: The syntax of the line is somewhat difficult, because “grace of his lips” seems to be intruding on the point of the verse with little explanation. Therefore the LXX rendered it “The Lord loves the pure in heart; all who are blameless in their ways are acceptable to him.” This has very little correspondence with the Hebrew; nevertheless commentators attempt to reconand<sup>20</sup> they are ready on your lips. <sup>21</sup> 19 So that<sup>22</sup> your confidence may be in the LORD,

I am making them known to you today<sup>23</sup> – even you.
20 Have I not written thirty sayings<sup>24</sup> for you, sayings<sup>25</sup> of counsel and knowledge, 21 to show you true and reliable words, <sup>26</sup> so that you may give accurate answers<sup>27</sup> to those
22 Do not exploit<sup>28</sup> a poor person because he is poor

§† tn: Heb "oppressing the poor, it is gain; giving to the rich, it is loss." The Hebrew is cryptic, but two sins are mentioned here that will be punished by poverty: extortion and bribery. Perhaps the proverb is simply saying it is easy to oppress the poor for gain, but it is a waste of money to try to buy or bribe a patron (D. Kidner, Proverbs [TOTC], 149). §§† sn: A new collection of sayings begins here, forming the fourth section of the book of Proverbs. This collection is not like that of 1:1-9:18; here the introductory material is more personal than 1:1-7, and the style differs, showing great similarity to the Instruction of Amenemope in Egypt (especially the thirty precepts of the sages in 22:17-24:22). Verses 17-21 form the introduction, and then the sayings begin in v. 22. After the thirty sayings are given, there are further sayings in 24:23-34. There is much literature on this material: see W. K. Simpson, ed., Literature of Ancient Egypt; ANET 412-425; and A. Cody, "Notes on Proverbs 22:21 and 22:23b," Bib 61 (1980): 418-26. §§†† sn: To "incline the ear" means to "listen carefully" (cf. NCV); the expression is metonymical in that the ear is the instrument for hearing. It is like telling someone to lean over to hear better. §§§ tn: Heb "knowledge" (so KJV, NASB); in this context it refers to the knowledge that is spoken by the wise, hence "instruction." 18 tn: Or "when" (so NIV). 19 tn: Heb "keep them," referring to the words of the wise expressed in these sayings. The referent has been specified in the translation for clarity. 20 tn: The term "and" does not appear in the Hebrew but is supplied in the translation. 21 sn: If the teachings are preserved in the heart/mind of the disciple, then that individual will always be ready to speak what was retained. 22 tn: The form לְהַיֹּדֵעַ

23 tn: Heb "I cause you to know." The term "today" indicates that the verb should have the instantaneous nuance, and so an English present tense is used in the translation ("am making...known"). 24 tn: Older English versions and a few more recent ones render this phrase as either "excellent things" following the Qere (so KJV, ASV, NASB, NKJV), "officers," or "heretofore" [day before yesterday], following the Kethib. However (as in most recent English versions) the Qere should be rendered "thirty," referring to the number in the collection (cf. NAB, NIV, NRSV, NLT). 25 tn: The term "sayings" does not appear in the Hebrew text but is supplied in the translation for the sake of clarity. 26 tn: Heb "to cause you to know the truth of words of truth" (NASB similar). 27 tn: Heb "to return true words"; NAB "a dependable report"; NIV "sound answers." 28 tn: Two negated jussives form the instruction here: אַל תִּגְדֹּל אֶת הָעָנִי אֶת יָדָיו

 is not a rare occurrence with them. ‡‡ tn: The verb יָרַב

‡‡† sn: The warning in this proverb is to avoid associating with a hothead because his influence could be fatal (a similar idea is found in the Instruction of Amenemope, chap.
 9, 11:13-14 [ANET 423]). ‡‡‡ tn: The "bed" may be a metonymy of adjunct, meaning the garment that covers the bed (e.g., Exod 22:26). At any rate, it represents the individual's last possession (like the English expression "the shirt off his back"). § tn: Heb "If you rhetorical question is used to affirm the statement. The rhetorical what they have, they could lose everything (e.g., 6:1-5; 11:15; 17:18;

 stone was (and still is) a major problem. The boundaries that were established by the forefathers were to be preserved, but no law would stop such violations if people lacked integrity (e.g., Deut 19:14; 27:17; 1 Kgs 21:16-19). Boundaries in Israel were sacred because God owned the land and he apportioned the property to the tribes. To extend one's property illegally by moving a neighbor's boundary marker was a violation of covenant and oath. Of course, disputes could arise when both sides claim their ancestors established a boundary. §‡ tn: Heb "your fathers" (so NAB, NASB). sn:
 The fourth saying deals with respect for property that belongs to other people (cf. Instruction of Amenemope, chap. 6, 7:12-13 [ANET 422]). §‡† sn: The word translated "skilled" is general enough to

§‡ sn: The fifth saying affirms that true skill earns recognition and advancement (cf. Instruction of Amenemope, chap.
 30, 27:16-17 [ANET 424]). §§† tn: The construction uses the imperfect tense of instruction with the infinitive absolute to emphasize the careful discernment required on such occasions. Cf. NIV "note well"; NLT "pay attention." §§‡ tn: Or "who," referring to the ruler (so ASV, NAB, TEV). §§§ sn: The expression "put a knife to your throat" is an idiom that means "curb your appetite" or "control yourself" (cf. TEV). The instruction was from a time when people dealt with all-powerful tyrants. To enter the presence of such a person and indulge one's appetites would be to take a very high risk. 18 is not what it appears to be; the king is not doing you a favor, but rather wants something from you or is observing you (K&D 17:104);

 cf. TEV "he may be trying to trick you." 21 sn: Verses 1-3 form the sixth saying about being cautious before rulers (cf. Instruction of Amenemope, chap. 23, 23:13-18). One should not get too familiar with rulers, for they always have ulterior motives. The Mishnah cites Gamaliel as warning that a ruler only draws someone into his court for his purpose, but in their day of trouble he will not be there to help them (m. Abot 2:3). 22 tn: Heb "from your understanding cease." In the context this means that the person should have enough understanding to stop wearing himself out trying to be rich (cf. NRSV "be wise enough to desist"). 23 tc: The Kethib is הִתְיַבּ

24 sn: This seventh saying warns people not to expend all their energy trying to get rich because riches are fleeting (cf. Instruction of Amenemope, chap. 7, 9:10-11 which says,
 "they have made themselves wings like geese and have flown away to heaven"). In the ancient world the symbol of birds flying away signified fleeting wealth. 25 tn: Heb "an evil eye." This is the opposite of the "good eye" which meant the generous man. The "evil eye" refers to a person who is out to get everything for himself (cf. NASB, NCV, CEV "selfish"). He is ill-mannered and inhospitable (e.g., Prov 28:22). He is up to no good – even though he may appear to be a host. 26 tc: The line is difficult; it appears to mean that the miser is the kind of person who has calculated the cost of everything in his mind as he offers the food. The LXX has: "Eating and drinking with

However, a fool rejects instruction and discipline. †† sn: Saying number nine indicates that wisdom is wasted on a fool. The quatrain is arranged in a chiasmic structure (AB:B’A’): The first line (A) speaks of wisdom in the child, and it is paired with the last line (A’) which speaks of the child’s saying what is right. Likewise, “rags” is a metonymy of adjunct, associated with the poverty brought on by a dissolute lifestyle. 24 sn: This is the fourteenth saying, warning about poor associations. Drunkenness and gluttony represent the epitome of the lack of discipline. In the Mishnah they are used to measure a stubborn and rebellious son ( m. Sanhedrin 8). W. G. Plaut notes that exces-

The term נִגִּיל

§ tn: The comparative “like” does not appear in the Hebrew text, but is implied by the metaphor; it is supplied in the translation for the sake of clarity. §† sn: In either case, whether a prostitute or an adulteress wife is involved, the danger is the same. The metaphors of a “deep pit” and a “narrow well” describe this sin as one that is a trap from which there is no escape. The “pit” is a gateway to Sheol, and those who enter are as good as dead, whether socially or through punishment physically. §†† tn: The noun נִגִּיל

§‡ tn: The participle means “unfaithful [men]” (masculine plural); it could also be interpreted as “unfaithfulness” in the abstract sense. M. Dahood interprets it to mean “garments” (which would have to be repointed), saying that she collects garments in pledge for her service (M. Dahood, “To Pawn One’s Cloak,” Bib 42 [1961]: 359-66). But that is far-fetched; it might have happened on occasion, but as a common custom it is unlikely. Be-

The style changes here as the sage breaks into a vivid use of the imagination. It begins with a riddle describing the effects of drunkenness (v. 29) and gives the answer in v. 30; instructions follow in v. 31, with the consequences described in v. 32; the direct address continues in vv. 33 and 34; and the whole subject is concluded with the drunkard’s own words in v. 35 (M. E. Andrews, “Variety of Expression in Proverbs 23:29-35,” VT 28 [1978]: 102-3). §‡ sn: The Hebrew word translated “dullness” describes darkness or dullness of the eyes due to intoxication, perhaps “redness” (so KJV, NASB, NRSV); NIV, NCV, NLT “bloodshot eyes.” NAB understands the situation differently: “black eyes.” §§† sn: The answer to the question posed in v. 29 is obviously one who drinks too much, which this verse uses metonymies to point out. Lingering over wine is an adjunct of drinking more wine; and seeking mixed wine obviously means with the effect or the purpose of drinking it. §§‡ tn: Heb “its eye gives.” With CEV’s “bubbling up in the glass” one might think champagne was in view. §§§ tn: The expression is difficult, and is suspected of having been added from Song 7:10, although the parallel is not exact. warns against evil associations. Evil people are obsessed with destruction and trouble. See on this theme 1:10-19; 3:31 and 23:17. D.

to envying them (Proverbs [TOTC], 153). †† tn: The preposition ך †† sn: The twentieth saying, vv. 3-4, concerns the use of wisdom for domestic enterprises. In Prov 9:1 wisdom was personified as a woman who builds a house; but here the emphasis is primarily on the building – it is a sign of security and prosperity (C. H. Toy, Proverbs [ICC], 442).
One could still make a secondary application from this line for a household or "family" (cf. NCV, which sees this as a reference to the family). ††† sn: The twenty-first saying seems to be concerned with the need for wisdom in warfare. In line with that, the word fool keeps quiet. The term "court" has been used in the translation for clarity. Some English versions do not emphasize the forensic connotation here: NCV "in a discussion"; NLT "When the leaders gather." §† sn: The verse portrays a fool out of his element: In a serious moment in the gathering of the community, he does not even open his mouth (a metonymy of cause, meaning "speak"). Wis-

"possessor of schemes"; NAB "an intriguer." The picture of the wicked person is graphic: He devises plans to do evil and is known as a schemer. Elsewhere the "schemes" are outrageous and lewd (e.g., Lev 18:7; Judg 20:6). Here the description portrays him as a cold, calculating, active person: "the fool is capable of intense mental activity but it adds up to sin" (W. McKane, Proverbs [OTL], 399).

In this passage, in collocation with the previous term "curse," the latter is intended (cf. NAB, NIV, NLT). 19 tn: The verb means "to be pleasant; to be delightful." The imperfect tense promises that there "will be delight" to those who rebuke the wicked. 20 tn: The verb כָּלַף

Some English versions suggest the latter meaning by using the word "home" for "house" (e.g., TEV, CEV). ‡ <sup>sn:</sup> The legal setting of these sayings continues with this warning against being a false accuser. §‡ <sup>sn:</sup> The proverb provides a contrast between God and the king, and therein is the clue to the range of application involved. The interest of the king is ruling or administering his government; and so the subject matter is a contrast to the way God rules his kingdom. §§† <sup>sn:</sup> The two infinitives form the heart of the contrast - "to conceal a matter" and "to search out a matter." God's government of the universe is beyond human understanding - humans cannot begin to fathom the intentions and operations of it. But it is the glory of kings to search out matters and make them intelligible to the people. Human government cannot claim divine secrecy; kings have to study and investigate everything before making a decision, even divine government as far as possible. But kings who rule as God's representatives must also try to represent his will in human affairs - they must even inquire after God to find his will. This is their glorious nature and responsibility. For more general information on vv. 2-27, see G. E. Bryce, "Another Wisdom 'Book' in Proverbs," JBL 91 (1972): 145-57. §§‡ <sup>tn:</sup> Heb "heavens for height and earth for depth." The proverb is clearly intending the first line to be an illustration of the second - it is almost emblematic parallelism. §§§ <sup>sn:</sup> The proverb is affirming a simple fact: The king's plans and decisions are beyond the comprehension of the common people. While the king would make many things clear to the people, there are other things that are "above their heads" or "too deep for them." They are unsearchable because of his superior wisdom, his caprice, or his need for secrecy. Inscrutability is sometimes necessary to keep a firm grip on power. <sup>18</sup> <sup>tn:</sup> The Hebrew <sup>קליל</sup> point (so it is emblematic parallelism). The passage uses imperatives to teach that the wicked must be purged from the kingdom. † sn: "Throne" is a metonymy of subject (or adjunct); it is the symbol of the government over which the king presides (cf. NCV, TEV). †† sn: When the king purges the wicked from his court he will be left with righteous counselors and his government therefore will be "established in righteousness" – it will endure through righteousness (cf. NLT "made secure by justice"). But as J. H. Greenstone says, "The king may have perfect ideals and his conduct may be irreplicable, but he may be misled by unscrupulous courtiers" (Proverbs, 264). ‡ tn: The phrase "for him" is supplied in the translation for clarity. †† sn: This proverb, covering the two verses, is teaching that it is wiser to be promoted than to risk demotion by self-promotion. The point is clear: Trying to promote oneself could bring on public humiliation; but it would be an honor to have everyone in court hear the promotion by the king. ††† tn: The two infinitives construct form the contrast in this "better" sayings; each serves as the subject of its respective clause. ††† tc: Most modern commentators either omit this last line or attach it to the next verse. But it is in the text of the MT as well as the LXX, Syriac, Vulgate, and most modern English versions (although some of them do connect it to the following verse, e.g., NAB, NIV, NRSV, NLT). †††† tn: Heb "do not go out hastily to strive"; the verb "to strive" means dispute in the legal context. The last clause of v. 7, "what your eyes have seen," does fit very well with the initial clause of v. 8. It would then say: What you see, do not take hastily to court, but if the case was not valid, he would end up in disgrace. sn: The Hebrew verb רָיב

artistry. The "apples of gold" (possibly citrons, quinces, oranges, or apricots) may refer to carvings of fruit in gold on columns. †† tn: Heb "on its wheels." This expression means "aptly, fittingly." The point is obviously about the immense value and memorable beauty of words used skillfully (R. N. Whybray, Proverbs [CBC], 148). Noting the meaning of the term and the dual form of the word, W. McKane suggests that the expression is metaphorical for the balancing halves of a Hebrew parallel wisdom saying: "The stichos is a wheel, and the sentence consisting of two wheels is a 'well-turned' expression" (Proverbs [OTL], 584). The line then would be describing a balanced, well-turned saying, a proverb; it is skillfully constructed, beautifully written, and of lasting value. †† sn: This saying is another example of emblematic parallelism; the first half is the simile, and the second half makes the point from it: A wise rebuke that is properly received is of lasting value. The rebuke in the ear of an obedient student is like ornaments of fine jewelry. †††† tn: The "ear of the listener" refers to the obedient disciple, the one who complies with the reproof he hears. Cf. KJV, ASV, NAB "an obedient ear." †††† sn: The emblem in the parallelism of this verse is the simile of the first line. Because snow at the time of harvest would be rare, and probably unwelcome, various commentators have sought to explain this expression. R. N. Whybray suggests it may refer to snow brought down from the mountains and kept cool in an ice hole (Proverbs [CBC], 148); this seems rather forced. J. H. Greenstone following Rashi, a Jewish scholar who lived A.D.

§§§ tn: Heb "he restores the life [or, soul] of his masters." The idea suggests that someone who sends the messenger either entrusts his life to him or relies on the messenger to resolve some concern. A faithful messenger restores his master's spirit and so is "refreshing." †† sn: The emblem now is one of clouds and winds that would be expected to produce rain; they gain attention and raise people's expectations but prove to be disappointing when no rain is forthcoming, and hence could be thought of as deceitful. ††† tn: The form מְתַקֵּן

20 tn: Heb "a gift of falsehood." This would mean that the individual brags about giving a gift, when there is no gift. ††† tn: Heb "long of anger" or "forbearance" (so NASB).

22 tn: The two imperfect verbs in this line may be nuanced as potential imperfects because what is described could happen, but does not do so as a rule. ††† tn: The "tongue" is a metonymy of cause; and so the expression here refers to soft or gentle speech. This fits well with the parallel idea of patience ("long of anger") – through a calm patient persuasion much can be accomplished. Some English versions relate this figure directly to the persuasion of a ruler in the previous line (cf. TEV "can even convince rulers").

firm part of the body in contrast to the "softness of the tongue." Both are figurative, forming a comparison. A gentle speech can break down any stiff opposition. † tn: The verse simply begins "you have found honey." Some turn this into an interrogative clause for the condition laid down (cf. KJV, ASV, NASB, NLT); most make the form in some way subordinate to the following instruction: "when you find...eat." †† tn: The verb means "to be satisfied; to be satiated; to be filled." Here it means more than satisfied, since it describes one who overindulges and becomes sick. The English verb "stuffed" conveys this idea well. ‡ sn: The proverb warns that anything overindulged in can become sickening. The verse uses formal parallelism to express first the condition and then its consequences. It teaches that moderation is wise in the pleasures of life. ‡† tn: Heb "make your foot rare." The verb is הָקַר

This verb means "to be satiated; to be satisfied; to be filled." It is often used with reference to food, but here it refers to frequent visits that wear out one's welcome (cf. NLT). ‡‡† sn: The first line identifies the emblem of the proverb: False witnesses are here compared to deadly weapons because they can cause the death of innocent people (e.g., Exod 20:16; Deut 5:20; and Prov 14:5). ‡‡† tn: The verb

§† tn: Heb "in the day of trouble"; KJV, NASB "in time of trouble." §†† tc: The consonants of the Hebrew text of this verse are similar to the consonants in v. 19. The LXX has a much longer reading: "Like vinegar is bad for a wound, so a pain that afflicts the body afflicts the heart. Like a moth in a garment, and a worm in wood, so the pain of a man wounds the heart" (NRSV follows much of the LXX reading; NAB follows only the second sentence of the LXX reading). The idea that v. 20 is a dittogram is not very convincing; and the Greek version is too far removed to be of help in the matter. §† tn: The second simile mentions pouring vinegar on soda. The LXX has "scab," but that does not fit as a sensitive thing. The reference is to sodium carbonate (natural in Egypt) which can be neutralized with vinegar. §‡ sn: It is inappropriate and counterproductive to sing songs to a heavy heart. One needs to be sensitive to others (e.g., 1 Sam 19:9). §§† sn: The imagery of the "burning coals" represents pangs of conscience, more readily effected by kindness than by violence. These coals produce the sharp pain of contrition through regret (e.g., 18:19; 20:22; 24:17; Gen 42-45; 1 Sam 24:18-20; Rom 12:20). The coals then would be an implied comparison with a searing conscience. §§‡ sn: The second consequence of treating enemies with kindness is that the LORD

One difficulty here is that it is the west wind that brings rain to Israel (e.g., 1 Kgs 18:41-44). C. H. Toy suggests that the expression is general, referring to a northwest wind – unless it is an error (Proverbs [ICC], 468). J. P. M. van der Ploeg suggests that the saying originated outside the land, perhaps in Egypt ("Prov 25:23," VT 3 [1953]: 189-92). But this would imply it was current in a place where it made no sense. R. N. Whybray suggests that the solution lies with the verb "brings forth" (תְּחַוֵּל)

18 tn: Heb "a tongue of secret" or "a hidden tongue," referring to someone who goes around whispering about people behind their backs (cf. KJV, NAB, NASB, NRSV "a backbiting tongue"). 19 tn: The phrase "brings forth" does not appear in Hebrew in this line but is implied by the parallelism with the previous line; it is supplied here in the translation for clarity. 20 sn: The verse implies a comparison between the two parts to make the point that certain things automatically bring certain results. Gossiping words will infuriate people as easily as the northerly winds bring the cold rain. 21 tn: This proverb is identical with 21:9; see the notes there. 22 tn: Heb "a weary [or, faint] soul" (so NASB, NIV); KJV, ASV, NRSV "a thirsty soul," but "soul" here refers to the whole person. 23 sn: The difficulty of getting news of any kind from a distant land made its reception all the more delightful when it was good (e.g., Gen 45:27; Prov 15:30). 24 tn: The Niphal participle is from כָּפַס

† sn: This is a figure of speech known as tapeinosis – a deliberate understatement to emphasize a worst-case scenario: “it is bad!” †† tn: Heb “and the investigation of their glory is not glory.” This line is difficult to understand but it forms an analogy to honey – glory, like honey, is good, but not to excess. The LXX rendered this, “it is proper to honor notable sayings.” A. A. MacIntosh suggests, “He who searches for glory will be distressed” (“A Note on Prov 25:27,” VT 20 [1970]: 112-14). G. E. Bryce has “to search out difficult things is glorious” (“Another Wisdom ‘Book’ in Proverbs,” JBL 91 (1972): 145-47). R. C. Van Leeuwen suggests, “to seek difficult things is as glory” (“Proverbs 25:27 Once Again,” VT 36 [1986]: 105-14). The Hebrew is cryptic, but not unintelligible: “seeking their glory [is not] glory.” It is saying that seeking one’s own glory is dishonorable. ‡ tn: Heb “whose spirit lacks restraint” (ASV similar). A person whose spirit ( רוח )

an animal – there is no reasoning. The fool is as difficult to manage as the donkey or horse. §† sn: One should not answer a fool’s foolish questions in line with the fool’s mode of reasoning (J. H. Greenstone, Proverbs, 274). §†† sn: The person who descends to the level of a fool to argue with him only looks like a fool as well. §‡ sn: The apparent contradiction with the last verse has troubled commentators for some time. The Rabbis solved it by saying that v. 4 referred to secular things, but v. 5 referred to sacred or religious controversies. While this does not resolve the issue, it does give a sound application for the two verses together – in negligible issues one should just ignore the stupid person, but in issues that matter the fool must be dealt with, lest credence be given to what he says (W. G. Plaut, Proverbs, 266). The text presents two proverbs each of which presents an aspect of the whole truth. One should not lower himself to the level of the fool, but there are times when the lesser of two evils is to do so, other than let the fool gain confidence that he is a wise person or be considered wise by others. Paul, for example, talked like a “fool” to correct the foolish ideas of the Corinthians (2 Cor 11:16-17; 12:11). §‡† tn: Heb “in his own eyes” (so NAB, NASB, NIV). §† sn: Sending a messenger on a mission is like having another pair of feet. But if the messenger is a fool, this proverb says, not only does the sender not have an extra pair of feet – he cuts off the pair he has. It would not be simply that the message did not get through; it would get through incorrectly and be a setback! The other simile uses “violence,” a term for violent social wrongs and injustice. The metaphorical idea of “drinking” violence means suffering violence – it is one’s portion. So sending a fool on a mission will have injurious consequences. §‡ tn: The participle could be taken as the subject of the sentence: “the one who sends...cuts off...and drinks.” §§† sn: The consequence is given in the first line and the cause in the second. It would be better not to send a message at all than to use a fool as messenger. §§‡ tn: Heb “like the legs which hang down from the lame” (so NASB). The is לְיָדָיו

‡† sn: “Honor” in this passage probably means respect, external recognition of worth, accolades, advancement to high position, etc. All of these would be out of place with a fool; so the sage is warning against elevating or acclaiming those who are worthless. See also J. A. Emerton, “Notes on Some Passages in the Book of Proverbs,” VT 15 (1965): 271-79. ‡‡ sn: The first twelve verses of this chapter, Prov 26:1-12, are sometimes called “the Book of Fools” because they deal with the actions of fools. ‡‡† tn: Heb “causeless curse” (KJV similar) describes an undeserved curse (cf. NIV, NRSV). The Hebrew word translated “causeless” is the adverb from קָנָה

לְיָדָיו
הָלָה
§§§ tn: The proverb does not begin with a וְ

‡‡‡ tc: The MT has the negative with the verb “to enter; to come” to mean “will not come” ( לֹא יָבֹא )

18 sn: As C. H. Toy puts it, the fool is a “proverb-monger” ( Proverbs [ICC], 474); he handles an aphorism about as well as a lame man can walk. The fool does not understand, has not implemented, and cannot explain the proverb. It is useless to him even though he repeats it. 19 tn: The translation “like tying a stone in a sling” seems to make the most sense, even though the word for “sling” occurs only here. sn: The point is that only someone who does not know how a sling works would do such a stupid thing (R. N. Whybray, Proverbs [CBC], 152). So to honor a fool would be absurd; it would be counterproductive, for he would still be a fool. 20 sn: The picture is one of seizing a thornbush and having the thorn pierce the hand ( וְעָלָה בְּיָדוֹ )

so is a proverb in the mouth of a fool. †

 sn: A fool can read or speak a proverb but will be intellectually and spiritually unable to handle it; he will misapply it or misuse it in some way. In doing so he will reveal more of his folly. It is painful to hear fools try to use proverbs. †† tn: Heb "who wounds everyone" (so NASB). A similar rendering is given by ASV, NAB, NIV, NRSV, and NLT; it is the only one that makes sense out of a verse that most commentators consider hopelessly corrupt. That is not to say it is the correct rendering, only that it makes sense as a required negative statement in a proverb. The first line has קחולל-יכל

 כב

‡ tn: The participle שָׁכַר

 sn: The simile is graphic and debasing (cf. 2 Peter 2:22). †† sn: The point is clear: Fools repeat their disgusting mistakes, or to put it another way, whenever we repeat our disgusting mistakes we are fools. The proverb is affirming that no matter how many times a fool is warned, he never learns. ††† tn: The verse simply uses a perfect tense. The meaning of the verse would be the same if this were interpreted as an affirmation rather than as an interrogative. The first line calls such a person to one's attention. ††† tn: Heb "in his own eyes" (so NAB, NASB, NIV). sn: The subject matter of the verse is the person who is wise in his own opinion. Self-conceit is actually part of the folly that the book of Proverbs criticizes; those who think they are wise even though they are not are impossible to help. For someone to think he is wise when he is not makes him a conceited ignoramus (W. G. Plaut, Proverbs, 268). § sn: Previous passages in the book of Proverbs all but deny the possibility of hope for the fool. So this proverb is saying there is absolutely no hope for the self-conceited person, and there might be a slight hope for the fool – he may yet figure out that he really is a fool. §† sn: The Book of Fools covered vv. 1-12. This marks the beginning of what may be called the Book of Sluggards (vv. 13-16). §†† tn: Heb "in the broad plazas"; NAB, NASB "in the square." This proverb makes the same point as 22:13, namely, that the sluggard uses absurd excuses to get out of work. D. Kidner notes that in this situation the sluggard has probably convinced himself that he is a realist and not a lazy person (Proverbs [TOTC], 163). §† tn: The comparative "like" is not in the Hebrew text, but is supplied from context in the translation. §†† sn: The sluggard is too lazy to get out of bed – although he would probably rationalize this by saying that he is not at his best in the morning. The humor of the verse is based on an analogy with a door – it moves back and forth on its hinges but goes nowhere. Like the door to the wall, the sluggard is "hinged" to his bed (e.g., Prov 6:9-10; 24:33). §† tn: The term "turns" is not in the Hebrew text, but is supplied in the translation from the parallelism.

15 The sluggard plunges§† his hand in the dish;
 he is too lazy to bring it back to his mouth. §††
 16 The sluggard is wiser in his own estimation§§†

 18 Like a madman<sup>20</sup> who shoots firebrands and deadly arrows, 21 and says, "Was I not only joking?" 23 20 Where there is no wood, a fire goes out, and where there is no gossip, 24 contention ceases. 25 21 Like charcoal is to burning coals, and wood to fire, so is a contentious person<sup>26</sup> to kindle strife. 27

 22 The words of a gossip are like delicious morsels;

§† tn: Heb "buries" (so many English versions); KJV "hideth"; NAB "loses." §§† sn: The proverb is stating that the sluggard is too lazy to eat; this is essentially the same point made in 19:24 (see the note there). §§† tn: Heb "in his eyes." The lazy person thinks that he has life all figured out and has chosen the wise course of action – but he is simply lazy. J. H. Greenstone says, for example, "Much anti-intellectualism may be traced to such rationalization for laziness" (Proverbs, 269). §§§ tn: The term means "taste; judgment." The related verb means "to taste; to perceive," that is, "to examine by tasting," or examine by experiencing (e.g., Ps 34:9). Here the idea is expressed with the participle in construct, "those returners [of] good sense," those who answer tastefully, with discretion. Cf. NIV "who (+ can NRSV) answer discreetly." 18 tn: Heb "grabs the ears of a dog. The word "wild" has been supplied in the translation to make clear that these were not domesticated pets. CEV, to accomplish the same point, has "a mad dog," but there is no indication of that in context. sn: Someone who did this ran a serious risk of injury or harm. Dogs were not domestic pets in the ancient Near East; they were scavengers that ran in packs like jackals. 19 tn: The word מַתְעֵבֵר

This expression can be understood as a nominal hendiadys: "deadly arrows" (so NAB, NIV). 22 tn: Heb "man." 23 sn: The subject of this proverb is not simply a deceiver, but one who does so out of jest, or at least who claims he was joking afterward. The participle מְשַׁחֵק

24 sn: Gossip (that is, the one who goes around whispering and slandering) fuels contention just as wood fuels a fire. The point of the proverb is to prevent contention – if one takes away the cause, contention will cease (e.g., 18:8). 25 tn: Heb "becomes silent." 26 sn: Heb "a man of contentions"; NCV, NRSV, NLT "a quarrelsome person." The expression focuses on the person who is contentious by nature. His quarreling is like piling fuel on a fire that would otherwise go out. This kind of person not only starts strife, but keeps it going. 27 tn: The Pilpel infinitive construct לְתַהַרְתֵּר חָרַר

† tn: The proverb is essentially the same as 18:8; it observes how appealing gossip is. †† tn: The traditional translation of "silver dross" (so KJV, ASV, NASB) never did make much sense because the parallel idea deals with hypocrisy – "fervent lips with an evil heart." But silver dross would not be used over earthenware – instead it is discarded. Yet the MT clearly has "silver dross" (כֶּסֶף סִיגִים)

‡ tn: The word translated "fervent" actually means "burning, glowing"; the LXX has "flattering lips" (as if from חָרַר חָרַר †† sn: The analogy fits the second line very well. Glaze makes a vessel look beautiful and certainly different from the clay that it actually is. The proverb makes an observation: One who in reality despises other people will often disguise that with what he says. § tn: The particle ׀

§† tn: The meaning of the rare Piel form of חָרַר חָרַר

§†† sn: It may be that the placing of this proverb in this setting is designed to point out that the person speaking graciously is this wicked person who conceals an evil heart. Otherwise it may have in mind a person who has already proven untrustworthy but protests in order to conceal his plans. But even if that were not the connection, the proverb would still warn the disciple not to believe someone just because it sounded wonderful. It will take great discernment to know if there is sincerity behind the person's words. §‡ sn: The number "seven" is used in scripture as the complete number. In this passage it is not intended to be literally seven; rather, the expression means that there is complete or total abomination in his heart. Cf. TEV "his heart is filled to the brim with hate." §†† sn: "Abomination" means something that is loathed. This is a description applied by the writer, for the hypocritical person would not refer to his plans this way. §† tn: The referent is apparently the individual of vv. 24-25. §‡† tn: The form חָרַר חָרַר

§§† sn: The Hebrew verb means

 the one who rolls a stone – it will come back on him.

"to uncover," here in the sense of "to reveal; to make known; to expose." The verse is promising that the evil the person has done will be exposed publicly. The common belief that righteousness will ultimately triumph informs this saying. §§‡ sn: The verse is teaching talionic justice ("an eye for an eye," etc.), and so the activities described should be interpreted as evil in their intent. "Digging a pit" would mean laying a trap for someone (the figure of speech would be a metonymy of cause for the effect of ruining someone, if an actual pit is being dug; the figure would be hypocatastasis if digging a pit is being compared to laying a trap, but no pit is being dug). Likewise, "rolling a stone" on someone means to destroy that individual. §§§ tn: Heb "the tongue of deception." The subject matter of this proverb is deceptive speech. The "tongue of deception" (using a metonymy of cause with an attributive genitive) means that what is said is false. Likewise the "smooth mouth" means that what is said is smooth, flattering. 18 sn: The verse makes it clear that only pain and ruin can come from deception. The statement that the lying tongue "hates those crushed by it" suggests that the sentiments of hatred help the deceiver justify what he says about people. The ruin that he brings is probably on other people, but it could also be taken to include his own ruin. 19 tn: The form חָרַר חָרַר

20 sn: The word "tomorrow" is a metonymy of subject, meaning what will be done tomorrow, or in the future in general. 21 sn: The expression "you do not know" balances the presumption of the first line, reminding the disciple of his ignorance and therefore his need for humility (e.g., Matt 6:34; Luke 12:20; Jas 4:13-16). 22 tn: Heb "a stranger." This does not necessarily refer to a non-Israelite, as has been demonstrated before in the book of Proverbs, but these are people outside the familiar and accepted circles. The point is that such a person would be objective in speaking about your abilities and accomplishments. 23 sn: "Mouth" and "lips" are metonymies of cause; they mean "what is said." People should try to avoid praising themselves. Self praise can easily become a form of pride, even if it begins with trivial things. It does not establish a reputation; reputation comes from what others think about you. 24 tn: "a foreigner"; KJV, ASV, NASB, NRSV "a stranger." 25 tn: The subject matter is the vexation produced by a fool. The term כָּעַס כָּעַס

26 sn: The contrast is made between dealing with the vexation of a fool and physical labor (moving stones and sand). More tiring is the vexation of a fool, for the mental and emotional effort it takes to deal with it is more draining than physical labor. It is, in the sense of this passage, almost unbearable. 27 tn: Heb "fierceness of wrath and outpouring [= flood] of anger." A number of English versions use "flood" here (e.g., NASB, NCV, NLT).

The rhetorical question is intended to affirm that no one can survive a jealous rage. It could be portraying the unhappy plight of the wanderer without condemning him over the reason for the flight. ‡† sn: The first line of the proverb provides the emblem to the parallel point.
